He was at last constrained to accept and the village was spared. These Turks had it in their power to save the village if they had been so inclined. After the waves had swept by and the danger from outside was past, the Turks of the village compelled this man and others to make complete their conversion by circumcision. Yesterday we received word that this man had died, probably of a broken heart. He was buried by a Turkish imaum. The rest of the villagers are required to conform to the Moslem mode of worship. And so it is without the whole region. It is a cruel, relentless, Mohammedan crusade, such as one could never have dreamed possible in this age of the world. I have even heard of Moslems catching the blood of Christians in their hands and drinking it as a draught refreshing to their souls. Thus it will be seen that Christianity is under a dense, dark cloud. The foundations are for the present broken up, and we hardly know where we stand, but of this we are sure, that God's purposes are immovable. He has a church in Turkey and in his own time and way he will bring it out into the light.

The government makes a desperate effort to lay the blame of all this on the Armenians in its official reports. I presume that the same charge has been made by the central government for this region, although the Christian population were like frightened sheep and in the hope of relieving suspicion and averting disaster they voluntarily surrendered their arms to the government before the raid. In all the massacres, the plundering and burning of houses and the firing of soldiers in this vicinity, I have not heard that a single Kurd or Turk was even wounded, or that a Christian offered any resistance. This attitude of the Christians doubtless saved a great many lives. Nevertheless, the mayor of this city had the effrontery to tell me the other day that the riot in this city was caused by an Armenian firing a gun, and the chief of police at the same time said that the massacre in Malatia began by an Armenian barber cutting the throat of a Kurd whom he was shaving. An Armenian did cut a Kurd's throat, but not until he saw his brother and others cut down at the door of his shop and realized that the Turks and Kurds had begun a massacre in the streets. In Malatia and Arabkir the Armenians, when driven to their houses and churches, saw that no quarter would be given so they defended themselves as best they could, but this, doubtless, greatly increased the mortality on their own side as it still more exasperated the Turks.

For months past we have received fewer and fewer American papers and magazines and those which did come had torn out of them all reference to Turkish politics. The Congregationalist has been a rare visitor of late and now our papers have stopped altogether, except now and then one that never refers to political matters. We are, however, extremely glad that our letters reach us for the most part. We are beginning to receive expressions of sympathy from friends in the dear home-land—a land never so precious as now—written after the first dispatches in regard to our disaster. During the crisis here I do not think that a tear was shed by even the feeblest of our number, but these letters so full of loving sympathy and containing the assurance that many prayers are offered for us and for this stricken people have moved our hearts to their very depths and, I am not ashamed to say, have drawn out our tears. Our own sufferings have been very slight. It is true, we fled from one place to another until we finally took refuge in the Male College, and we have met with the loss of almost all our worldly possessions, but the consciousness of God's presence and the manifest tokens of his guiding and protecting care made us so truly happy that we have regretted the anxiety and pain of our friends in our behalf.

Much disappointment has been felt here that all our buildings were not burned, as it was the manifest determination of even some high in authority to do, in the hope that they would be rid of us altogether. Since the riot a petition has been circulated by Turks, who constrained many Armenians to sign it through fear, asking for our expulsion as disturbers of the peace and as promoters of the revolutionary sentiment among the Armenians, but here we are, and, God helping us, here we shall remain to lay anew the foundations of this work, confident that it is divinely ordained, and that out of these ruins shall arise a temple to the divine honor. We do not need to ask Christian people to pray for Turkey and for the coming of Christ's kingdom here, a kingdom of joy and peace, for they do that already. All the indications are that the struggle against Christianity is not yet past and that it is to be a severe one.

SOME OF THE PECULIAR PEOPLE OF JERUSALEM.

BY REV. E. S. WALLACE, UNITED STATES CONSUL.

There are few intelligent Christians who do not reverence the city in which the Founder of their faith did so many mighty works, crowning all by his humiliating but triumphant death. No better proof of this can be presented than the fact that each year the number of visitors to the Holy City is increasing. It is certainly no absorbing desire to see modern Jerusalem that brings them, for there is little to satisfy curiosity or to please the eye. The mere sight-seer will depart disappointed, for the things to see are rather insignificant and to insignificance is added uncertainty. Few of the places connected with the ministry of our Lord and his disciples are certainly known. That which attracts in Jerusalem is the religious power that has gone out from it. It is the source of the greatest moral and religious forces that have influenced the world.

It is a small city now. Fifty thousand is a number that will include all its inhabitants, of whom two-thirds are Jews, one-seventh Moslems and the rest Christians. Among the Christian population are representatives of every civilized nation and many who have not yet been advanced to a condition that enables them to be so characterized. If a list were made it would be found to include people from all the countries mentioned in the second chapter of the Acts and a great many from lands then unheard of. Jerusalem truly is cosmopolitan, for it contains "all sorts and conditions of men."

A student of mankind could here find an abundance of subjects. To treat them partially would require a volume. To attempt a treatment of the various Christian orders in the city one would have to be well up on theology and church history, for every sect of the Eastern and Western churches is here, representing a variety of polity and creed that must be perplexing to the Jew and Moslem.

There are Christians here whom church history knows nothing about, at least never considers. They are men and women whom the regular Christians term peculiar, owing allegiance to no church and usually at enmity to all. I will not call them "cranks," though most persons would. They cannot be classified, for each is sui generis. It would be easier to classify them by nationalities. In such a division our own America would take the lead, with England a good second and Germany not far behind.

In all this variety there is one respect in which there is pretty general agreement. It is this which has brought the people to the Holy City, namely, a firm belief in the immediate coming of the Lord to reign in his millennial glory. I have conversed with nearly all of them upon this their favorite theme, and have wondered not so much at the belief as at the various ways in which it has been attained. The arithmetic of Daniel has proved it to one, the mysteries of the Apocalypse to another. Several have been convinced by Professor Totten's theorizing. At least three, otherwise normal, Americans are sure of it because the world has now reached the lowest depths of iniquity, and humanity, in its subjection to Satan and love of sin, is worse than were the dwellers of Sodom and Gomorrah, therefore Christ's coming must be near at hand. This method is the very opposite of those who reach the same conclusion by saying that the world is now ready to receive the Lord because his chosen ones are prepared for him and the conditions that were to precede his coming have been met.

All these agree, also, that the coming will take place before the opening of the twentieth century and is liable to take place any day. Anxiously expectant eyes are daily turned toward the Mount of Olives in the fond hope that they will behold "that radiant form divine." Some even go farther. One good old lady, recently gone to her rest, went every afternoon to the top of the mount carrying with her a little tea service. On each occasion she made tea for a guest who never came. Questioned as to her reason for doing this she would reply devoutly: "The Lord is near at hand. When he comes he will first appear on Olivet. I want to be there and be the first to offer him a cup of tea." This sounds sacrilegious, but, as she intended it, was not. It was simply the form her devotion took.

Every once in a while some deluded mortal arrives in the city claiming to be the Messiah. These are individuals of unbalanced minds whose insanity shows itself in this form. They are only to be pitied, for the absolute indifference with which their claims are received alike by Jew, Moslem and Christian, combined with their own poverty in temporal resources, would dampen any enthusiasm. Unknown and unattended they come and so they leave, often assisted in their departure by the hand of charity.

A community of peculiar make-up and habits is that living near the Damascus Gate, which is known as the "Overcomers." Lately they have been getting some notoriety in Chicago courts. The original members came from Chicago fifteen years ago, under the leadership of Mr. Spofford, an attorney of some note in that city. One of their beliefs was that none of their number should die before the Lord's coming. This had to be given up, for death soon claimed some of them, and now there are thirteen buried in the little American and English cemeteries on Mount Zion. Nobody seems to know what their real religious beliefs are, for the members never reveal them. They do not believe in missions and so never make any missionary efforts among Jews or Moslems. They are simply waiting, "overcoming" the weaknesses of the flesh and the wiles of the evil one. One of the community informed me that they could do nothing until Christ had perfected them. Then they would go forth to teach the world that higher life which God was teaching them. Mrs. Spofford is now the acknowledged leader and claims prophetic powers.

Of the character of the community as a whole various opinions are held. Some consider the members very good, others as very bad. Certainly their influence over non-Christians is anything but good, as they are hopelessly in debt and do nothing to cancel it. The men, of whom there are six, strong and able-bodied, do no kind of work and have no savings of any past labors. Their creditors have been put off for several years with the promise that "the Lord will soon come and make it all right with them." These "Overcomers" are the worst "cranks" in the city, because they do nothing themselves and discredit the honest efforts of other Christians. Reports are current that Mrs. Spofford, who is now in America, is soon to return with a number of additions to the community.

Of the individuals who have been "sent" to the Holy City under special divine orders there are many, too many to briefly enumerate. A few must be mentioned, however, as specimens of their kind. A year or so ago a reformed Mormon arrived and called at the consulate to announce his coming and mission. His first request was to be given the names of the leading newspapers of the city that he might publish his new "gospel." This was an easy matter as there was no such thing as a newspaper. A small obstacle such as this was of no consequence. His mission was proclaimed in other ways, but his "gospel" was not appreciated by either Jew, Moslem or Christian. After three years without a convert he still remains, no less firm in his belief in his "mission" and consoling himself that the world is not yet ripe for his "gospel."

Another of this class had been "sent" to build the New Jerusalem. The time was at hand and the Spirit had chosen him for the architect. For days he could have been seen inspecting all the ground in and around Jerusalem as it now is, so that he might intelligently make the city what it was to be. The fact that he was devoid of any means mattered not to him. When he had done his part the Lord was to provide all the other means. He finally grew discouraged at the Lord's delay and quietly departed.

An individual, whom many of The Congregationalist party will recognize from the description, came last spring commissioned for thirty days to proclaim the gospel to the Jews. His original plan was to erect a large tent to which the Jews could come and hear his message. He called at the consulate to learn if the plan was practicable. He was informed that there would be no difficulty in securing a tent and a place to pitch it, but that he would find difficulty in getting his audience. As his commission was good for only thirty days, no time could be lost, so the tent idea was abandoned. Instead, an address in Hebrew was issued to the rabbis and another to the common people. The rest of his time was spent in house to house visitation. True to his "call" he left in thirty days. So far as can be seen nothing was accomplished toward the conversion of the Jews.

One thing may be said of all these people with special missions—they are intelligent and rational on all subjects except their favorite one. As soon as this is reached their "crank" is exhibited. It is unfortunate for Jerusalem that they all feel called to begin their work here, unfortunate for real missionary work among the large Jewish and Moslem population. There is a charm about the name Jerusalem which has and always will attract. The number of the attracted is each year increasing. May the increase of healthy-minded Christians continue and the representatives of the class, a few of whom have been here described, correspondingly diminish.

A MONTH WITH THE PATRIARCHS.

BY MRS. C. L. GOODELL.

Those who have followed prayerfully the Bible readings on the life of Christ during the month of January cannot have failed to catch new glimpses of the divine loveliness, as well as fresh inspiration for Christian living and serving. As the light of his radiant face has been shining upon us, we have felt the warmth of its glow, and our hearts have burned within us while he talked with us by the way. If it is so with us, we may be sure his heart also has been gladdened by our nearer approach and tarrying, and we can fancy we almost hear him saying to us, "Ye are they which have continued with me."

As we enter now upon a month with the patriarchs it is a joy to feel that we do not part company with our dear Lord. We simply take for our companions on the road a few of the earlier saints, who once lived on earth, but are now in the great cloud of witnesses surrounding us and beholding our progress heavenward. Christ will still be by our side interpreting to us valuable lessons from their lives. The same principles that governed them he is laying down as the true foundation for our own—faith and obedience and loyalty to the will of God. We shall see, however, that the peculiar characteristic of the patriarchal age was the direct and intimate communion of God with his people.

The first in our study is Noah. Let us not be afraid of him, nor stand in such awe that we fail to profit from his companionship. The marked thing about Noah was that he was obedient. He found grace or favor with the Lord because he did "according to all that God commanded him." It was for this the word of approval came, "Thee have I seen righteous before me." Imagine his surprise and joy when his ear caught these words addressed to him from God's own lips! They seem the very counterpart of the "Well done, good and faithful servant" of Christ's time.

God then proceeded to unfold to Noah his great purposes and the part he was to have in them. In all that followed, so strange and appalling, it is almost pathetic to read, "God remembered Noah," "And God blessed Noah." He even made a covenant with him and sealed it with a visible token, the beautiful rainbow of promise, which has repeated itself down through the ages with undimmed splendor—a perpetual memorial of God's faithfulness. But this was not all. He added, "And I will remember my covenant which is between me and you." Is there not here a thought of incalculable comfort for every child of God in every age and every condition that the real ground of our safety is not our remembering God, but God's faithfulness?

Four hundred years later we come into touch with another of the patriarchs, a figure more prominent than any other in the whole history of the world save one. From our earliest childhood we have been accustomed to regard Abraham with deepest veneration and love as "the friend of God"—"of all earth's names the purest"—and the acknowledged father of the faithful. God called him apart from his home and kindred and early environment into closer nearness with himself, that he might give him the necessary preparation and discipline for the specific service to which he appointed him. And by faith he went out, not knowing whither he went. He could not understand God's far-reaching designs, and so, by way of comforting assurance, God said to him, "I will bless thee"; after that, "Be thou a blessing." Here we find Abraham's endowment and commission.

It is a wonderfully interesting study to trace the divine hand in his dealings with this man, and to note the hard and trying experiences through which he was led, and the temptations from which he was mercifully delivered, when God said, "I withheld thee from sinning against me," as well as the final victory with which his life was crowned. We are reminded how sacred each individual life is to God, and that it can be pure and strong only as his grace is wrought into it and molds it.

Next comes Isaac into view. Who would think of looking in the Bible history of the patriarchs to find a genuine love story! And yet a whole chapter, one of the longest chapters, too, in the book of Genesis, is devoted to a detailed account of the wooing of Rebecca and her betrothal to Isaac. It is a sweet and simple romance of the olden time. We have the stately preparation for the journey, Abraham's eldest servant starting out with ten camels of his master, the meeting by the well, Rebecca coming forth with her pitcher on her shoulder, the letting down of her vessel to give drink to the servant and to the camels, the raiment and precious jewels for the bride, the costly presents for her relatives, the meeting with Isaac, Rebecca lighting off her camel, and the putting on of her veil.

These particulars, so full of touches of nature as to speak to men's hearts in every age, furnish a lively picture of Oriental manners and customs, while the sequel tells us that "Isaac took Rebecca, and she became his wife, and he loved her, and was comforted." The narrative as a whole brings out the truth that God has hallowed the most ordinary affairs of human history, and made his sweetest benedictions to cluster around the family life.

In the lives of Jacob and Joseph we read of many and strange complications and events, designed to illustrate the power of God, as manifested in those who walk with him by faith, and his sustaining grace in death. Of all these it is said, "and he died," but Jacob is the only one we are permitted to accompany to his very last hour. We see how the deathbed of this Old Testament saint was surrounded with the brightness of peace, the fear of death being lost in the quiet hope of the rest that remaineth to the people of God. He falls asleep on the bosom of the Eternal, to awake amid the glories of the upper realms.

To these Bible stories, among the most interesting and thrilling of our childhood, we may well give our maturer thought, for they will surely lead us to a profounder trust in the Hand that is guiding our own lives onward and upward to the gates of light. Christ said, "Many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven."

AN ORIGINAL PHILANTHROPIST.

BY E. B. S.

The procrastinating being who is obliged to make desperate shifts to write to his own kith and kin will find it difficult to credit the following veracious tale.

A good Prohibitionist, whom we will re-christen Paul Chandler, chanced to be spending a few weeks in Jacksonville, Fla. The first time he had occasion to visit the post office he noticed a long file of colored men and women standing before one of the general delivery windows, each in turn inquiring anxiously and vainly for mail. Again and again, when Mr. Chandler went to the post office, this scene was enacted—the long dusky file of men and women patiently waiting, only to go away disappointed as before, the while their wistful glances at the letters of their more fortunate white brethren told only too plainly the sickness of hope deferred.

Mr. Chandler's interest grew rapidly to pity, and he finally asked the postmaster if they never received any mail.

"Never," said the latter. "They have been coming here every day, year in and year out, and they never get anything. They don't seem to understand why other people get letters while they never do. Of course they write none themselves, still they have a vague faith that the post office will some day deliver something for them."

To the careless passer-by and to those who had seen the spectacle for years the darkies' naïve illusion was simply a joke, so old that it had even ceased to excite comment. Not so was the waiting throng photographed on the sensitive soul of Mr. Chandler. Many a night his dreams were haunted by shadowy faces, now bright with expectancy, now grim and somber with the old disappointment. The piteous vision was at last dispelled by the query, "Why shouldn't I write them some letters?"

Thereupon Mr. Chandler asked the postmaster for a list of the colored men's names, resolving to write to all of them as soon as he went North. The correspondence thus originated has probably never been surpassed for unique flavor and pathos. Mr. Chandler's letters were full of good cheer and Christian counsel. The replies were brimming with childish delight and satisfaction that at last the post-office was doing its duty to all, regardless of color or previous condition of servitude.

The nondescript character of the names on his "correspondence list" often left Mr. Chandler in doubt whether he was writing to a man or to a woman. In such cases he would make his counsels cover broadly generic temptations, and use no differentiating titles of sex. One of these common gender epistles (to Perseverance Jones) brought a touching reply.

Dear Mister Chandler [it ran], i have ben going to the post office for seventeen year to get that letter. Why didn't you write it before? I am an old man ninety years old.

PERSEVERANCE JONES.

Mr. Chandler sent this pathetic life-summary to a friend, requesting him to return it at his earliest convenience. Several weeks later it came back with the following apology:

Dear Paul: You will pardon this delay, I know, when I tell you what I have done. I took your letter to prayer meeting with me and read it. The entire audience wept. A collection of ten dollars (which I inclose) was taken up to help you continue in the new field of philanthropy you have discovered.

During the three years after Mr. Chandler left Jacksonville he wrote three thousand letters to his colored brethren and received about as many answers, and all this in addition to other business duties and philanthropies.

(He) doeth little kindnesses,
Which most leave undone, or despise;
For naught that sets one heart at ease,
And giveth happiness or peace,
Is low esteemèd in (his) eyes.

THE PATHWAY.

BY CLINTON SCOLLARD.

Dwell ye within cot or hall,
Be ye lord or be ye thrall,
Have ye joy or grief for store,
Know ye this—from every door,
Straight across the sky's blue meads,
Up to heaven a pathway leads!

Though ye wander faint and far
Underneath an alien star,
Or do nightly sink to rest
Near the loving mother breast,
Everywhere—to him who heeds—
Up to heaven a pathway leads!

How far does the experience of mothers who read The Congregationalist verify this statement, made by Edward Everett Hale in a recent letter to Book News? He says: "In half a century of ministerial experience I have often been consulted by sensible women as to a course of reading to be followed by their boys, and I do not remember that any woman ever asked me what would be good books for her girls to read." He then adds: "Making this statement the other day at a birthday party, where I met some very intelligent young friends of mine, the girls and boys both agreed that girls always like to read boys' books and that boys never want to read girls' books. It has seemed to me that this remark alone is worth printing as the text of an article on reading for boys."

Let those who live in constant dread of disease germs remember that a beneficent Creator has provided wonderful means of protection against the bodily ills to which his children are exposed. Modern medical science has discovered the "phagocyte," whose sole business is the destruction of the pathological "germ," thereby almost neutralizing its power to work harm. A drop of water seen under the magnifying glass might tempt one to discard this useful fluid altogether, as a beverage, but the squirming animalcules once incorporated in the body personal become quite well behaved citizens. In no department of knowledge is the familiar adage, "A little learning is a dangerous thing," more applicable than in hygiene. A wise physician writes: "It is well to remember that disease germs have existed for many generations and yet left quite a respectable population in the world. The common sense precautions as to personal cleanliness, which our Jewish friends have practiced since the time of Moses, will keep both our dwellings and persons in very good hygienic condition."

The delightful picture of Scottish home life in Dr. Stalker's article must be a great encouragement to parents in humble circumstances who are striving to rear their households upon the enduring foundations of character rather than upon the shifting sands of material possession. How clearly he shows that industry, piety, self-denial, mutual consideration for each other constitute the true dignity and happiness of family life. That possibilities of real joy can exist in a home of actual want is incomprehensible to some persons. In a recent comparison of the writings of Elizabeth Stuart Phelps and Sarah Orne Jewett a thoughtful woman remarked in substance: The former sees the pain, the poverty, the limitations of human life and is stirred with a profound sympathy. She would go to almost any length in the direction of personal self-sacrifice in their behalf. But she cannot discern, as Miss Jewett can, that sweet human affections and innocent fun and merriment are found in homes where daily rations run short and the problem of shoes, of jackets or frocks presses sorely upon the hard-working parents. But the great men of America, as well as Scotland, have been reared in precisely such circumscribed conditions as Dr. Stalker mentions in the case of Cairns, Carlyle and Paton.

DISCOURAGEMENT AND MR. GREATHEART.

BY MRS. M. E. SANGSTER.

Of all the discouraging convictions which force themselves upon us, the most depressing known to human experience is, I think, the one common to us wherever we are—that we are not advancing as we ought in the Christian race. An old-fashioned phrase, infrequently heard now, used to be much on the lips of good people—experimental religion. This is so largely the period of activity in every line that even in the religious life the habit of meditation does not much obtain.

Possibly it is a narrow and misleading way of speaking that makes an apparent division between the life religious and the life secular, the daily tasks being hallowed if undertaken in the consecrated spirit, but I do think there is a legitimate use of the term religious. We may apply it in certain phases of meaning and regard certain moods and dispositions and certain obligations and employments as pertaining to the sacred rather than to the everyday engagements of our lives. The shewbread on the table was holy by reason of its setting apart, and so is our sacramental loaf the outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual reality.

To return to the discouragement. It is this, and I call it a burden grievous to carry and one only to be dropped when one gets a clear look at Calvary. You have been following the Master these many years. You have prayed and trusted and toiled. You have sat with him in heavenly places, and, as you have walked in darkness, he has made the way around and before you light as the rising of the new day. Often he has been to you as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land. You are his, and the glory of it and the comfort of it is the dearest secret of your soul.

But, whether because the body is tired and the nerves on edge, or because you have uncongenial persons about you, or because the plans you make tumble down at a touch like a child's tower of blocks, there comes a day when you behave as ignobly as if you had never set your foot upon the edge of the kingdom. You are fretted and fretful. You are not easy to live with. You wound a sensitive child or a dependent, or are rude to a servant. You fall into some even more shameful sin; you are vindictive, resentful or unforgiving. And after a while, in the hush of your chamber at midnight, or in the midst of the throng in the congregation on the Sabbath, it comes over you how you have wandered, how you have stained the whiteness of your robes, how you have ceased to shine and turned an opaque and lightless lamp to the world around you. No wonder you are discouraged.

But "rejoice not over me," then, "mine enemy, though I fall, I shall arise again." Mr. Greatheart has been sent for my defense and he will help me; let me interpret him as I may, there will always be a Greatheart ready when a pilgrim is dismayed. Dearer still is the knowledge that the Lord himself has pity and help and loving favor for his children and disciples in the hour of their greatest seeming discomfiture. Inch by inch we do make progress, the foothold lost, sometimes, but at once regained; and the pilgrim path leads ever upwards to the city of our God.

THREE SCOTTISH HOMES.

BY REV. JAMES STALKER, D. D., GLASGOW.

The opening chapters of the Life of Principal Cairns, given to the world the other day by Dr. MacEwen, adds another to a series of Scottish domestic interiors with which literature has recently been enriched. The most brilliantly written of them all is to be found in the first two chapters of the autobiography of Dr. Paton, missionary to the New Hebrides. The most renowned is Thomas Carlyle's memoir of his father, forming the first chapter of the posthumous work entitled Reminiscences. If any one wishes to understand Scotland, let him read these accounts together of the homes in which three famous Scotsmen were born and brought up. All were typical Scottish homes, and any one who will acquaint himself with them will learn what are the true sources of the finest and most characteristic elements of Scottish life. In all three the parents belonged to those sections of the Scottish Church noted for independence of spirit. The Carlyle and Cairns parents were Burghers, the Patons Cameronians. In both the Paton and Cairns ancestry there was a Covenanting strain, the memory of which had descended as a proud possession.

All three homes were poor. The narrowness of the resources of the Cairns household fills the reader with astonishment. The father's income was only £30 a year. The home consisted of a single room, with bed recesses, and a closet six feet broad. On this income and in this home eight children were brought up. The Paton circumstances were less cramped; but this family, too, knew what it was in a bad year to be on the verge of starvation, and there was a cherished family tradition—paralleled, I believe, in many Scottish homes of the same stamp—of how help arrived in a way almost miraculous, in the nick of time. The Carlyle resources were somewhat more affluent; the father, in the best year he ever had, made £100, and he left £1,000 at his death. But Thomas Carlyle himself had a long struggle with want, or, at least, with the dread of it, and this made him fond of quoting the lines of Goethe:

Who never ate his bread in sorrow,
Who never spent the midnight hours
Weeping and watching for the morrow,
He knows you not, ye heavenly powers!

Yet none of these homes was sordid; in none of them was the spirit of either parents or children broken; on the contrary, all presented an appearance of superiority and sufficiency, and parents and children could appear in church on Sunday, attracting no attention by their shabbiness, but the reverse. A brother of Dr. Cairns supplies the explanation, "Our mother's fine management, without being painful or sor-

d in its thrift, I have never seen sur-assed." And Dr. Paton gives the same eason. Referring to the bad year already entioned, he says: "Perhaps amidst all eir struggles in raising a family of eleven, is was the hardest time they ever had, nd the only time they ever felt the actual nch of hunger; for the little they had was arvelously blessed of God, and was not ss marvelously utilized by that noble other of ours, whose high spirit, side by de with her humble and gracious piety, ade us, under God, what we are today."

These are words full of instruction in onnection with the social problems which e pressing on all thoughtful minds at the resent time. The material condition of ie Scottish peasant in the days to which ese three books carry us back was one orely requiring improvement. Carlyle, eaking of his father, gives one ghastly impse into the state of matters a hundred ears ago, "In the 'dear years' (1799 and 800), when the oatmeal was as high as ten illings a stone, he had noticed the labor-rs (I have heard him tell) retire each sep-rately to a brook, and there drink instead f dining, without complaint, anxious only o hide ft." It is a subject for profound hankfulness that since then the lot of the orking man has so greatly improved, and hat he is now able to eat the fruit of his bors. May it go on improving!

But increased wages will do little for the eal elevation of the working classes with-ut those virtues which made inadequate eans suffice—the frugality and sobriety of ie household, and the management of the nother. The happiness of a home depends, o doubt, to a considerable extent, on the mount of its income, but it depends still ore on the manner in which the income is pent. Reformers are at present contend-ng for "a living wage," and this contention sometimes supported by the argument hat, where a living wage is not obtained, a ecent life is not to be expected. This ay be an excellent argument when used gainst capital or in expostulation with onstituted authorities, but I should not ke to see it accepted as a creed by the oor themselves. The homes I am describng show how, by wise management and ersistent well-doing, the best of life—its unshine, elasticity and affection—may be reserved even where means are inadequate.
hey prove that man is not the sport of cir-umstances; he is the master of his fate.

Another characteristic of all these house-olds was industry. They accepted it as he law of nature and of God that for their canty daily bread they should perform ard, honest labor. Cairns was sent out o be a shepherd in his tender boyhood.
aton speaks of laboring at stocking-weav-ng, to which he was apprenticed, from six n the morning to ten at night. This was xcessive, but it was far better every way han the idling or dawdling to which many re now brought up. The reason why the ons, especially of the tolerably well-to-do, ften turn out nonentities is that they never ake off their coats to their work or believe hat hard work is their appointed lot in ife, and thus many of them fail to take adantage of the foundation laid for them by heir hard-working parents, and, instead of scending the ladder, descend.

Carlyle speaks with intense pride of his ather's work. He was a builder, erecting ottages, farms, bridges in his vicinity, and he son rejoices in the assurance that his father's handiwork will last long and do him credit, being sound and honest every bit of it. There is no healthier element in Carlyle's own writings than what may be called his gospel of labor—that hard work is the portion of every son of Adam; that the best of it is not the wages, but the work itself well done; that the work reacts on the worker, honest work making a man, scamped work a scamp—and this gospel he not only preached but exemplified. In his voluminous writings there may be unwise pages, but there is not a slovenly or dishonest one in them all.

No doubt this addiction to industry helped these families to rise in the world, and another trait, particularly attractive, contributed to the same result — they were possessed with the love of knowledge. Meagre as were their means, they all had books — a constantly increasing store—and reading was their principal recreation. The desire so characteristic of the Scottish peasant to give his children the best education in his power has probably more roots than one. Primarily it is religious. He wants his children to be able to read the Word of God; and, indeed, for the majority this was, two generations ago, the limit of education. Then, his shrewdness suggested to him that a good education was the best weapon for fighting the battle of life and carving a path to success. But the love of knowledge grows by what it feeds on; and, if utility be the first motive, this is soon superseded by delight. In the realm of knowledge the soul expands, breathing an ampler air, and, in communion with the great spirits of literature, is lifted above the sordidness of a narrow lot. There is nothing of better omen in a poor man's home than a well-filled bookcase, and a young man cannot better begin to provide for his future home than by buying now and then a good book—not the trash diffused by circulating libraries, but a book which, as Milton says, is "the precious lifeblood of a master-spirit, embalmed and treasured up on purpose to a life beyond life."

Carlyle says of his father: "Without religion he would have been nothing." Of his mother—one of the most remarkable figures disclosed in the literature of this century—he might have said the same thing; and exactly the same might have been said of both father and mother in the Paton and Cairns households also.

Religion was in the very air which all three men, with their brothers and sisters, breathed. They felt it as a power which had laid hold of their parents, separating them from the world and making them different from their neighbors. It connected their parents in their eyes with a supernatural system of things, and they all declare that they never found a more cogent demonstration of the reality of the supernatural than the change produced by it in the lives of their parents. Carlyle's father had never been vicious, but at one time he had been wild, and the whole family knew perfectly by what kind of influence he had been separated from the evil past and led to take his stand decisively among the godly.

The symbol of religion in these homes was family worship. When Paton's father became a decided Christian there was family worship in the grandfather's home on Sunday evenings; but the young Christian insisted upon having it morning and evening every day, and so he continued till the end. "None of us can remember," says Dr. Paton, "that any day ever passed unhallowed thus. No hurry for market, no rush to business, no arrival of friends or guests, no trouble or sorrow, no joy or excitement ever prevented our kneeling around the family altar."

More affecting still, however, is what this writer says of a habit practiced by his father of retiring from time to time into a small room for secret prayer. It was secret; but well did the children know what was taking place. When the father was in and the door shut they instinctively crept past on tiptoe, and when he came out with the light of another world on his face they did not require to ask whence the change had come. Robert Burns also knew from the experience of the parental home this priestly function of the father in the family, and he has done it justice in his greatest poem. In no other position is any father so venerable. The practice of bringing all the children together for this exercise at an appointed hour is one of the simplest modes of keeping up family discipline, and the minds of the children almost unaware become stored with the Word of God and the language of prayer.

It need hardly be added that these families were regularly in church on Sundays. They had all far to go, and one of the reminiscences of the children was in regard to the conversation of their parents with their neighbors on the way home. It was not idle talk. They went over what they had heard, taking the sermon to pieces and putting it together again; and from listening to these conversations the children learned that the Word of God was to their parents the very bread of life. Carlyle's description of the church of his childhood is classical: "A select few had united themselves. They had built a little meeting house at Ecclefechan, thatched with heath, and chosen them a priest, by name John Johnstone, the priestliest man I ever under any ecclesiastical guise was privileged to look on. He in his last years helped me well with my Latin (as he had done many) and otherwise produced me far higher benefit. This peasant union, this little heath-thatched house, this simple evangelist, together properly constituted the church of that district. They were the blessing and the saving of many. On me, too, their pious, heaven-sent influences still rest and live. Let me employ them well."

The Sabbath evening was spent in the recapitulation by the children of what they had heard in church, in reading aloud and in thorough drill in the Shorter Catechism. A great deal has been said by writers of a certain type of the gloominess of such a mode of spending the Sabbath. But let any one read these books and judge for himself. Here is Dr. Paton's testimony on this very point: "Others must write and say what they will and as they feel, but so must I. There were eleven of us brought up in a home like that, and never one of the eleven, boy or girl, man or woman, has been heard, or ever will be heard, saying that Sabbath was dull or wearisome for us, or suggesting that we have heard of or seen any way more likely than that for making the day of the Lord bright and blessed alike for parents and children."

But there is far better evidence than any such testimony in the glow of sunshine resting on all three books. These homes were manifestly full of love and mutual confidence. The children not only loved each other as children, but held firmly together in subsequent life, esteeming one another and helping one another. And the regard of all for their parents only stopped short of idolatry. In the English language there are few things finer than Carlyle's tribute to his father; Dr. Paton's is at least as enthusiastic and the biographer of Cairns says: "If out of that lowly cottage there came one at whose simplicity of heart and breadth of nature and obvious communion with the living God his countrymen have wondered, he did not excel in those high graces the man to whom he owed his birth and the pure, godly surroundings of his early days."

FRESH AIR STUDIES.

BIRDS IN WINTER.

BY HOWARD E. PARKHURST.

Nothing promotes health of mind and body like active life out of doors. Multitudes would doubtless find their way into fresh air and sunshine vastly more than they do, if they had a definite object in going out, but aimless wandering affords slight incentive. Just here the natural sciences serve an admirable purpose in giving a meaning to one's walks through fields and woods, entertaining and educating the mind, and affording the body nature's best medicine.

Along some lines of natural science, however, the student suffers a long annual interruption. The botanist finds very few specimens before April, and his year's work is practically over by the first of November, and the same is true in entomology. The subject that can be followed with most success all through the year is ornithology. In this, as in all similar studies, the chief harvest time is spring and early summer, but there is no month in the year that does not give interesting discoveries to the persistent inquirer, and I will mention briefly a few things that can be looked for when snow covers the ground and the thermometer is down to zero.

Of the birds of prey one can expect to see an occasional hawk and owl, the former flying by day, the latter by night. There are few nobler sights among birds than a hawk on the wing, and our natural repugnance to these birds has been proved groundless, for they are far more beneficial than hurtful to a man's interests, as they live chiefly upon animals injurious to the farmer's crops. The same is true of owls. The antipathy of other birds for owls is very curious. There is a strange legend in the East that it is due to the fact that the owls saw the Saviour during the darkened period of the crucifixion.

Quite rampant in many woods are the crow and his more stylish but not less villainous brother, the blue jay. Many of the song birds, too, though silent, are to be found on trees and bushes that contain seeds and berries, for these are their principal source of diet; among them the brilliant goldfinch, which in winter exchanges his yellow dress for a brown suit and will even warble in the cold when he feels well and the sun is bright; the handsome cedar bird, usually, like the goldfinch, in small flocks; the brown creeper, and, more rarely, the song sparrow and the white-throated sparrow. You need not be surprised, also, to find the robin in twos and threes in some secluded spot, looking rather dilapidated at this season, but most of his kindred have gone south.

The chief advantage of winter ornithology is in studying many species that come down from the north to spend the winter, just as the majority of our summer birds go south in fall and return in the spring. Most of our winter birds go north in April, spending the summer in Canada and British America. Among this class are the dainty, but hardy, golden-crowned kinglet, one of the smallest of our birds, to be seen in small flocks exploring the rough bark of trees containing the eggs and larvæ of insects and cheerily sounding his zee, zee, zee. Another interesting specimen is the crossbill, of the size of a bluebird, usually seen among the cones of evergreens extracting seeds with his twisted bill. In winter, too, comes the savage little "butcher bird," as large as a robin, a miniature bird of prey dressed in ash, with a harsh cry and a sullen look. Of woodpeckers perhaps the most abundant are the "golden-winged," larger than a robin and with the entire under side of the wings of a rich gold color; and the little "downy," no larger than a sparrow, but very evident as he hammers on a bare tree as if his life depended on it—as, indeed, I suppose it does.

It is worth while to go into the woods to find the queer little nuthatches that can walk down the trunk of a tree without a rush of blood to the head, and whose great curiosity in looking at me as I pass them leads me to think that it has usually not been the masculine member of the family that I have seen. A handsome winter specimen is the snow-bunting, which often travels about in large flocks, which in their chiefly white attire look, on the wing, like magnified snowflakes. The snow bird is quite another species, almost black above and white beneath, a dressy little fellow, and quite generally distributed.

The most attractive to me of all winter specimens is the merry chickadee, that radiates its own sunshine in the stormiest day, always seeming desperately hungry and so never wanting the best kind of sauce, while its jovial spirit would find a feast in a dinner of herbs. If my soul ever undergoes transmigration, and enters into anything less than six inches long, may I wake up in a chickadee.

An occasional summer bird is left stranded here over winter, and occasionally one will find a catbird, a chewink, a fox sparrow, a hermit thrush, etc., that look strangely out of place at this season. I have given only the merest glance at the subject, with the hope that it may lead others to go out and find for themselves how much there is to see in what blind people call a dreary winter landscape.

Next to the grace of God nothing helps a mother more in the training of her children than good reading matter, and some of this may be light literature if wisely chosen. We have laughed over Helen Hunt Jackson's Cat Stories with the little ones, have enjoyed Little Women with the next older and read The Squirrel Inn and the Adventures of Mrs. Lecks and Mrs. Aylshine with the boys, and enjoyed them all. But we do protest at the pictures of society life as they are presented to us in our new line of stories, where domestic infidelity, not purity, is the sauce that gives piquancy to the whole.—Interior.

Closet and Altar

Prayer moves the hand that moves the world.

He who trusts in God is secure, but let him remember that the ground of his security remains outside himself, or he will find that he is resting his faith upon his faith—and this means subjection to many bitter fears and questionings. It is our lot to change; it is God's glory that he changes not. When we think of our faith it is like the cable, which seems to move and tremble with the movement of the waves, but when we think of Christ it is like thinking of the anchor, which holds fast. Because our security is beyond the tempest of our own moods and changes it is eternally secure.

Yet still
Our change yearns after thine unchangedness;
Our mortal craves thine immortality;
Our manifold and multiform and weak
Imperfectness requires the perfect One.
For thou art One and we are all of thee—
Dropped from thy bosom, as thy sky drops down
Its morning dews, which glitter for a space,
Uncertain whence they fell, or whither tend,
Till the great sun, arising on his fields,
Up calls them all.

—Dinah M. Craik.

See all things, not in the blinding and deceitful glare of the world's noon, but as they will seem when the shadows of life are closing in. At evening the sun seems to loom large on the horizon, while the landscape gradually fades from view; and then the sunset reveals the infinitude of space crowded with unnumbered worlds, and the firmament glows with living sapphires. Even so let the presence of God loom large upon the narrow horizon of your life, and the firmament of your souls glow with the living sapphires of holy thoughts.—F. W. Farrar.

"Thou art our potter." What a representation of God. He has taken up this as a vocation, namely, the redemption and glorification of your nature and mine. Between your soul and God there is a wonderful relation established. The sculptor is not more enchained to the marble he is employed in chiseling, nor the gardener to the spot which he is converting into a garden.—George Bowen.

We beseech thee, Lord, to behold us with favor, gathered together in the peace of this roof: weak men and women subsisting under the covert of thy patience. Be patient still, suffer us yet a while longer with our broken promises of good, with our idle endeavors against evil—suffer us a while longer to endure, and, if it may be, help us to do better. Bless to us our extraordinary mercies; if the day come when these must be taken, have us play the man under affliction. Be with our friends, be with ourselves. Go with each of us to rest; if any awake, temper to them the dark hours of watching; and when the day returns to us—our sun and comforter—call us with morning faces, eager to labor, eager to be happy, if happiness shall be our portion, and, if the day be marked to sorrow, strong to endure it. We thank thee and praise thee, and in the words of him to whom this day is sacred, close our oblation. Amen.

Mothers in Council.

SUNDAY AMUSEMENT FOR LITTLE CHILDREN.

The problem of Sunday amusement for children under five years of age is not one that can be met by books or games alone, however appropriate they may be to the years of the little ones. In order to interest them it is necessary that some one—and the mother is the best one—should give herself to the children with the books and games. When this is done there will be little difficulty in finding means for the proper and profitable occupation for them even with meager resources, while without this sympathy and company the little ones will fail of satisfactory amusement, however appropriate and complete the outfit of games may be. The reason for this is obvious. The child under five has not yet developed the powers of concentration of mind and continuity of thought on a single subject to a sufficient degree to enable it to entertain itself for any length of time without the assistance of sympathy and suggestion from some one else. Often on a week day, amidst a roomful of things adapted to its amusement, the little one will say, "I don't know what to do," and time has to be taken and ingenuity used to excite a new interest in the old objects. So it is certain that if the child is to be amused on Sunday the Sunday books and games must be supplemented by the devotion of a sympathetic and patient soul.

But this does not answer the question as to books and games for little children. Perhaps that can best be suggested by telling what has been successfully used for the amusement of one such little one. Before he was two years old the sources of special Sunday amusement were the pictures found in Doré's Bible Gallery and a book entitled Gems of Art, neither of them expensive volumes. These, with little stories about the pictures, made the Sabbath a delight to the little one. At two and a half years Sunday playthings began to be introduced. The first was a well-stocked Noah's Ark. During the leisure hours of the day the child amused himself with this for long periods without assistance. "Leisure hours" are spoken of because the child had been for some time a constant attendant at church and Sunday school. In connection with these the Sunday school book and paper come in to be explained and read to the child by the mother.

Gradually other sources of Sunday amusement were added. At three years there came the Temple of Knowledge, an ingenious and instructive Bible puzzle often recommended and freely advertised. Soon after that Sunday Sawyer Cards, illustrative of the life of Joseph, were purchased and proved attractive and useful. Later The Temple in Blocks was procured, and the latest source of amusement adopted is one that would scarcely be thought of in this connection — Byington's Chart of Jewish National History. These things, with pictures illustrative of the Sunday school lesson drawn on the blackboard, and a scrapbook filled with pictures of temples, churches, saints and madonnas, have furnished sufficient variety of material for Sunday amusement for the boy. Not all of these treasures are used every week, but, whatever the material selected, if lovingly and thoughtfully used by the mother, it has always served to make the day pass so quickly and pleasantly that the child looks forward to Sunday. One rule, that has insured the enjoyment of the Sunday games and pictures, is that under no circumstances, not even the entertainment of company, are they to be used by the child on other days, and the boy so thoroughly understands and respects the rule that he emphatically objects to, and sturdily resists, the handling by his little callers during the week of things sacred to Sunday.

I might also suggest an entirely different set of material to be used for such purposes: a home-made scrap-book filled with pictures from religious papers; Seven Years in Ceylon and one of the smaller illustrated Bible Dictionaries for picture-books; a home-made sand map; a set of dolls dressed to represent different missionary countries; a few wooden or tin camels, donkeys or sheep. These last can be used in an endless variety of ways. The camels would make the train with which Eliezer went to seek a wife for Isaac; one of the donkeys, the ass on which Balaam rode; the sheep, the flocks tended by Moses or David; they all would represent the wealth of Jacob or of Job. It is not so much the material used, so be it there is something of appropriateness in it, as the sacredness with which it is devoted to the Sabbath, and the ingenuity and time the mother puts into its use that will make Sunday a day of joy to the child.

It may seem to some that the mother is deprived of mental and spiritual enrichment by such a course. But there is no better mental discipline than making one's self understand a thing so thoroughly as to be able to explain it intelligently to a little child, while the effort to become as a little child in thought and faith is a source of true development for the soul.

CRUELTY TO CHILDREN.

Our human love is blind and selfish even to cruelty when the future good of our children is all forgotten in the gratification of indulging them in any way or any thing which is harmful. It is the opinion of medical men that much suffering and permanent injury is done to little ones by ignorant and irregular feeding. Certainly the helpless innocents are often the victims of thoughtless, selfish convenience; it may be easier to give a child a cooky than to stop and divert it, and this oft repeated becomes a habit, until the little body is not all that suffers. The child's ideal of the best which the parent has to give is of something to gratify the appetite; he has learned no self-control and has become greedy, selfish and probably willful. Parents who love (?) their children so well that they can never punish them unless angry with them are most cruel, and the sharp, quick words make wounds the scars of which may last through life. The parents are grieved and disappointed that their children are so irritable and disagreeable, little thinking the cause is their own unintentional cruelty.

The Conversation Corner.

HERE is another picture of "two little pilgrims" for you, but I do not believe that any of you will guess that they are the same, or even twins. But they are surely both "pilgrims," for one is traveling on his rocking-horse and both of them on a canal boat; the last would probably make about the same rate of speed as the other! The picture was kindly furnished to the Corner by Mr. Clifton Johnson, the artist, but he did not tell the names of the children or of the boat, or any story about them. I think their home is Leyden in Holland, where, you remember, our ancestral Pilgrims lived for several years. Of course most of you know that in that very odd, but most interesting, country many families live all the time on such boats, and there the children eat and sleep and play. If any of the Cornerers join "The Congregationalist's Pilgrimage to Holland" next summer, you must find those children and tell us about them. Meantime, the best I can do is to print a letter (which has been in my drawer several weeks) from a boy, who writes about his vacation in Holland:

ANDOVER, MASS.

My Dear Mr. Martin: The canals in Holland are very dirty, especially at the Hague and Amsterdam. There is green scum all over them. Out in the country the canals are higher than the railroads, so that the canal-boats look very strange. It is said that Amsterdam is a northern Venice. The only resemblance is that they both have a great many canals. But the canals in Venice are for pleasure, and are the only way of getting about, as there are not any streets there. But in Amsterdam there are regular streets and horses and carriages, and the canals are merely for freight, and carrying things from ships to different buildings.

At the Italian lakes I met a very nice gentleman and his wife from Holland. They were very nice indeed. When we left there we exchanged cards and on his was Count Schimmelpenninck. We did not know he was a count, but he had told us he was burgomaster. After we came home he sent me a picture of Queen Wilhelmina, and he wrote this on the back of it:

"To Master George H——, in remembrance of our acquaintance made in Lugano and hoping he may always remain equally enthusiastic at seeing his dear American flag, as I knew him to be when it was hoisted at Bellagio. Count F. D. Schimmelpenninck, burgmeister [mayor] of Amersfoort, member of the states general of the Netherlands. Amersfoort, Sept. 26, 1894. Orange forever!"

I always took my hat off to the American flag. Yours truly, GEORGE H., JR.

That is very interesting, even if it does not tell anything about the canal-boat children, and I wish that George would call and see me when he comes to town. I like his way of saluting the flag of his country!

FROM NEW MEMBERS.

SAUGUS, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: I have some money for Pomiuk. I am not a Cornerer, but I want to be. I am nearly eight years old. I have not any Newfoundland stamps. JOHN L.

I have sent to my old friend at St. John's to try and obtain more dogs' heads and seals and ships, etc., for you and other friends of Pomiuk.

CLEVELAND, O.

Dear Mr. Martin: A little while after the song, "The elephant now goes round," was put in the Corner my father began singing it without knowing it was in the Corner. I want to be a Cornerer. Can I? I am ten years old, and I am in the fifth grade. I have not skipped or lost a grade. My Christmas presents were a pencil box with lead pencil, penholder, knife, ruler and rubber, three games and three books—Blue Jackets of '61, Little Arthur's History of France, and Natural Law in the Spiritual World, also another book, Paul's Angel. I got a big, blue silk necktie. I am glad to see the old Captain back. ARTHUR N.

Your presents seem to be of a very useful character, but don't you find Natural Law in the Spiritual World rather hard reading?

KENNEBUNK, ME.

Dear Mr. Martin: I am a girl twelve years old and wish very much to be a Cornerer. I used to have a black coon cat who grew to such size and looked so much like a bear that we called him Bruin, but he died in a fit. The same friend who sent that sent us another coon cat. She is a tiger cat, with a white breast and paws, pink nose and beautiful eyes. We can't seem to find a name that suits her. We thought at one time that we would call her Trilby, but papa said "that is a back number." I would be greatly obliged if you and the Cornerers would suggest names for her. GERTRUDE L.

You might name her for your historic Mousam River, of which a Corner girl sent us a photograph last summer, or you could combine geography and zoölogy and call it Kennecooin—that would have the advantage of rhyming with Bruin if you should wish, when she shall have had a fit, to give her a poetical epitaph, after the manner of the girl in the Corner Scrap-Book.

N. B. Look out for Armenian picture, and for Corner letters about it.

Mrs. Martin

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK.

Who Have Been Poet Laureates of England? This question is raised by the queen's recent appointment of Alfred Austin to fill the position vacant since the death of Tennyson. The question is not entirely easy to answer. The earlier poets sometimes mentioned as laureates were not strictly such, only receiving occasional royal pensions or grants. The laureateship proper may be reckoned as beginning with Ben Jonson in 1619. Before that the following names are given with their sovereigns and dates of birth and death:

|---|---|---|
| Geoffrey Chaucer. | 1328–1400. | Edward III |
| Henry Scogan. | | Henry IV. |
| John Kay (Caius). | | Edward IV. |
| Andrew Bernard. | | Henry VII. |
| John Skelton. | 1460–1529. | Henry VIII. |
| Edmund Spenser. | 1553–1599. | Elizabeth. |
| Samuel Daniel. | 1562–1619. | James I. |

In the second list the years indicate the duration of the laureateship:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Ben Jonson. | 1619–1637. | Charles I. |
| Sir William Davenant. | 1637–1668. | Charles I. |
| John Dryden. | 1668–1688. | Charles II. |
| Thomas Shadwell. | 1688–1692. | William and Mary. |
| Nahum Tate. | 1693–1714. | William and Mary. |
| Nicholas Rowe. | 1714–1718. | George I. |
| Rev. Lawrence Eusden. | 1719–1730. | George I. |
| Colley Cibber. | 1730–1757. | George II. |
| William Whitehead. | 1758–1785. | George III. |
| Rev. Dr. Thomas Warton. | 1785–1790. | George III. |
| Henry James Pye. | 1790–1813. | George III. |
| Robert Southey. | 1813–1843. | George III. |
| William Wordsworth. | 1843–1850. | Victoria. |
| Alfred Tennyson. | 1850–1892. | Victoria. |
| Alfred Austin. | 1896– | Victoria. |

Of the first list two names only come down to us with fame; of the second, five. It is too early yet to judge the present laureate; his first official poem, "Jameson's Ride," sounds tamely beside "The Charge of the Light Brigade." Keepers of scrap-books would better save it, however.

"Orange Forever!" One of the most interesting juvenile books on Holland is Mary Mapes Dodge's The Land of Pluck. Here is an extract illustrating George H.'s letter in the Corner:

The Oranges are loved by the Dutch because they can boast of many a valorous and wise ancestor, but principally because the head of the house, Prince William, who was murdered in 1584, freed the people from the Spanish tyrant whose despotic reign had become unbearable. The sole descendant of this long list of princes and kings is our little Queen Wilhelmina, much beloved by the people, who cherish her as something very precious.

Abraham Lincoln. Prince William reminds us of our "martyred President," whose birthday occurs the coming week. If you are preparing a school essay upon him for that day you will find new material for illustration in the articles about his youth in McClure's Magazine, also in Mr. Henry Watterson's address in Boston, Jan. 20, reported in the papers. In the first you will see what helped to make the boy a great man—self-reliance, perseverance, mastering whatever he read or studied.

Whittier's Rhymes for Children. One of the January magazines has an article on the dear Quaker poet, which tells of a little girl, a particular friend of his, who asked him to write a verse on the death of her favorite kitten. Its name was worthy of the learned list proposed for our editorial cat a year or two ago—it was Bathsheba! Without hesitation, the poet solemnly repeated this epitaph:

Bathsheba! to whom none ever said scat—
No worthier cat
Ever sat on a mat
Or caught a rat—
Requiescat!

At another time the little girl's pony broke his leg, and again she asked Mr. Whittier for help, saying that she had written part of a verse, but could not think how to finish it. He asked her for her lines and she gave them:

My pony kicked to the right, he kicked to the left,
The stable post he struck it,
He broke his leg short off—

And the poet immediately added—

And then he kicked the bucket!

LESSON FOR FEB. 16. Luke 7: 2-16.

THE GREAT HELPER.

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D. D.

The evangelists wrote as preachers rather than as historians. They did not seek to give a record of the events in the Lord's life in the order in which they occurred, but to show from his acts and words who he was and why he came into the world. Luke tells us how Jesus, as the all-powerful friend of mankind, touches human life at every point and shows his supremacy over it. In this lesson Luke groups together two miracles demonstrating Christ's beneficent power to dispel sorrow by conquering fatal disease and even death itself. They disclose to us:

1. Our Lord's compassion. Jesus never sought a single case of sickness or sorrow that he might relieve it. His business was not to relieve individual distresses, but to purify the fountains of life through the truth to which he bore witness. Yet he who came to bring life to all mankind could never refuse it to one man. No one ever sought him for relief in vain. At Capernaum Jewish citizens pleaded for the help of Jesus for a Roman officer. He responded at once, though it must have seemed strange that he should be summoned by messengers and not by the person who sought his help.

Nain is a little village about four hours' walk southwest from Capernaum on the road toward Jerusalem. Perhaps Jesus was on his way thither to attend the second Passover of his ministry. He had reached the gate of the town, and with him a number of Galilean pilgrims. The most striking disclosures of his character appear to have resulted from surprises, purely incidental. His meeting with this funeral procession was one of them. In a willow basket, borne by friends and neighbors, lay the body of a young man. Before it walked the widowed mother bowed with grief. The sad faces of the large company of sympathizers showed how pathetic was the effect of the death, not only in the one home, but in the entire village. Instantly the affection of the Son of Mary went out to this mother and he became one in sympathy with the mourning multitude.

In both these cases the people were deeply moved and the presence and power of Jesus blessed them all. What pastor, whose heart has ached for sorrow which he could not relieve in the chamber where a beloved one was at the point of death, or as he has performed the last sad rites of burial, does not better understand Jesus because of the scenes here described? What mourner does not value more the privilege of telling his grief to Jesus as he sees him sending his message in answer to the faith of that centurion or standing beside that widow and before that bier? What he was then he is to every parent, husband, wife or friend coming to him bearing a burden of fear or grief.

2. Christ's expression of his compassion. The centurion was a foreigner, but Jesus not only dispelled his grief but honored his faith above that of his own countrymen. He did not even see him, but he sent him an assurance of friendship which overcame the national barrier between them and witnessed to the compassion of Jesus for every stranger in distress. To the bereaved widow he showed a sympathy which she had not even asked. Others wept with her. His first words were, "Be not weeping." They would have been unsympathetic had not their tone showed that he meant to remove the cause for weeping. Those who did weep would not touch the dead body, nor, if they could help it, that on which the body was borne, for they dreaded defilement. But Jesus, a stranger, stepped forward and touched the bier. The bearers halted. By these words and this act he made the mother's sorrow and the friends' sympathy completely his own. He was one with them.

Then the word of power broke the wonderful silence, "Young man, I say unto thee, Arise." The word which had called worlds into being commanded life to revive the dead. In the eyes of the Son of God this body was still, "young man." In calling him back to life Jesus invoked no other power than his own: "I say unto thee." To his word there was prompt response in life, action, utterance. The compassion of Jesus was fully expressed when he had made the mother realize that her son was hers once more.

3. The effect of Christ's compassion on the world. In these two incidents Jesus appears as the world's Saviour. Not one broken heart is ever brought to him unnoticed. Not one sympathizing prayer for others is ever offered to him unheard. He still bears our griefs and carries our sorrows. We have not a high priest who cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities. Death had grasped the centurion's servant. No human power could have delivered him. But life was still in him. The young man of Nain was dead. In all history the Jews had known but two instances of the exercise of power over death, and those by their greatest prophets calling upon God. A sense of awe came on the people when the young man was raised from the dead. The impression spread throughout Palestine and came to John in his prison. It seems strange that no mention is made of the feeling towards Jesus of the young man and his mother; but Luke's thought is centered wholly on Jesus, for he writes to disclose him.

Christ did not come to change human conditions so as to banish sorrow by miracles, for its discipline is necessary in making holy character. But he wrought miracles to show his will toward men, and his power to deliver them from all ills. He began a new kingdom whose might will "bring to naught him that had the power of death, that is, the devil." So surely does what he accomplished insure the perfection of that kingdom that he could say even before he was crucified: "I have overcome the world;" and the apostle could proclaim with confidence, "Our Saviour, Christ Jesus, who abolished death, and brought life and incorruption to light." These miracles are the assurance to every mourner that Jesus is the resurrection and the life; that he "shall wipe away every tear from their eyes, and death shall be no more; neither shall there be mourning nor crying nor pain any more." Christ's disciples are touched by human sorrows as he was, but cannot, as he did, banish them by a word. Yet by proclaiming his Word we are surely conquering sorrow and sin and death, and bringing in the time of which prophets dreamed and which Christ foresaw, when "men shall obtain gladness and joy, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

The London New Age (Socialist) says the difference between the Turkish horrors in Armenia and the British horrors in Matabeleland is merely a difference of motive. Men wearing the queen's uniform fired into South African kraals filled with women and children and mowed down with seven-pounders thousands of poor Lobengula's men, simply for satisfying the Christian thirst for gold and creating an African thirst for rum; the Turks have organized massacres in Armenia either to put down threatened revolt or out of sheer fanaticism. And it says that for Lord Rosebery to "be haunted by the horrors of Asia Minor" is much to his credit, but it points out that he is the man who decorated and honored the "chief incendiary in South Africa," Sir Cecil Rhodes.

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM.

AN EMINENT SCHOLAR ON AMERICAN MISSIONARIES IN TURKEY.

Prof. W. M. Ramsay, author of a Historical Geography of Asia Minor, as well as of two volumes concerning the early church in the Roman Empire and St. Paul's travels, in the course of an important speech on the Armenian atrocities recently delivered in Aberdeen gave a discriminating analysis of Armenian characteristics and paid an unqualified tribute of praise to our missionaries in Turkey. Though frankly owning at the outset that of the many races which he has met in the Ottoman Empire there is none to whom he personally owes so little gratitude for kindness shown to a traveler, none whose character has seemed to him in general so repellent, so selfish, so little alive to the loftier motives, so bound down in the lowest estimate of life according to the standard of money as the Armenians, Professor Ramsay at the same time emphasizes the possibilities which these people possess for rapid and high development under favorable circumstances. He declares that the most striking examples he has ever encountered of ability to receive and assimilate and rise to the level of higher education and nobler nature have been among the Armenians, and instances two men in particular, one a young Armenian educated at Robert College, who was some years ago attached to the service of the British consul-general; another, a young pastor, a graduate of Aintab, whom Professor Ramsay ran across in his round of inspection of the out-stations of the American missionaries. Of this man the speaker said: "Meeting him accidentally and unawares in the squalid street of a wretched mud-built village, I felt as he approached the air of education and refinement and high purpose that belonged to him."

The expressions of confidence in and hearty approval of the missionaries and their work in Turkey, coming from such an authority as Professor Ramsay, are worth quoting at length. Referring to the recent atrocities he said: "With regard to the facts the testimony of the American missionaries is enough to convince me and to convince all who have known the missionaries. I have already referred to their educational foundations, their colleges and their schools. But I have given no account of their position in the country, their knowledge of the people, the magnificent work they have done, their singleness of purpose, the good judgment with which they have abstained from all political bias and all interference with the established facts of the country (except in so far as an attempt to educate and to bring to a higher type of Christianity the Armenian people produces some change in the existing facts of the country). Their work has been to create an educated middle class in the Eastern lands; such a class did not exist in these countries, and without such a class no free constitutional government is possible. It is these missionaries that have made Bulgaria fit to govern itself by educating such a class of men. Politicians may say that Bulgaria was created by the Berlin Treaty or by King Alexander, but I believe that in a more real sense it was Robert College that has made Bulgaria." In another eloquent allusion to this same college Professor Ramsay declared that it "has done more to facilitate a safe solution of the Eastern question than all the diplomacy of all the European powers throughout this century."

This magnificent testimony from a man so thoroughly familiar with Asia Minor and so distinguished for his researches in this region is in striking contrast to the irresponsible statements of such a superficial observer as Mr. F. Hopkinson Smith.

OUR OWN WORK.

A Wellesley for Spain. At the recent annual meeting in Boston of the International Institute for Girls in Spain, which is incorporated under the laws of Massachusetts, strong emphasis was laid on the pressing need of funds for suitable buildings for this college in San Sebastian, which is a humble beginning of what may prove a Vassar or a Wellesley College for Spain. As a result of the earnest efforts of Mrs. Alice Gordon Gulick, who is director of the institute, many intelligent girls have gone out from its doors with an education hitherto almost unknown to the women of Spain. Among them are two bright girls who have passed the rigid examinations of the Royal University at Madrid with the highest honors, and forty-seven pupils who are already teachers.

The corporation has nearly $10,000 in hand for the purpose of new buildings and a site of several acres has been selected for purchase when the funds will admit. The desire is to raise $50,000 before beginning. Numbers of Spain's most progressive young women are now pressing for entrance into the school, but are debarred because of the meager accommodations. In the classrooms the girls are packed into uncomfortably close quarters, and a kitchen twelve by fourteen feet serves as a laboratory for the classes in chemistry, physics, botany, physiology and zoölogy. Thirty children in the kindergarten department are crowded into a room only eight by ten feet in dimensions, while in small rooms called dormitories three to six students are obliged to sleep with no light save that which comes from a window reached by a ladder. After learning of these conditions one reads with sympathy this appeal of Mrs. Gulick: "After twenty-five years of life and work in Spain we turn to our friends and ask them to help us place this precious jewel in a worthy and permanent setting. We can only give ourselves, our lives to this work, which we have gladly done. If we had a fortune probably we would be selfish enough not to let others share even in this necessary work, for the one whom God allows to do it will be immortalized in the history of Spain." John N. Dennison has been elected president of the corporation and Edwin H. Baker of Greenwich, Ct., treasurer.

Shall Missionaries Remain in Turkey? In an impressive article in The Missionary Herald Rev. W. A. Farnsworth of Cæsarea, now in this country, discusses the question whether our missionaries, in view of the ominous future and present danger and distress, ought to remain at their stations in Turkey or seek places of greater safety. While the writer acknowledges that the first impulse of those who look at them merely as American citizens with no reference to their work and responsibilities would be to advise flight, especially on the part of single women and mothers with little children, he glories in asserting that none of the workers in the smitten regions have doubted the duty of standing bravely by the men and women to whom they are devoting their lives. "Has there ever been a time when the missionaries in Turkey could do so much for the good of the people as they can just at this time?" asks Dr. Farnsworth. "Not to mention the great relief work that they are doing at Trebizond, at Van, at Harpoot, and at every station, indeed, where massacres have occurred, their very presence is both a comfort and protection to very many afflicted, frightened, sorrowing people. These are the great opportunities of their lives and nobly are they meeting them. The missionaries in Turkey are making history. If they are able to remain in the land there is a noble future. All the Armenians in the empire are ready as never before to accept the messengers of the gospel." These are the brave words of a man whose daughter and five grandchildren are now on the ground in hourly dread and in peril of their lives.

Another Florence Nightingale. Attention has been recently called in the letters from the Tokio correspondent of the New York Herald to the noble work and the wide influence of Miss Eliza Talcott, for twenty-two years a missionary of the American Board in Japan. Her services in the Nurses' Training School in Kyoto fitted her to work successfully in the military hospitals at Hiroshima, where she went soon after the beginning of the war. The head surgeon commended her very highly and the Japanese soldiers, as well as the Chinese prisoners, looked upon her with profound gratitude and veneration. A Chinese officer, captured at Wei-hai-wei, has declared that "her very face was sunlight, beaming with Christian love. Her countenance was aglow with an inward delight and seemed ever ready to soothe and bless the sorrowful and broken-hearted. Our officers had not given an exaggerated account of her kindness and acts of charity, for we had the rare opportunity to share them and to appreciate their divine effects."

PRAYER MEETING.

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN.

Topic, Feb. 16–22. Loyalty to Our Church. Ps. 84: 1–12.

Christian Endeavorers who keep in mind the motto of their society hardly need to be reminded that it is as much their business to uphold and increase the honor of their church as it is to witness to Christ before the world. Yet one hears a good deal of talk nowadays that is likely to deceive those who are attracted by what seems to be an exhibition of remarkable breadth and charity. We are told that one church is as good as another—that all are after the same thing. Usually such reasoning proceeds from persons who think that one religion is as good as another, and in the great majority of cases the line of argument means practically absence of devotion to any church or any religion.

Our religion, to be real and effective, must gather itself around some center where it can receive nourishment and from which it can go forth to service. For most of us church relations are fixed by the providences that guide our lives. As a rule the fellowship in which our parents found comfort and inspiration is the one that appeals to us. Some men, to be sure, feel called, as did Martin Luther and John Robinson, to pass out from the church of their fathers into a larger liberty and greater purity. But such cases are exceptional, and one is likely to be happiest in his Christian life if he can stay in the church in which he was born and reared, and can there think his thoughts of God and men and do his work for God and men. If the church of his birth seems to him narrow and exclusive let him strive in the right way to broaden it, if it seems to him cold and sleeping let him bend his energies to its awakening, but let him at all events hold to it if possible and labor for its purification and efficiency.

Loyalty to a cause, a person, an institution, is kindled by knowledge concerning the object to which devotion is professed. If we knew more about our church we should love it better. We Congregationalists have a record of which we need not be ashamed. What believers in our polity and faith have accomplished is writ in large letters. They freed the minds of men from unbearable bondage. They planted the seeds of civilization in a new continent. They established educational institutions on a comprehensive and generous scale, they sent the gospel to the remote regions of the earth. Today Congregationalists are standing for principles and are doing a work whose importance cannot easily be overestimated. To recognize these facts is not to despise or ignore any other branch of Christ's church, but to fit us for better and more loyal service in the place where our lives are set.

BOOK REVIEWS.

MISCELLANEOUS STUDIES, A SERIES OF ESSAYS BY WALTER PATER.

This volume gathers together what is left of the uncollected work of Pater, with the addition of a preface and complete bibliography by Charles L. Shadwell. The essays in the book extend over the whole period of the author's literary activity, from the example of his youthful work in the last paper (which has been added, Mr. Shadwell says, "as the only specimen known to be preserved of those early essays of Mr. Pater's by which his literary gifts were first made known to the small circle of his Oxford friends") to the most recent of his works. This inclusion is fortunate, as it enables us to study the changes of a noble style, cloistered and reserved at first, but broadening out through knowledge and sympathy in the growth of a feeling of the human relations with which it deals, and the desire of appealing more directly to men.

A glance at the bibliography gives us the range rather than the purpose of Pater's work. It is a man of the Renaissance who speaks to us, one who has felt the charm and power of the old pagan life with all the freshness of its new discovery in the libraries and palaces of Italy in the time of the intellectual awakening. It is art, poetry, history, the quiet life of the spirit aloof from the busy ways of men which we call practical; and yet it has the mark of a deep study of and purpose for humanity. It is this sense of repose, not purposeless but strenuous, which attracts and holds us as we read. The author is never in a hurry. He never slights the work of preparation, but always makes us feel that he has seen his subject in its wide relations to environment, and in its orderly and natural place in the development of the spirit of man without which criticism is forever barren. Whether he is tracing Raphael through the changes of his short and brilliant career, in which "he has already habitually this strange effect, not only on the whole body of his juniors, but on those whose manner had been long since formed; they lose something of themselves by contact with him, as if they went to school again," or studying the soul history of Pascal, or making us feel the stirring of the people's life in the building of the great cathedrals of France, or recalling his boyhood in the wonderful picture of The Child in the House, we feel the power of an insight which grows and is not hurried, and the vigor of a wide and calm knowledge informing a powerful and finished style. The book, with its predecessors, has a value apart, because it is a witness to the repose of beauty and the calm in which the most enduring works of art must needs be wrought. We note a misprint on page 29, which makes a fine passage of sustained description nearly unintelligible. [Macmillan & Co. $1.75.]

ASTRONOMY.

Mars. Of our celestial neighbors Mars is by far the most interesting at the present stage of knowledge. Unlike Venus, who covers her face with clouds, the ruddy star lies open to inspection, except when the differing voyages of the planets carry us out of range or the conditions of our own atmosphere are unfavorable. These two hindrances are, however, so great that knowledge of our neighbor has progressed very slowly. In a sumptuous volume of more than two hundred pages Percival Lowell has given us the result of research in other quarters, enlarged and supplemented by nearly a year's systematic study, during the last opposition of the planet, in the dry and clear air of Arizona. To the name of Schiaparelli, the most famous of the students of Mars, that of Mr. Lowell must henceforth be linked. We have room for only the briefest statement of a few of his conclusions, which, it need not be said, are of the highest interest to every thoughtful student of the thoughts of God.

It is Mr. Lowell's conclusion that Mars, a planet whose surface is only one-quarter that of the earth, is in a much more advanced stage of planetary life than ours, nearer, that is, to the final extinction which seems to have overtaken the life (if any) of the moon. With few hights and depressions and with continual cloudlessness in an atmosphere rarer than that at the summit of the Himalayas, the one important question for the Martians is that of the conservation and utilization of the sparse water supply derived from the melting of the polar snows. This is conducted by a network of irrigating channels to a great part of the surface of the planet. Wherever these channels go, there are broad bands and ovals of vegetation thirty to one hundred and fifty miles wide, which grow green in spring and fade in autumn into a dull yellow, and these broad bands of vegetation, fed by the polar snows, are the only oases in the deserts to which the planet owes its peculiar ruddy light. In considering the enormous extent of the canals, it is to be remembered that "a Martian would be, physically, fiftyfold more efficient than a man," while "a mind of no mean order would seem to have presided over the system we see—a mind certainly of considerably more comprehensiveness than that which presides over the various departments of our own public works."

If we have any fault to find with the book it is with a certain exuberance of satirical humor which sometimes breaks the dignity of the style, as where it reads (page 111): "To have drawings simply swear at each other across the page is, in the interests of deduction, objectionable." Aside from two or three flaws of this kind, the style is delightfully clear and refreshingly light and humorous in touch. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.50.]

Some idea of the rate of progress of modern scientific research may be gathered from the fact that Professor Young of Princeton has been obliged after only fourteen years to make a complete revision, including the entire rewriting of many parts, of his standard treatise on The Sun. And, even so, "the progress of discovery with respect to Helium," he says, "has been so continuous and rapid during the revision and printing of the work that I have found it necessary to append a supplementary note upon the subject." Written by the greatest American master of the subject in a clear and yet condensed style, with illustrations which are illuminating and a full index, this handbook starts on a new career of usefulness. [D. Appleton & Co. $2.00.]

BIBLICAL CRITICISM.

Introduction to the Synoptic Gospels, by Paton J. Gloag, D. D. This book completes Dr. Gloag's series of introductions to the books of the New Testament. The most important problem in this field is the synoptic problem. It is the correlate of the Pentateuchal question in the Old Testament. Are these three gospels independent, mutually dependent or compilations from one or more previous works? Dr. Gloag pronounces against their independence. He thinks that each of these gospels has oral tradition at its foundation, but considers this theory inadequate to account for their remarkable similarity. He favors the view that they are mutually dependent, and makes these propositions. 1. Mark is an original gospel. 2. In all probability, though not certainly, Matthew and Luke used Mark as one of their sources. 3. Matthew and Luke wrote independently of each other. Eichhorn, the great Biblical critic of the last century, was the first to bring into prominence the hypothesis of earlier written sources. Since his time it has been adopted in various forms by many of the leading students of the subject. Our author affirms that the theories of an Ur-Matthew and an Ur-Marcus are not supported by the fathers, although we might reasonably suppose them to refer to them. He argues that they are in themselves improbable and rejects them. Each gospel is taken up separately, pronounced genuine, and written by the evangelist whose name it bears. Mark and Luke were written in Greek. We cannot be positive about the original language of Matthew. The testimony of the fathers favors Hebrew, but the internal evidence points to Greek. A date in the neighborhood of A. D. 60 is assigned to each, Mark being the earliest. Dr. Gloag rejects the doxology in the Lord's Prayer. He gives the arguments for and against the last twelve verses of Mark, and accepts the passage, although admitting the preponderance of the evidence to the contrary. He accepts both genealogies and endeavors to reconcile them by supposing Mark to give the line of Joseph and Luke that of Mary. A special dissertation is devoted to this subject. The quotations from Matthew and the census of Quirinus are fully treated. This book give us a clear, vigorous and honest presentation of the synoptic gospels. In addition to the list of errata we note a misuse of the word "antedate," on page 134. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $3.00].

The Elements of the Higher Criticism, by Prof. A. C. Zenos [Funk & Wagnalls Co. $1.00], can justly claim to be the pioneer in its field. It is a carefully written inquiry into the legitimacy, objects, methods and history of what is known as the higher criticism. The author declares its object to be the solution of all questions referring to the origin, form and value of any literary production. To answer them is legitimate and desirable, but not indispensable, as is proved by the great work of the Bible before these questions were raised. He distinguishes three methods, the literary, the historical and the theological. The first deals with the peculiarities of language and style, the second with the historical features and the third with the characteristics of the theology. The last may be more properly termed the argument from the content of thought. The presuppositions with which a critic enters upon his work are discussed with the conclusion that the only proper postulate is the verification of all facts before their consideration. The eighth chapter is the climax of the first part of the book. In it Professor Zenos makes a strong argument in favor of the evangelical school. The remainder of the book is occupied with the history of Biblical criticism. The rise and development of the most important questions and the arguments advanced on both sides are briefly and fairly presented. Much careful and laborious work is shown here. The book will prove of real value to all students of the subject. The occasional summaries and the careful analysis of the contents are very helpful to the reader.

POETRY.

It is a pleasure to welcome in the convenient permanence of book form work which first saw the light in our own columns, as is the case with several of the poems which Richard Burton has published under the title of Dumb in June. The author possesses the insight and sympathy which are the fundamental qualifications of the poet and no one can read this little book without feeling the stirring of the wonderful life of nature and the answering thrill of the heart which recognizes something of its meaning. In this feeling of the close companionship of nature and of man the book is in the best sense modern, expressing at its poetic hight the spirit of the time. Mr. Burton's work will broaden and deepen, we believe—there is every promise of it in these few pages—but already he has given us delightful glimpses of the

> Mounting moon
> With her white lures to the sea, and the farewell of

and, best of all, the atmosphere and scenery of the book are distinctly American. If, with this high praise, some qualification is necessary in order to strike the exact level of achievement, we find here and there a line which seems a little forced, and we cannot help regretting that the title poem should have approached its great theme upon the negative rather than the positive side. To express the inexpressible is the high office of poetry, and it should not begin by striking the minor key of a confession of weakness in the presence of a joy for which it alone can afford us words. [Copeland & Day. 75 cents.]

Poetry is to be judged at its best, and the best in Down the Bayou, The Captain's Story, and Other Poems by Mary Ashley Townsend is very interesting indeed. In the first place the book is one more instance of the extension of our literature into new fields. Its background is that of the Mississippi delta or the plateau of Mexico, and Mrs. Townsend shows a power of describing natural scenery which carries the reader along with her and needs only selection and pruning to give it still greater strength, with an occasional power of seeing and grasping a strong dramatic situation. Singularly enough the most finished poem, from the artistic point of view, is the one piece of blank verse which the book contains. We do not like, however, some of the studied alliterations, as, for example, where the disagreeable lines,

> Where the broad banana's banner
> Droops above the bamboo hut,

mar the music of a descriptive song. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.50.]

In Clover and Heather, by Wallace Bruce, challenges comparison with Skakespeare in sonnets voicing Ferdinand's love for Miranda and Juliet's for Romeo. We like Mr. Bruce's face in the engraved frontispiece, and we enjoy the enthusiasm of his love for nature in Scotland and America, but the list of commendations with which the book concludes almost induces us to believe that poets are the worst judges of poetry. Mr. Gladstone has established a reputation for good nature, but Longfellow, Whittier and Holmes we think were imposed upon. The verses, as Dr. Holmes says, "are very easy, fluent, lively and well compacted"—too easy and fluent, we fear, to have much value except as souvenirs for friends.

ESSAYS.

We cannot help feeling that the title of Leonard Woolsey Bacon's volume of collected essays, Irenics and Polemics, shows a yielding to his sense of an external fitness, the other order of the words seems so much more appropriate to the work which he delights in and does with such neat dispatch. The book is thoroughly readable, and if we ever are completely in the wrong we can hardly wish for a more kindly and expeditious "setting down" than that which the author here gives to more than one religious humbug. To those who have not read it we especially commend the first essay in the book, Two Sides of a Saint, which is a delightful example of witty iconoclastics as well as an instructive chapter of church history, while the review of Garrison is a lesson to the writers of biographies of adulation. [The Christian Literature Company. $1.00.]

The keynote to Mr. George H. Ellwanger's Idyllists of the Country Side may perhaps be found in a chance sentence from his study of Thoreau: "The practical we have always with us; it is the poet and the dreamer of whom the world stands most in need." It is his purpose to make us better acquainted with the poets and dreamers of the country side, and he takes for this purpose four Englishmen—Walton, Gilbert White, Hardy and Jeffries—and two Americans, Thoreau and Burroughs. It is to some extent nature at second-hand which he gives us, but those who know and love the authors upon whom he comments will be glad to listen to a sympathetic interpreter. [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25.]

Menticulture, or the A. B. C. of True Living [A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.00], is by Horace Fletcher and is a series of papers in which all the evil passions are traced to either anger or worry, and victory over these, which the author terms emancipation, is represented as the object of life and, when attained, as the source of happiness. The book harmonizes with the teachings of Christianity, but does not rest upon them directly or make them specially prominent. It is rather the utterance of a philosophical mind, anxious to make the best of things and reasoning from observed facts without putting special emphasis upon duty. It does not seem to us to go deep enough to revolutionize many lives, while what there is of it is commendable.

STORIES.

Tragedy has its undoubted place in literature, but we think it is not often found within the narrow bounds of the short story. It is true that De Maupassant taught us how much of horror might be compressed within the limits of thirty pages, but we have never felt that the world was better for the lesson. When Louise Imogen Guiney, therefore, gives us four tragedies in unbroken succession in her Lovers' Saint Ruth's we feel some of the indignation with which Darwin regarded stories which did not end well. They are written in Miss Guiney's highly wrought style (highly embroidered, we are tempted to call it when we discover phrases like these, "The flooring was of the perfect plush of the English grass," "His heart-thuds made it hard for him to be punctilious," and "Her tacticianary social eye") and show a keen sense of the picturesque changes of life and nature, but we confess that we much prefer the author among the literary heroes whom she has sketched so pleasantly for us in previous books. [Copeland & Day. $1.00.]

Five well-told stories of by no means equal merit are tied together in a tasteful volume which takes its name from the initial tale, An Accidental Romance [The Republic Press. $1.25]. The author, W. S. Rossiter, reminds us a little of Stockton in the cleverness of his plots and his style is sparkling and graceful. The atmosphere of New York city pervades many of the pages, but there are also some excellent descriptions of Green Mountain and other rural scenery. If we miss in the stories any traces of moral purpose, the author has in his preface prepared us for that by disclaiming any desire to frame a homily or enter the field of social problems. He has, however, furnished stories whose interest never flags, which take a strong hold on human life and not only entertain and rest the reader, but leave him with an appetite for more of the same sort.

Herbert Vanlennert, by C. F. Keary, is an English society novel which illustrates at once the provincialism and cosmopolitanism of the British Empire. The story takes the reader in its course to India, Afghanistan and Egypt, but everywhere the interest is wholly in English types and English social questions. We cannot wholly commend it, in spite of its general cleverness of construction and character drawing, to readers who believe in the old-fashioned proprieties and reticencies of social life and its mirror in fiction. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25.]

In another story, less pretentious but more agreeable, of British life, Sarah Tytler tells of A Bubble Fortune, which comes late in life by the death of a distant relative to an Australian long settled at home, only to be lost again by the success of another claimant. How that loss was, in effect, made up to the lawyer's clerk whose life as an English squire was so brief, the book very pleasantly tells.——From the same publishers comes the latest story of Mrs. Hungerford ("The Duchess"), A Point of Conscience, which needs no special characterization to the readers of her always popular stories. [J. B. Lippincott Co. Each, $1.00.]

The Least of These is the title of a collection of short stories by L. T. Meade [Cranston & Curts: Cincinnati; Hunt & Eaton: New York. 75 cents]. They are evidently English in origin as well as in the scenes which they depict, and deal with the pathetic life of poverty and especially the life of children in the crowded London streets. More than one of the stories shows the power of simple, childish faith in leading hardened lives upward, and there is considerable power and pathos throughout the book. It is well above the level of the "made to order" religious stories in its grasp of human nature and knowledge of the art of story telling.

MISCELLANEOUS.

By way of reprints we have Tom Brown's School Days by Thomas Hughes and Silas Marner by George Eliot, both in the Riverside Literature series [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. 60 and 40 cents. 50 and 30 in paper covers]. These are well printed on strong paper and simply and tastefully bound in linen. Every boy reads Tom Brown without urging and could hardly have it in better form; and Silas Marner, in addition to its intrinsic interest as a work of art, is one of the literary masterpieces required for admission to American colleges.——We have also a reprint of Sybil by Disraeli [Macmillan & Co. $1.25], with an introduction by H. D. Trail and agreeable woodcuts illustrative of the text by F. Pegram. Disraeli—the man who, when he wanted to read a novel, wrote one—will always be read through curiosity, at least, and in Sybil we probably have him at his best. It seems odd, however, to be assured in the introduction that he was the inventor of the political novel, and that with him it ceased. ——Peter Simple by Marryat [Macmillan & Co. $1.25] is issued in the same style with illustrations by W. Ayton Symington and a critical introduction by David Hannay.

From Vermont to Damascus, by Adna Brown [George H. Ellis: Boston], is an interesting record of a business man's impressions and experiences in a journey through parts of Italy, Egypt, the Holy Land and Turkey. Mr. Brown and his wife were members of The Congregationalist's party last year, and the letters were first published in the local paper of his own town, Springfield, Vt.

In Macaire, a melodramatic farce by Robert Louis Stevenson and William Ernest Henley, we have the mind of the lamented author of Treasure Island in full play, with only a sense of literary responsibility. Light as is the matter of the book it is full of delightful touches and does not lack the moral which is the shadow of all powerful transcripts of human life. Stevenson loves an expressive word—how many of our readers know what "titubant" means? Particularly clever are some of the rogue's definitions: gold, "love's whistle"; ideas, "the protoplasm of wealth"; honesty, "the strategic point for theft." [Stone & Kimball: Chicago. $1.00.]

Volume I. of the Report of the Commissioner of Education is a treasury of materials for the study of educational systems at home and abroad, enriched by the statistics and reports of the Columbian exhibition at Chicago. It may surprise some of our readers to know that Nebraska stands first among the States in point of literacy, in company with Kansas, Iowa, South Dakota, Wyoming, Oregon and Washington, and that Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine show an increase of illiteracy, in the latter case amounting to thirty-six per cent. for the decade. This, of course, is due to the influx of a foreign and illiterate element from Europe and Quebec.

In The Songs and Music of Friedrich Froebel's Mother Play Susan E. Blow has prepared and arranged a new translation, furnished with new music, of the famous songs of the kindergarten. The translations are really adaptations by such well-known writers as Emily Huntington Miller and Laura E. Richards, and are very well done. Some of the original woodcuts are enlarged and all of them are large enough to be clear to childish eyes, to which they will be none the less interesting for their old world quaintness. [D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.]

Volume LXVII. of the Sailor's Magazine brings the record of the good work of the American Seaman's Friend Society for 1895, together with a collection of original and selected matter bearing upon the sea and the experience of seamen. It contains a useful map of the world, showing the thirty-one ports at which the society meets the sailors with its help. The magazine, with its distinct sea flavor, is always readable.

The Presbyterian Board of Publication sends us the Sabbath School Blackboard, which is a series of full-size designs in black and white, illustrating the Sunday school lessons for the year, together with a descriptive supplement called The Superintendent's Assistant, with questions and hints for desk review and a reproduction of the designs in little. Since the blackboard is only a means to an end, it would seem to us better to abandon the imitation of it for the greater range and variety of pictures in color. Since, however, it is a tradition in many schools and the talent for suggestive drawing is too rare among our teachers to be reckoned upon, these designs will no doubt be a great help in holding the attention of the children. [$3.00 a year.]

—— A musical adaptation of Longfellow's Evangeline has recently been received with great enthusiasm in Brussels.

—— It is stated that Eugene Field left an estate of $25,000, besides the home which he had recently conveyed to his wife.

—— The death of Lord Leighton removes the most striking figure in English art. Whatever may be finally thought of his pictures his gracious and commanding personality will not soon be forgotten.

—— A book which must be taken into account in a final estimate of the Old Testament higher criticism has just been published by Professor Sayce under the title of The Egypt of the Hebrews and Herodotus.

—— By an error in our issue of Jan. 23, it was stated that Rev. Frederic Palmer's Studies in Theologic Definition was published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. The publishers are E. P. Dutton & Co. of New York, and the price $1.25.

—— A copy of the second printed book with a date, a psalter printed on vellum in 1459 at Maintz, is offered by a well-known London antiquarian bookseller for the modest sum of $26,250. At its last sale it brought only $1,500 less than this.

—— We congratulate The Critic upon the attainment of the good age of fifteen years with a useful and prosperous history behind it. Its anniversary number of Jan. 18 contains an interesting review of the history of American literature during the period of its life.

—— Six large volumes of papers have already been printed with reference to the paleontological material gathered by Princeton University during the last eighteen years in annual expeditions to the arid regions of the West. The university possesses already one of the great geological collections of the world.

—— It is asserted by the Chap-Book that a London publisher recently offered a distinguished novelist an extra £200 if the latter would consent to have his latest story issued under an assumed and feminine name, which, if true, goes to show the public love of sensation and its commercial value rather than the triumph of women in the field of literature.

—— The American copyright law and the stranding of the steamer Cephalonia on the Welsh coast after collision have combined to delay the publication of the Slatin Pasha's book describing his captivity in the Soudan. The type was set in America and sheets shipped to England for the simultaneous publication which the law requires, but the sheets were ruined by sea water and the book must wait until others are received in England.

—— The Newberry Library in Chicago, through purchase from its owner and gatherer, Gen. G. W. Bailey of Nevada, Io., has become the fortunate possessor of one of the best Chinese libraries in existence. It contains only about 1,200 volumes, but embraces all of importance that has been written about China, and the most famous works of the Chinese themselves. There are many precious manuscripts and other treasures which it would be difficult to duplicate.

PASSING COMMENT.

"There are new voices in the meetings," writes a pastor. Without knowing more of his church, we may be well assured that encouragement is present. Pastors are continually trying to teach their prayer meeting congregations that the responsibility of affording greatest benefit at the midweek gathering is not with the few persons invariably heard from, but with those whose only contribution to that hour, the year around, is their presence. Not unworthy the forcible appeal for better spiritual support made on a recent Sunday from a suburban pulpit was the comment of an inactive parishioner concerning himself, "I must get to work or get out!"

A certain church, having decided to build, became discouraged even before it had set about preparing for the task. A few urged on the enterprise and inspired consecrated giving, which multiplied both faith and figures to a successful outcome, demonstrating what can be done "on any field," writes an eyewitness, where all give with the spirit of sacrifice.

A perusal of the items for a few weeks past justifies the comment that church debts are fast going, going. Now comes in a good hint which would seem hardly necessary, but a church gives it: Not to incur extra heavy expenses until the prospect of meeting them is good.

The seminaries seemed to be full of the spirit of the Day of Prayer for Colleges, affording the students a peculiar fitness to meditate upon the institutions with which they have so recently dissolved their relations.

The far Northeast is heard from this week. It seems to be a land of promise as set forth by the former secretary of the State Missionary Society, who for many years has watched that field.

It is a Connecticut idea, and a good one, to have the free library of a small community in the parsonage.

FROM NEW HAVEN.

The two churches upon the historic New Haven Green have been unique in their character and in their influence among the churches of Congregationalism. Center Church and United Church have been the centers of much that has molded the thought and life of the Congregationalism of New England and consequently of the country at large. They stand today mainly as representatives and leaders of modern Christian thought.

Dr. Munger, in a recent sermon, preached on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of his pastorate, gave an interesting review of the history of United Church. Owing to the close connection of the church with the university, there is a constant stream of membership flowing through by letter. Theological students come and go. Whole families, locating in New Haven for educational purposes, do likewise. A large part of the membership being of this character, it is not possible for such a church to attempt modern institutional methods; and yet, despite all this and in the face of an almost exclusively intellectual atmosphere, this church has, to a considerable degree, conformed itself to modern practical methods.

Ten years ago the external form consisted in a well-attended morning service, a small evening service, a small Sunday school, and that was about all. But the aspect has changed. United Church now has its live Christian Endeavor Society, its Men's Club, Boys' Brigade, Women's League, girls' gymnasium class and the general features of modern institutional methods.

Dr. Munger attributes this change to a variety of causes. First, a traditional spirit in the churches of New Haven which makes for peace and unity. Then, of course, the growth of the city. When Dr. Bacon said that New Haven would always go to church on the Green he did not anticipate a growth from 30,000 to 100,000 people. The employment of an assistant pastor, which means more pastoral work, has had much to do with the growth. Dr. Munger thinks that something of gain is due to the fact that it is understood that United Church stands for certain ways of thinking and of procedure that were ahead and are now abreast of the times.

But above all he holds that the enlargement of its functions has contributed most to the strength of the church, and that without this it would have declined.

And yet United and Center Churches still stand mainly and conspicuously for intellectual Christianity, and the atmosphere of the campus and the Green are the same.

There are those who would not think that such a spirit could unite or participate in the spirit of the evangelist, and yet New Haven has been the seat of more than one great religious revival. It was on such an occasion that Horace Bushnell, then in Yale College, was converted. Probably the greatest religious awakening that has come to New Haven for many years has been brought about by the Mills meetings during the past month. All the evangelical churches united. Figures do not convey much in themselves, and yet the attendance at these services indicates the large number of people who have come directly under their influence.

Up to Jan. 29 about 5,000 cards, reading "I desire henceforth to live a Christian life," had been signed. Sunday, Jan. 26, 2,000 boys were at the armory in the morning, and over 4,000 people were at each of the afternoon and evening services, the latter meeting being advertised as exclusively for non-church-goers. The attendance at the daily noon meetings has averaged over 1,000. The daily afternoon meetings averaged about the same, and the week day evening meetings about 2,400. Meetings for men only have been attended by 2,200 men at the Grand Opera House, and about 3,200 when held in the Hyperion Theater. The general interest and co-operation is evidenced by the fact that on last Wednesday the business houses of the city were very generally closed from 2.30 until 5 o'clock, including even some saloons. Mr. Mills has reached all classes, from the labor unions of the city to the theological students of the university.

The meetings have been much unlike those which one usually associates with revival occasions. They have been entirely free from excitement, yet an intense spiritual feeling has characterized them throughout. The interest has been deeply thoughtful.

During his stay of a month, preaching two or three times a day, Mr. Mills has not once over-stepped. He does not berate; he persuades. He criticises without belligerency. His strongest strictures, and he makes such, are given with graciousness and courtesy of tone. He does not reject what is modern because it is modern. He succeeds, however, in translating the language of modern thought into the language of today's life. He measures every question by the standard of love.

That Mr. Mills has reached widely differentiated classes is evidenced by the invitations which he received and accepted to address the laboring men under the auspices of the Central Labor Union, the college undergraduates and the students of Yale Divinity School.

Mr. Mills called attention to one fact which must be admitted and which is to be deplored. That is the lack of connection between the university and the public life of the municipality. He contrasted New Haven with Cambridge in this respect. While it is evident that the conditions in these two cities are entirely different, yet it is just as evident that Yale University and its faculty live too much within a world of their own.

Not among the least of the influences of Mr. Mills's great awakening must be its effect upon the effort which is being so vigorously and ably led by Dr. Newman Smyth to purify the civil and social life of the city.

Yale University is still acquiring property. Recent purchases include the College Street Church for the use of the musical department. Yale now owns nearly all of the land which is bounded by its scattered buildings. The Phelps Memorial Building with its massive arch is nearly completed and gives the university an imposing front facing the green. The cry is for more money. Perhaps one of Yale's sorest needs is a proper endowment for her library. The sum available for the purchase of books is very meager.

At the divinity school Professor Stevens has acclimated himself to the atmosphere of systematic theology and bids fair to make as marked a success in this department as in that of Greek exegesis. President Dwight is renewing his youth in his old chair of New Testament exegesis.

There is a growing disposition among the students to develop the social life of the school. Renewed interest in debate has been awakened by the selection of theological students to represent the university in the intercollegiate debates, which has resulted in the organization of the Leonard Bacon Debating Club.

The advantage of advanced entrance requirement enacted last year is already showing itself in the standard of the new men who entered this year, especially as regards the upper classes. C. S. M.

THE NORTHERN MAINE FIELD.

A council met at Ashland, Jan. 15, and a church of sixteen members, four on confession, was organized and recognized. Rev. C. L. Parker has been the pastor in this vicinity since last June. There is no house of worship, but the movement for one is already begun and will be accomplished without doubt. The recognition services were deeply interesting and left a favorable impression. A fine congregation gathered in the evening at the hall now used for the services, and excellent music was given by the choir. Addresses were made by the visiting ministers, Rev. Messrs. Moore, Noyes, Hescock, Harbutt, Strong, Adams and Whittier.

This is now a point of much promise. It has been settled about fifty years and quite a village has gathered not far from the new depot. The business, the hotels, the fine school building and an Episcopal church indicate thrift in the community. The farms are especially good, and are neatly cleared and tilled. The foundations are now well laid, and there is good prospect of solid, if not speedy, growth. There are several similar points in the vicinity. The primitive forests, streams and lakes stretch far to the west and north, and these abound in fish and game, which will delight the incoming sportsmen until new clearings have been made, followed by new towns and the school and the church.

Rev. Charles Harbutt is prospering in the work at Presque Isle. The church buildings are more attractive and convenient since being improved quite extensively, and the congregations are increasing each Sunday.

Rev. G. B. Hescock of Fort Fairfield, after seven years of solid service marked by unusual progress, is as popular as ever, and is giving sermons solid in matter yet timely and calculated to catch and hold attention. His is a strong, working church, and it will be ready to entertain the next State conference.

Rev. H. L. McCann of Houlton has gone into the parsonage just finished. The church moves along as usual. Some of the many churches in the town perhaps ought never to have been born, but the pioneer of them all does not feel ready to die, and will put forth strong power for continued existence.

Rev. H. H. Noyes of Island Falls continues to lead in that prosperous community, and good additions to the church are received from time to time. He enjoys the convenient parsonage, newly finished, and the question now arises, How can the house of worship be enlarged? This was the youngest Aroostook church till the organization of that in Ashland. Rev. T. C. Craig, son of the first deacon of this church, is now visiting the old homestead, and is interesting his friends by his excellent sermons.

Rev. J. S. Strong of Patten is doing grand work there. Some repairs have already been made upon the meeting house and more is to be done another season. The conditions for growth in this place are promising, since a branch to the Bangor and Aroostook Railroad is well along towards completion.

The Sherman church also, which is ministered to by the indefatigable pastor, Rev. I. C. Bumpus, is prospering as usual and his people respect and love him, co-operating in all his plans.

Thus it will be seen the churches of the Aroostook County are in a prosperous condition, in spiritual as well as material things. But there is much yet to be done, and there is need of wisdom, energy and money to keep the work fully abreast of the push in secular business. J. E. A.

EVENTS IN IOWA.

A bill in the legislature proposing to license the manufacture of liquor is creating renewed interest in the temperance question. Iowa has fought too many battles and gained too many victories to take any back step willingly in her opposition, either to the use or the manufacture of intoxicants. Still many of her best people feel that while the so-called "mulct law" is not the best conceivable, it is perhaps the best attainable in the circumstances and are inclined to leave matters as they are. But a certain element in the State wants the liberty of manufacturing liquor even if it cannot be sold within the State. Probably its thought is that if the privilege of establishing a liquor industry in the State is made legal it will not be so difficult to obtain the further privilege of selling the product wherever a market for it can be found, even in Iowa itself.

Grinnell had a temperance day Jan. 19. The evening before, J. G. Woolley gave one of his characteristic lectures. All who heard it were delighted with its eloquence, although many dissented from its positions. Temperance people in this State hardly care to have a stranger come within their borders to tell them how to vote. Sunday morning Rev. E. M. Vittum preached a sermon on temperance and in the evening the laymen had a free parliament, speaking for and against present and proposed laws as they pleased. The house was full at both services. While there was great diversity of opinion expressed, all were agreed that Iowa must continue to be a temperance State and that saloons must not be licensed within her borders.

Contrary to hope, but hardly to expectation, the Iowa Home Missionary Society closed the year with a small debt. The contributions fell behind those of the previous year about $1,600. Considering the times and the difficulty of obtaining money in Iowa this is a good showing. During the year five churches have been brought to self-support, five missionary churches have dedicated houses of worship, and fourteen new churches have been organized.

The Sunday school work is hopeful. Last year there was a gain of 3,238 in pupils connected with the schools. For ten years the gain has averaged each year 1,305. The number of schools has increased from 185 to 314, the pupils from 23,614 to 36,668. More persons were received from them into the church than in any previous year. About twenty schools have been organized, and independent and mission schools have increased from thirty-two to fifty. Five of these have developed into churches. Many special meetings accompanied with conversions have been held. The society has expended rather more than $500 beyond what the State has given it. But as less than one-fourth of the churches, two-thirds of the Sunday schools and few Endeavor societies have contributed to the treasury of the society it ought not to be hard to make up the deficiency and increase the income for this work considerably. The society year closes Feb. 29. To the special appeals for contributions there will doubtless be hearty and swift response. F.

NEW ENGLAND.

Massachusetts.

BOSTON.—Shawmut. The last number of volume one, and probably of the existence, of The Signal chronicles especially the events of the fiftieth year of the church. Benevolences were stated as $2,484 and the membership is 425, including the twenty-six additions during the year. The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society has given $546 to the Woman's Board, and took a special thank offering of $120 for the year.——Immanuel. The reports of the annual meeting indicate a prosperous condition. The present membership is 420, twenty persons having been received last year; benevolences for the year amount to $4,000, home expenses to $7,500, all provided for. The church is united and aggressive under the leadership of its pastor, Rev. C. H. Beale, D. D.

The Boston Superintendents' Union last Monday night at Berkeley Temple had one of the best attended meetings of the season, occasioned by the announcement of a novel subject and attractive speakers. Dr. G. M. Boynton's paper on The Upper End of the Sunday School received a warm response from the audience, as it dealt with the method of reaching and holding the young in the schools. Then Mr. M. C. Hazard and others extended the discussion.

NEEDHAM.—The special meetings in which Evangelist E. E. Davidson has been assisting for a few weeks recently are felt to have given the greatest uplift to the community that is remembered at any time. Good congregations and a large chorus encouraged the services throughout. The methods used were considered as above criticism, and from the outset the work increased in power. The subjects of the discourses were such as to inspire continued efforts as well as to arouse interest at the time. Union services with the Baptist church were also held. Many persons, especially among the young, were converted. The collection taken for Mr. Davidson was $291.

WORCESTER.—Belmont, organized in 1890, was hardly holding its own until the coming of the present pastor, Rev. W. B. Oleson, in 1894. Since then it has developed rapidly. Congregations have multiplied fourfold, thirty-six persons have been added to the membership, eighteen on confession. The Sunday school has increased more than 100 per cent. The attendance at the C. E. meetings is double the membership. A live Junior Society of forty members has recently been organized and the church has been self-supporting the past year. Free pews and voluntary offerings are in use.——Immanuel. At the annual rally and roll-call more than ninety of the 117 members responded, after which the Lord's Supper was observed.——Union and Salem Street. The proposed consolidation of these two churches is practically assured, both having voted in favor of it and appointed committees to arrange the details. Last Monday afternoon the corner stone of the new $150,000 meeting house of the former was laid, the acting pastor, Rev. F. F. Emerson, giving the address. The event also marked the sixtieth anniversary of the society.

CHARLTON.—The additions during the past year were five, the present membership sixty. The benevolences last year were $64 and the expenses $791. The church has been holding cottage prayer meetings this winter in different parts of the town, which have been successful.

MILLBURY.—First. One of the most notable and interesting events in connection with this church took place, Jan. 29, on the twenty-fifth anniversary of Rev. G. A. Putnam's pastorate. The annual reunion was held at this time, the old meeting house being filled with a large company, including many ministers from neighboring towns, many of whom spoke. The social hour was followed by a banquet. The pastor was presented with a fine stereopticon and money from the church besides a purse of gold from the people of the Second Church.

GILBERTVILLE.—Trinitarian. Owing to a severe storm the annual meeting was not largely attended, but about fifty persons responded to the roll. The reports showed a slight increase in membership and attendance at the morning and evening services. The benevolences for the year amounted to $1,239. Rev. D. C. Stone is pastor.

EASTHAMPTON.—First. The additions last year numbered nineteen and the present membership is 333. Home expenses of all departments were $3,074 and the benevolences $1,071.

Maine.

ISLAND FALLS.—Whittier. The first roll-call meeting of the church was held Jan. 21. Of the original members thirty-seven years ago, one was present who has faithfully served in all its growth. The church in its pioneer days was fostered by patient, varying activity for many years in a log schoolhouse, but now it is doing its enlarged work in a thoroughly equipped, but not too large, house of worship and parsonage of its own. The reports for the past year showed activity and gave satisfaction. The finances are in good order and the church owns new property to the value of more than $5,000, less than one-fifth of this amount remaining to be paid for, part of it a loan from the C. C. B. S. To pay this amount, besides the different societies of the church, two others of the town are giving their aid, the Ladies' Relief Corps and the W. C. T. U. The Ladies' Aid Society of thirty-five members is working vigorously. The band of Andrew and Philip meets Sunday mornings with an average attendance of twenty young men. The C. E. Society in the past year and a half has increased its membership almost twice, and numbers at present 103. The Juniors number seventy-six. The Sunday school membership is 160, with an average attendance of 100. The church during the past year has added thirty-one members, twenty-five on confession. Of the present church membership, ninety-three, seventy-seven responded to the roll. Rev. H. H. Noyes is pastor.

PORTLAND.—St. Lawrence Street. The young business men of the church have taken hold of the new building enterprise with great enthusiasm. Ten thousand dollars have been subscribed, which, with money already paid in, makes the amount raised thus far over $13,000. The church will raise $2,000 more and the public will be solicited for $10,000. The pastors of the other churches have cordially indorsed the movement by a public recommendation and appeal to this effect.

DEERING.—Woodford. At the annual meeting, Jan. 28, there were responses from 243 members at the roll-call. The membership is 319. Those added during the year number twenty-six. The benevolences were $1,643 larger than ever before. Home expenses amounted to $4,470. The membership of the Sunday school is 366 and its average attendance for the year was 221. One member present, and responding to her name at the roll-call, is ninety-three years old. Rev. E. P. Wilson has been pastor for eight years.

BELFAST.—The new pastor, Rev. G. S. Mills, and wife are winning the love and esteem of their people. The congregations are large and interest is good, the Harris system of offering is used, a home department of the Sunday school is established and benevolences are increasing.

BANGOR.—Hammond Street. The United Workers have furnished a new hard wood floor for the church parlor and a range for the kitchen and show enthusiasm in all their work. Rev. H. L. Griffin recently gave a reception at his home to gentlemen.

JACKSON.—The work under the care of Rev. F. S. Dolliff is progressing steadily. The church attendance is good, the contributions are on the increase and $40 have recently been paid for library books. The Sunday school and C. E. Society are doing well.

FRANKFORT.—The meeting house has been raised and a vestry and kitchen fitted up at an expense of about $1,000. The people by great effort have already raised half that sum and the work is progressing.

ELIOT.—A new furnace in the meeting house adds greatly to its comfort. The Ladies' Aid and Endeavor Societies have sent a barrel of clothing to Florida.

HOLLIS.—The Ladies' Circle has supplied a new furnace and also contributes to the pastor's salary. Rev. R. B. Mills and his sister received generous gifts at the holidays from the people.

MONSON.—Rev. H. A. Freeman says the outlook is hopeful for the new year. There are new voices in the meetings and several additions to the church. The congregations increase in numbers and interest.

SACO.—A temperance revival under Mr. T. N. Doutney has been occupying the attention of the churches of late. Rev. G. W. Hinkley gave the history of his Good Will work last Sunday evening.

WATERVILLE.—A great revival is in progress by the labors of Evangelist Gale. About 100 persons have signified their determination to live Christian lives.

New Hampshire.

BARTLETT.—On account of the refusal of a majority of the pew-holders to relinquish their claim and make transfer to the parish recently incorporated, the executive committee has been instructed at a late meeting of the parish to make arrangements for building a new house to furnish better and larger facilities for doing its work. Of this there is great need, and it is hoped that the necessary effort will be crowned with complete success.

MARLBORO.—Mrs. C. J. Lawrence has just celebrated her 100th birthday. She has been a church member since she was nineteen years old. She is the oldest member of the Women's Cent Society, a missionary organization of the State. The residents made special demonstrations in her honor, including a parade past her home, and her pastor, Rev. J. S. Colby, preached a commemorative sermon.

WILTON.—During 1895 upwards of $200 were contributed in benevolence. The church voted at its annual meeting to put the six societies on its list for offerings the coming year, and in addition the Ministers' and Widows' Charitable Fund of the State. The society began the new year with all bills paid and over $100 in the treasury. The parsonage has been painted, much to its improvement.

ATKINSON.—This is the only church in town and includes nearly all the Christian residents. It covers the ground successfully and furnishes an example which might be profitably imitated in many other towns. The pastor, Rev. G. H. Scott, is now giving a series of Sunday evening lectures on the great reformers.

UNION.—During the past year general harmony has prevailed with increased attendance and interest in the Sunday school. An attractive and convenient parsonage has been built, much to the comfort and joy of the appreciative occupants.

MANCHESTER.—Detailed reports of the recent home missionary rally show that of the $1,000 raised by three churches, $536 came from the First Church and $100 from the women's union meeting in the afternoon.

CHARLESTOWN.—A Boys' Club has been organized for purposes of debate on important and interesting questions according to strictly parliamentary usages.

Vermont.

EAST ARLINGTON.—During the church service on a recent Sunday the barn of the pastor, Rev. A. C. Field, was entirely destroyed by fire, together with all its contents, including the family horse and carriages. The origin of the fire is unknown and there was no insurance.

BENNINGTON.—Second. The new board of trustees, in order to increase the present inadequate receipts, has decided to rent all the seats by a new appraisal. The sittings will be rented by auction.

BURLINGTON.—First. Benevolences last year were increased $500 over 1894, additions numbered twenty-seven, and a more earnest interest has been awakened.

NEW HAVEN.—A net gain of nine during last year increased the membership to 280. Fourteen new members in all were added.

Rev. Thomas Bickford of the First Church, Springfield, has been requested to withdraw his resignation.

Rhode Island.

WOONSOCKET.—Globe. The annual meeting showed a satisfactory record for the year. There were twenty-eight additions, all but seven on confession. The congregations are larger than ever before, the Sunday school has outgrown its present accommodations, the Armenian work is thoroughly organized and is systematically carried on, the missionary collections have been good. There is at present an agitation for an enlarged church building and as the membership has increased largely in the last two years it is a necessity. The church has an Armenian assistant preacher and the missionary society of the State has been asked to help with a Swedish assistant. Since the adoption of the free pew system the church has never run behind at the end of the year. Rev. J. C. Alvord is pastor.

Connecticut.

HARTFORD.—South. At the annual meeting last week a committee was appointed to consider the remodeling of the Sunday school rooms. The expenditures during the year for the poor were $211, leaving a balance of $536 in the fund. Over $1,700 were received from collections in 1895, and $1,661 were disbursed, leaving a balance with what was left over from last year of $1,216. One hundred dollars each were contributed by the Sunday school to the H. M. S. and the American Board.——Fourth. At the adjourned meeting last week the financial reports were presented, being on the whole satisfactory. The sum raised for the society was $7,632; for church administration, $641; for benevolence, $1,018; a total of $9,292. The cost of the various societies and work of the church was $9,920. The membership is 351, including 102 additions last year, fifty-eight on confession.

NEW HAVEN.—Howard Avenue. The church will continue the work which has been started by the influence of the Mills meetings. Nightly evangelistic meetings are being held this week with a series of sermons by the pastor, Rev. W. J. Mutch, on The Christian Life; What It Is and How to Achieve It. A deep and widespread interest prevails.——United. A largely attended reception was given the retiring assistant pastor, Rev. H. R. Miles, and his wife at the residence of Dr. Munger, on Wednesday evening of last week. The Men's Club service last Sunday evening was addressed by Dr. Alexander McKenzie of Cambridge, Mass., on The Church and Men.

SIMSBURY.—At the recent annual meeting a committee of seventeen was appointed to arrange for an appropriate celebration of the 200th anniversary of the organization of the church to be held next year. Work on the new chapel has been suspended for a few days, owing to litigations over the ownership of the land. In the meantime the repairs and alterations on the interior of the meeting house will be pushed, all the services for the present being held in the town hall.

TALCOTTVILLE.—The annual meeting was one of the most memorable ever held here. During the year there was a revival that affected the whole community. The church members were greatly quickened, the Sunday school was increased in numbers, and the C. E. Society has almost doubled its membership. Forty-four persons joined the church, thirty-three on confession. The benevolences were $1,878. Rev. F. R. Waite is pastor.

BRANFORD.—The pastor, Dr. T. S. Devitt, is gaining strength after a severe sickness with typhoid fever, and is able to occupy the pulpit once each Sunday. The church is in a prosperous condition. The benevolences this year were $1,166, a good gain over previous years. A new tablet has just been set in the meeting house in memory of Rev. T. P. Gillett, who was pastor for fifty-eight years.

CHAPLIN.—The additions last year were thirty-five, on confession thirty-three, making the membership 147. The church has given in benevolences $375, a great increase over the preceding year. Legacies for benevolent objects amounting to $900 have also been paid. The expenses of the home work have been $1,400. Under its present pastor, Rev. E. M. Frary, the church shows a strong and healthy growth.

NORTHFIELD.—The new parsonage is now completed and the pastor, Rev. F. L. Grant, and his bride have moved in. In addition to being the residence for the minister, it will also contain a public library for the use of the people of the community. The building is a pretty one and stands nearly opposite the meeting house.

STONINGTON.—Second. The last fellowship meeting of the season was held with this church last week Wednesday. There was a large attendance of ministers from the surrounding churches. Rev. J. R. Danforth of Mystic preached the sermon, and after lunch the afternoon was given up to discussions.

SOUTH COVENTRY.—Union religious services are being held by the Congregational and Methodist churches under the auspices of Rev. Messrs. B. F. Perkins and H. H. Martin. Many conversions are reported.

WINSTED.—A check for $370 was sent recently to the Armenian relief committee at Boston. The sum was raised by the different churches, also by private subscriptions.

PLANTSVILLE.—This church will unite with the Baptist church in a series of revival meetings. The evangelist who has been assisting Rev. B. Fay Mills at New Haven will have charge of the meetings.

NEW LONDON.—The late Charles D. Boss left $1,500 each to the C. H. M. S. and to the American Board. He also left $2,000 to the Second Church of this city, to be held in trust and the income applied to relieve the parish poor.

TORRINGTON.—Third. About $1,300 were given for church benevolences in 1895, much more than the previous year. The additions numbered twenty-nine, all but ten on confession. Rev. H. B. Roberts is pastor.

MIDDLE STATES.

New York.

NEW YORK.—Pilgrim. The present membership is 742, forty persons having been received during 1895, nineteen on confession. The Sunday school has nearly 700 members and the industrial school an equal number. The amount raised for home expenses and benevolence last year was $17,875, of which $12,948 were for expenses. The benevolences were for foreign, home and city missions. The special gifts to the church aggregated $1,000.

BROOKLYN.—The annual meeting of the New York and Brooklyn Church Extension Society, held last Thursday evening in the Clinton Avenue Church, was addressed by Drs. R. R. Meredith and R. S. Storrs.—Broadway Tabernacle. Six persons united with the church last Sunday, three of whom were Armenians, bringing letters from mission churches in their native land.

PELHAMVILLE.—Rev. T. B. Kellogg was ordained pastor, Jan. 14, by a council of fifteen churches and six ministers, of which Rev. H. A. Stimson, D. D., was moderator. The sermon was by Rev. A. J. F. Behrends, D. D., and other parts by Dr. H. A. Stimson and Rev. G. N. Kellogg, the candidate's brother. The young pastor has charge, also, of the new church enterprise in Vernon Heights, where he preaches every Sunday in a crowded schoolhouse. A flourishing Sunday school is organized there.

FLUSHING.—First. The annual reports show the total membership to be 222. The Sunday school contributed $243 to benevolent objects and the total of other benevolences was $273. The amount raised for expenses was $4,126, and the disbursements were $4,041. The additions last year were eleven, seven on confession. Dr. J. A. French is pastor.

New Jersey.

BOUND BROOK.—The roll of the church has recently been thoroughly revised, cutting down the membership by about thirty. The Ladies' Missionary Society enjoyed a delightful missionary tea last week. Interesting addresses were given by Dr. and Mrs. S. W. Howland. A stereopticon, the generous gift of certain of the gentlemen, is proving a great help in the work. The evening services are crowded and impressive. The spiritual tone is deepening. In connection with the Young People's Reading Club the pastor is giving a series of readings on foreign travel. These are illustrated by the stereopticon and are open to the public.

ORANGE.—The pastor, Rev. C. A. Savage, is continuing his series of evening discourses on Christ, the Miracle Worker. The new missionary library consists at present of forty-six volumes, some of them gifts and others loans. They are kept in a committee-room for ready reference. Eighteen persons have been added to the membership the past year, while the beneficence has amounted to about $2,500.

NEWARK.—First. The church committee has decided to take up a collection at least once a year for all seven of our denominational benevolent causes. That for the American Board will be taken at the last prayer meeting of each month, the others will be taken only once, on Sunday mornings. Forty-six persons have been added to its membership within a year, and forty to the Sunday school.

CHATHAM.—The church has suffered severely from the hard times, the membership being small and without any wealthy constituents. The past year, however, its benevolent contributions have been a little over six dollars per member.

WOODBRIDGE.—The church entertained the neighborhood ladies missionary meeting Jan. 22. Miss Ward of Turkey and Mrs. Bates of Natal were among the speakers. There was a large attendance of delegates, and the addresses were much enjoyed.

Pennsylvania.

PHILADELPHIA.—Central held its annual meeting Jan. 29. Sixty-four new members were received during the past year, thirty-one on confession. The membership Jan. 1 was 661. The benevolent offerings were $5,736, and the collections for home expenses and improvements $12,430, making a total of $18,166. A movement is on foot to secure a new Sunday school building, as the present quarters are inadequate. In the two weeks of special meetings just held D. L. Moody preached to an immense congregation one night, and Robert Nourse closed the series with his address on Why I Am Not An Infidel.

THE SOUTH.

Maryland.

BALTIMORE.—First. The annual reports show the church to be in good condition. The new year begins with no debt. The extra-cent-a-day plan has been adopted to enlarge some collections.—Canton. The Young People's Society reports were features at the annual meeting. That organization has become now a financial aid as well as a spiritual help to the church. A week's series of special meetings has just been held and seven or eight persons have given evidence of conversion.

Tennessee.

NASHVILLE.—Union. Since Rev. H. S. Burnett's death Rev. C. W. Dunn has been the nominal pastor. He is a professor in the theological department of Fisk University, and the preaching is assigned to the various members of the faculty. At its last communion the church received four on confession and one by letter. The attendance in the university is larger this year than last, and, considering the excessive drafts made upon the constituency of the churches in other directions, it has made a fair financial showing.

THE INTERIOR.

Ohio.

MADISON.—Rev. D. A. Strong, in his three years' work, has brought the annual meeting from an attendance of a score to a hundred by making it a church rally where all the auxiliary societies report. In 1895 the home expenses were $1,682. The benevolences were $316 in money and $312 in supplies sent to missionaries. During the present pastorate forty persons have united with the church.

CHATHAM CENTER.—Union services with the Methodist church have been held for four weeks, resulting in more than twenty conversions. Evangelist A. T. Reed assisted ten days. The pastor preaches in the afternoon at Lafayette, where he was recently generously remembered with specia gifts.

SPRINGFIELD.—First. After several months of experience with candidates the church has heartily voted to call Rev. E. A. Steiner of the Pacific Church, St. Paul, Minn., as the successor of Rev. S. P. Dunlap, now of Chicago. It is believed that Mr. Steiner will accept the call.

CLEVELAND.—Plymouth has two pastor's assistants, laymen, who are paid by the church, and their missionary work is bearing fruit in building up the congregation and Sunday school, with indications of a revival. They are conducting cottage prayer meetings.

NORWALK.—The annual meeting was attended by 120 persons. Reports showed a healthy activity and progress in all lines. Rev. T. J. Collier is pastor.

TROY.—Union meetings with the Methodist Church since the Week of Prayer have been greatly enjoyed by all Christians and had a helpful influence on the community.

Illinois.

ELGIN.—First. The annual reports are full of encouragement. The financial interests are in good care and the pecuniary obligations have been fully met. The total church expenses were $8,868, and the year closed with a balance in the treasury. There were received into fellowship during the year sixty-one persons. The present membership is 797. A harmonious spirit prevails, the women of the congregation showing special devotion and enterprise in the conduct of their work. Rev. J. H. Selden is pastor.—Prospect Street reports marked prosperity under the pastoral care of Rev. J. S Rood. The additions in 1895 were larger than in any previous year.

CHICAGO.—Pilgrim. Dr. G. R. Wallace of Portland, Ore., has accepted a call to this church in Englewood, the former pastor, Rev. A. L. Smalley, having just left for Jamestown, N. Y. Dr. Wallace was formerly an assistant of Dr. Gunsaulus in Plymouth Church and later pastor of the church in East Saginaw. He has been only a short time in Portland, but finds the Western coast uncongenial.

KANGLEY.—This church, Rev. J. R. Stead, pastor, has just received twenty-two new members, largely the result of the unremitting labors of the pastor, both in meetings and in the homes. The erection of horse sheds, which have just been completed, has promoted attendance among those living somewhat remote from the house of worship.

BARTLETT.—Rev. D. A. Evans, late of Lamoille, has accepted a call to this church, which has now a hopeful outlook. It is a vigorous nucleus in a foreign center, where the Sunday school and the Endeavorers are getting hold of the young people.

LA HARPE.—In December Evangelist McCord held special services, assisting Rev. Frederick Bowen. As a result twenty-three persons have united with the church, closing the year out of debt. There were about 200 persons present at the annual supper.

QUINCY.—First. At the annual meeting of the church, Rev. S. H. Dana, D. D., pastor, there were reported benevolences for the year of $4,073, expenses $5,786, additions thirty-four and total membership 446.

MINOOKA.—Rev. W. H. Chandler has been assisting Rev. P. M. France at this place, where with marked interest a score or more of persons have found Christ.

Indiana.

FAIRMOUNT.—It is gratifying to note that this church, which has suffered recently from internal dissensions, is again united. A mutual council, called by the church and pastor in October, advised a dissolution of the pastorate. The council's advice was accepted and the pastor left for Illinois. After being supplied for some time through the agency of the Home Missionary Society, during which period the Sunday school and prayer meeting were again started, Rev. W. F. Berger, late of Camden, N. Y., commenced a series of meetings. The result was a removal of the entire financial difficulty. The cases in court have been dismissed and the former pastor is paid. The congregations are large, and there have been several conversions. The church is anxious to have Mr. Berger become its pastor.

Rev. Thomas Smith has closed his meetings at Cardonia, where there were twenty-five conversions, and has begun work in Porter, assisting the pastor in a protracted meeting.——Rev. C. E. Grove, assisted by the singing evangelist, Mr. Jackson, is holding nightly meetings in Fremont. There is great spiritual interest.——Rev. H. A. Shearer has closed revival services at Hobart and gone to Ross to engage in special services. Meanwhile Mrs. Shearer supplies the home pulpit with acceptance.

Michigan.

PORT HURON.—First. For the second time within a year the church has assisted in the organization of a new church as the outgrowth of its mission Sunday school work. The new society was organized Jan. 24 with thirty-four members, twelve by letter from this church. The name Ross Memorial Church was adopted in memory of the late Dr. A. H. Ross, who assisted Mr. G. C. Meisel in starting the mission. Rev. B. T. Brundige has accepted a call to become the pastor.

MUSKEGON.—First. Additions last year were twenty-two, thirteen on confession, making the membership 301. Besides the expenses the church has raised $1,702.

At Mill Creek Sunday school and preaching services have been maintained throughout the year under the leadership of Mr. E. E. Stanton, a layman of the First Church, Grand Rapids.——The churches in Cedar Springs and East Nelson hope to retain the services of Rev. O. B. Thurston for another year. They have prospered and grown in numbers, but by reason of poor crops the people are depressed.

Wisconsin.

RACINE.— First. The annual roll-call was held Jan. 23. The women transformed the chapel into a beautiful reception-room, and the pastor, Rev. Charles Percival, and wife and the officers received in the evening. New members have been received at every communion save one during the year. The Sunday school has a membership of 500 in three divisions and fifty in the home department. The Y. P. S. C. E. and juniors have a combined membership of 210. The Boys' Brigade of twenty-five is growing. The Ladies' Aid Society raised $400, and $90 were used by them in beautifying the chapel. Harmony and good fellowship prevail throughout the church.

BELOIT.—Six churches of different denominations are uniting in a series of all day weekly fellowship meetings to be held at the different meeting houses in rotation. The central topic of the first meeting was Christian Fellowship, and the evening sermon was preached by Dr. G. R. Leavitt. The series will culminate in a union evangelistic effort with the assistance of Rev. Henry Ostrom.——Second. The Men's Sunday Evening Club, with short, practical sermons and fine music led by an orchestra of twelve pieces, completely fills the church, and the interest is deepening. Simultaneous cottage prayer meetings are held on Monday evenings in six or more parish neighborhoods.

Rev. K. A. Burnell, the veteran "children's evangelist," is making a rapid and busy tour through the State.

THE WEST.

Iowa.

SIOUX CITY.—First. Dr. M. W. Darling is just closing the tenth year of his pastorate, during which time the membership has grown from 150 to 525 and the financial and social strength accordingly. Unusual interest has been manifested since his return in October from a four months' vacation in Europe. The treasurer pays by check on the first day of every month the expenses of the month past, which means a great deal in these hard times. ——Mayflower. Rev. R. W. Jamison of the West Side is now preaching to a full house every service. ——Pilgrim has closed the fiscal year with an even balance sheet.

FAYETTE.—Special meetings have been conducted by Evangelist H. Cordner, in which the Methodist and Congregational churches united. As a result there were 300 professed conversions. Rev. J. E. Snowden received 107 persons into the church Jan. 26, baptizing seventy-five. About fifty young people have joined the C. E. Society. The work was well prepared before the coming of the evangelist and the people took hold of it with great enthusiasm.

FORT DODGE.—Since the coming of Rev. E. R. Latham, May 1, 1894, there has been a steady and strong growth in all lines of work. During 1895 forty-nine members were received and the net increase was twenty-seven, making the present membership 190, the largest in the history of the church. The home expenses were $1,600, the benevolences $306, and the average Sunday school attendance increased twenty-three per cent.

OTTUMWA.—South. Forty-one persons were added on confession and two by letter Jan. 26. These were about evenly divided as to sex. A number of them were boys from fifteen to seventeen years old, the fruits of last year's faithful work in the Sunday school and the Endeavor Society and of the recent special meetings conducted by the pastor, Rev. J. R. Beard. The people are much encouraged.

MITCHELL. — The church has been greatly strengthened by the three weeks' meetings recently held by Evangelist Packard, in which there were thirty professed conversions. Sixteen members were added Jan. 19. The C. E. Society has been holding meetings at the parsonage, but its membership has increased from nine to thirty-one, making it necessary to meet in the church building.

NEWTONVILLE. — This church and those in Quasqueton and Pleasant Prairie, associated under the pastoral care of Rev. A. J. Benton, closed the year with good prospects. Their pastor was remembered at Christmas with a fur overcoat. Special meetings are now in progress at Newtonville, in which Mr. Benton is assisted by Rev. G. L. Shull.

DUBUQUE.—Preparations are making for the coming of Evangelist Munhall to conduct a series of revival services under the direction of six or more of the leading churches, which have united for the work.

The Williamsburg church is rejoicing in a new pastor, Rev. Abram Jones, who comes from Carbondale, Pa.

Minnesota.

ROCHESTER.—The tenth anniversary of Rev. J. F. Taintor's pastorate has just been observed in special services. The Men's Club had the evening exercises in charge, when addresses were made by some of the leading laymen, reviewing the ten years. Many material improvements have been made, the church has grown numerically and has become a strong spiritual force in the city. The benevolences for the decade were $9,000.

LAKE CITY.—During the year the church has contributed nearly $300 for benevolence and the women have raised $331, thus practically paying the debt on the parsonage. Twenty-five new members were received during the year, nineteen on confession. Evangelist C. N. Hunt is holding a series of meetings.

MINNEAPOLIS.—Fifth Avenue. During the three years' pastorate of Rev. E. C. Whiting the church has more than doubled in some departments.—— Forest Heights. Rev. J. P. Dickerman's pastorate has been brief, but fruitful in material and spiritual results.

MAZEPPA.—There has been substantial progress here and at Zumbro Falls since the coming of Mr. J. E. Ingham. At his ordination, Jan. 21, Dr. E. P. Ingersoll preached the sermon, Rev. Messrs. W. H. Medlar, James Oakey, J. F. Taintor, L. L. West and J. A. Williams taking the other parts.

WADENA.—Since the coming of Rev. J. H. B. Smith and his wife, both of whom are ordained ministers, congregations have increased and there is growing religious interest. Mrs. Smith has assisted in the neighboring churches in evangelistic services with much acceptance.

NORWOOD.—Evangelist Davis of Lakeland has been holding revival services with the hearty cooperation of both pastor and people. About fifty signed cards, and at the last meeting all the persons present, numbering 200, placed themselves on the Lord's side.

STILLWATER.—A remarkable conversion occurred at one of the Sunday morning services, the prosecuting attorney, who was the head of the infidel fraternity, being converted and uniting with the church the following Sunday. It had an impressive influence upon the community.

VERNDALE.—A series of meetings has begun, Rev. James McAllister of Minneapolis assisting. The church has had many discouragements, having been pastorless for two years, but is making a brave effort to live.

PARK RAPIDS.—This church, pastorless for several months last year, is again disappointed by the resignation of Pastor W. J. Spire, who leaves on account of his health.

BURTRUM.—Revival seryices have been held, an evangelist assisting Rev. E. N. Ruddock. There have been a few conversions and the reclaiming of some Christians.

GRAND MEADOW.—A successful series of meetings has just closed, Evangelist A. W. Hare of the Moody Institute assisting. Several conversions among the young people have resulted.

MONTEVIDEO.—A union C. E. Society has been formed in the Congregational and Baptist churches. Rev. J. W. Todd is assisting at Granite Falls, where he was formerly pastor.

One of the most creditable church papers that comes to our table is the Congregational Visitor, successor to the Morley Church Visitor, devoted to our denominational interests in Duluth and Superior. News from the churches represented, one or more first-class articles and a serial story combine to make a stirring and readable monthly. The six Congregational pastors of these cities, with the wife of one of them, compose the editorial staff.

Nebraska.

OMAHA.—St. Mary's. The services under the auspices of the Men's Club continue with unabated interest. The members of the club maintain a steady interest in the work, the congregations are large, the musical features attractive and the pastor, Rev. S. W. Butler, improves the opportunity to give an earnest gospel talk.——Plymouth is much encouraged in meeting its part of the obligation as recommended by the late council. The holder of the mortgage has generously offered to contribute the interest due, and there is hopefulness all along the line.

CURTIS.—The annual meeting was made a time of reunion both for the members in town and for the branches in the country. Reports from all departments showed cheering progress, the Sunday school membership having been the largest in any year of its history and the Y. P. S. C. E. having done the most varied work yet undertaken. The accessions to the church during the year were thirty-seven. At the same meeting a fine communion service was presented by Dr. S. R Razee, one of the deacons. Rev. C. W. Preston is pastor.

BURWELL.—Rev. H. M. Evans has returned to his work after three weeks of special services at Taylor. The latter church will be greatly strengthened as a result of these meetings, there having been forty-two hopeful conversions in all, thirty-one uniting with the church Jan. 23. When the right hand of fellowship was extended to so large a number the impressive scene touched all hearts. Five more are already pledged to join and other names will be added. Mrs. Evans's singing added much to the effectiveness of the meetings.

MCCOOK.—The women tendered a reception on the evening of Jan. 21 to the pastor, Rev. H. L. Preston, and the members of the choir, which was a success in every respect. The rooms were tastefully and elaborately decorated. Mr. Preston has held a series of successful meetings at his country out-station, five miles distant. The church owes nothing except the loan on its building from the C. C. B. S., and payments on this are promptly made.

RIVERTON.—The evangelistic meetings held by Mr. Billings have refreshed and strengthened the members and have also reached a large number of non-church-goers. The pastor, Rev. S. Williams, who has been a little more than a year on the field, has accomplished a good work in the community, and Mrs. Williams has been very efficient in developing missionary interest. They remain here another year.

FRANKLIN.—The church gave a pleasant reception, Jan. 10, to the members who had joined during 1895. The annual meeting was held Jan. 7 and the next evening there was an address by Rev. W. P. Bennett on Mutual Relations and Interests of Churches and Academy. The pastor, Rev. G. W. Mitchell, has been conducting a series of evangelistic meetings at the Blake Schoolhouse, a few miles into the country.

NELIGH.—The adjourned annual meeting, held Jan. 20, was largely attended and gave promise of good work during the coming year. The pastor, Rev. J. F. Bacon, is making friends for himself in the town and among the students of Gates College. An entertainment was given Jan. 18 by the choir and friends of the church to raise funds to repair the pedal organ.

RISING CITY.—The weekly offering plan has been adopted for 1896 and promises good success. The pastor, Rev. C. J. Sage, has lately assisted the pastor of the Lutheran church at Surprise in special meetings, and will aid in evangelistic services at Silver Creek. He was also to speak before the Doane students on the Day of Prayer for Colleges.

FREMONT.—This church had a large gathering and helpful service at its annual meeting, 150 answering the roll-call. Rev. W. H. Buss is pastor. It will unite with the other churches of the city in evangelistic meetings during the month of February, the pastors doing the preaching.

CAMPBELL.—Rev. W. A. Davies, pastor here and at Bladen and Upland, lately held a three weeks' series of meetings at the schoolhouse south of this place, awakening widespread interest in the community.

North Dakota.

WILLISTON.—The new church building was dedicated Jan. 26 with appropriate services. It has been built under great difficulties, the pastor, Rev. George Extence, having showed great skill and persistence in securing its erection. Superintendent Simmons preached the sermon. There is not another church edifice within 100 miles except an abandoned one at the military reservation at Fort Buford.

MAYVILLE.—This church has one of the largest and best equipped Sunday schools in the State, its enrollment being 144. The building is hardly large enough to accommodate a school of this size. A valuable work has been done by the pastor, Rev. George Curtiss, who is now entering upon the seventh year of service here.

CANDO.—The Sunday school has more than doubled within a year under the efficient lead of Rev. C. A. Mack, the present pastor. This field has been difficult and discouraging but is now more promising. The church has been quickened by a series of meetings just closed.

SANBORN.—Rev. J. R. Beebe accepted, Jan. 26, a unanimous and hearty call to take charge of this church for a year. It is a wide field for work and Mr. Beebe seems admirably fitted for it.

FORMAN.—Rev. J. H. Kevan has been called to a church in the Black Hills. The people would be sorry to have him leave and it is hoped that he may decide to remain.

WIMBLEDON.—Rev. W. R. Whidden, assisted by Evangelist Gimblett, is holding special meetings and arousing considerable interest here and at Kensaw.

OBERON.—Successful evangelistic services have been held in which Rev. O. P. Champlin was assisted by Rev. W. H. Gimblett.

South Dakota.

DE SMET.—This field, under the ministrations of Rev. E. J. Sarkis, is in an encouraging condition. Since the meetings of Miss Henry fourteen persons have been received into the church and more will soon unite. Fifteen members have recently joined the C. E. Society, and the Sunday school numbers eighty-nine. A Bible club of eighteen members was organized Jan. 26, Superintendent Daley giving an address on that occasion upon the importance of studying the Scriptures.

A series of fellowship meetings was held last week at Worthing.

PACIFIC COAST.

California.

LOS ANGELES.—First. The organ is being set up and is a marvelous piece of construction. The church is making steady progress along all lines. ——Plymouth. Rev. N. T. Edwards, recently of Bloomington, Ill., was greeted by a large congregation as he began his work here.——Bethlehem proposes to place a paid deaconess in the field and to extend its institutional features.——Central Avenue. This church, situated in a new and rapidly growing part of the city, was gathered by Rev. C. S. Vaile, recently pastor of Plymouth Church. It numbers twenty-five members, has been recognized by council and is in a fair way to obtain a fine property free of debt.——Pico Heights began the new year with an increase of fifteen members.

STOCKTON.—This church begins the year with a small balance in the treasury, being probably the only one so fortunate in this city of 15,000 people. For some time the congregations have been steadily increasing and at nearly every communion season during the past year there have been additions. Of the debt of $250 to the theological seminary the pastor contributed $150, the C. E. Society $40 and the balance was given by the congregation.

OAKLAND.—Justice and Mrs. Walter F. Frear of Honolulu are here on a brief visit to their parents. The former, recently promoted to first associate justice of the Supreme Court of the Hawaiian republic, is a member of the Central Union Church, of which his father was pastor from 1870–80. He speaks highly of the present prosperous condition of the church under Rev. D. P. Birnie.

SOQUEL.—The annual reports were encouraging, eighteen persons having been added to the membership. By a unanimous vote Rev. A. B. Snider was given a call, which he accepted the following Sunday. Both he and his wife have in their several months of service greatly endeared themselves to the people.

SONOMA.—The young men's class has presented the Sunday school with a new supply of hymn books. Under the leadership of J. W. Roberts, a business man of San Francisco, who spends his Sundays on the ranch, the young men are gradually being led into the fold.

REDLANDS.—First. The church grounds have been beautified by private munificence. A legacy bequeathed by Mrs. Edna Keagle has been forwarded by Supt. J. T. Ford to the C. H. M. S.

During the Week of Prayer the First Church, Pasadena, united with other churches in what proved to be most helpful services.——Under the pastorate of Rev. L. H. Frary the membership of Pilgrim Church, Pomona, has grown from seventy-nine to 279.——A council has been called to install Rev. Allen Hastings as pastor at Rialto and Bloomington.——Mayor Hilton has held special services at Ventura and Nordhoff.——Fifty members have been added at Escondido within the year.——Eighteen churches in southern California report 111 additions received on the first Sunday in the new year. ——Sixty chairs have recently been added to the sittings of the Lorin church, Rev. J. D. Foster, pastor.——Severe storms compelled the closing of special meetings at Sierraville, where there were indications of interest.

Washington.

WALLA WALLA.—First. At the annual reunion a thank-offering of $150 was made to meet the small deficit for the year. This is one of the four or five self-supporting churches in the State. Twenty-seven new members have been received, and with a total membership of 150 it has given $195 to home missions during the past year, the full amount raised for benevolences being $376. The church maintains two Sunday schools in out-districts and is doing all in its power to extend the good work. The Eastern Washington and Northern Idaho Association will meet here April 7–9.

Whenever I meet a man who disbelieves in God, and thinks he has not any reason for accepting the Christian idea, I invariably find on inquiry that it is either because he has mixed up the Christian doctrine [of God] with the Biblical doctrine, or else he has no idea of the Christian doctrine as such, but simply knows the dogmatic form, the metaphysical position which was assumed by historical Christianity.—R. F. Horton, D. D.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

After today all that has been uncertainty will be certainty regarding the new government loan. Money, which has ruled tight, will be easier, for funds have been accumulated and locked up for the purpose of subscribing to the new issue of bonds, and this hoard will seek employment in the open market.

If the loan is a success the credit of the nation will be established on a higher basis and foreign capitalists' respect will increase in proportion, and this will cause probably the repurchase of many of the securities which they have sent back to us during the past two or three years.

The rise in wheat and iron has acted as a stimulus to other branches and the spring season is looked forward to with much hope. Some important industries are quiet, however, as boots and shoes, cotton goods and woolens. Cuts have been made by jobbers at trade centers in cotton goods, which cuts have demoralized the market.

The exports of wheat and corn, particularly the latter, continue in large volume and the shipments of cotton show a gradual increase. Bank clearings continue comparatively light, reflecting both the effect of the recent December panic and the policy of waiting for the settlement of the bond issue. The stock market for the past week has ruled strong. Little pressure to sell has been one of the features, and there is also steady buying of specialties by interested parties.

THE DAY OF PRAYER FOR COLLEGES.

At Yale prayer meetings, class and union, were held, and in the afternoon Rev. B. Fay Mills preached.

At Lasell Seminary the entire day was given to religious services. Rev. C. M. Southgate of Auburndale delivered one of the addresses.

Rev. Dr. Alexander McKenzie preached at Wellesley, Rev. Dr. George A. Gordon at Williams, Rev. Dr. H. S. Hunt at Wesleyan, Rev. Dr. A. J. F. Behrends at Smith and Rev. N. E. Wood at Brown.

At Amherst the alumni prayer meeting in the morning was as usual a deeply impressive service, greetings being given in person and by letter from graduates in professional schools and in active life. For the first time in many years Prof. W. S. Tyler was absent on account of the infirmities of his advanced age. In the afternoon Dr. C. M. Lamson preached.

In Adelbert College class prayer meetings were held and also a general prayer meeting of both students and professors. A public meeting was also held in which Rev. Dr. Paul F. Sutphen gave an able and enthusiastic address upon The Growth of the Best Manhood. In the College for Women class prayer meetings were also held and addresses were given by Rev. Dr. A. G. Upham and by Rev. Dr. H. C. Haydn. Dr. Upham spoke upon the responsibility of privileges and Dr. Haydn upon the formation of a college settlement by the graduates and students of the College for Women in connection with a parish house which is soon to be built in Cleveland.

EDUCATION.

— Vassar College receives $8,000 from Miss Helen Gould.

— Redfield College, South Dakota, suffered a loss of $30,000 by fire Jan. 27.

— Benzonia College at Benzonia, Mich., has opened a university extension department with Rev. J. G. Rodger at the head. He is a graduate of Yale and has had postgraduate training at Harvard, Leipsic and Edinburgh Universities.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

A letter conveying New Year's greetings was sent to Dr. Clark by the society in Liegnitz, Germany, every member of which signed the letter, the pastor adding a personal postscript in Latin.

During a minstrel show arranged in the penitentiary at Huntsville, Tex., by some of the inmates for their amusement, the prisoners' society was holding a prayer meeting that resulted in the conversion of two men.

A series of studies for Juniors has been prepared by the Junior superintendent of Allegheny County, Pa. The first number consists of questions and answers giving a summary of the history in the Pentateuch. Junior workers that may be interested in these helps can obtain a copy by sending a stamp to Mrs. Ella H. Jolly, Stanton Avenue, Pittsburg, Pa.

Full reports from local unions should be made to Secretary Baer before June 15, as a basis for deciding who shall receive the prize banners to be awarded at Washington. One banner is offered for the union doing the best work in Christian citizenship, one to the union forming the most new societies during the year, and the third to the union reporting the largest number of members systematically giving not less than one-tenth of their income.

The convention of the District of Columbia, held Jan. 17-19, was naturally most enthusiastic and successful. The new hall in which it was held was used on that occasion for the first time as an auditorium. The Doxology was the first hymn heard in it. Washington, '96, was, of course, the most prominent theme throughout all the sessions. Convention committees had charge of their appropriate branches of work at these meetings, and were all brought together for the first time Saturday evening. The official flags were largely used in the decorations, and the first that was made was presented to Mr. Frank C. Bliss, the designer; the second to Dr. Clark; and the third to Mr. Miles M. Shand, president of the District of Columbia Union. These three flags were beautifully made of silk. Each of the committees was then called to rise in turn and receive from Secretary Baer a fitting Scripture motto. Frequent mention was made of the motto of the general committee, "Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord of hosts," which was repeated by all at the close of the consecration service.

A contemporary has thoughtfully opened a Christmas Gift Exchange, the following extract from which will touch a responsive chord in many a clerical breast:

This is the first object in view in these conferences, which are being held here and there throughout New England. Among the participants in the Cambridge series of meetings were Dr. J. L. Hill, Rev. # A Cloud of Witnesses.

Most people are skeptical about the cure of Asthma, Catarrh, Bronchitis and similar diseases, and this advertisement is intended for any "doubting Thomas" who is a reasonable person. Are you open to conviction? We know from thousands of letters (hundreds from readers of this paper, in which we have advertised for months) that Hyomei, the new and wonderful Australian "Dry-Air" treatment, comprised in

Bronchitis.

Temple Court, New York City, November 26, 1894.

My Dear Mr. Wyckoff: On your suggestion, I procured from your friend, Mr. Booth, one of his Pocket Inhalers. It has worked like a charm. The Bronchitis has entirely disappeared, and, thanks to you, is the first thing I have found in ten years that has given permanent relief. There is certainly a great field for a remedy having such merit.

Cordially yours, F. H. WILSON.

[The above is to the late W. O. Wyckoff, Esq., President Remington Typewriter Co.]

Colds.

Boston, Mass., July 30, 1895.

In my family of three we have used the Hyomei, and have been pertectly satisfied with the result. None of us have had a cold since we have had it. I believe it is a great preventitive as well as a cure.

Rev. STANLEY SEARING, 10 Carter Street.

Loss of Voice.

Brooklyn, N. Y., February 1, 1895.

Booth's Pocket Inhaler works like a charm. The first inhalation gave relief. It is a blessing to humanity, and I am sorry it is not better known. I add my name to the "Pass-It-On-Society."

Sincerely yours, Rev. J. M. FARRAR, D.D.

Asthma.

Deer Park Parsonage, Baltimore, Md., Oct. 7, 1895.

The Pocket Inhaler came Friday morning. Mrs. Honey had been suffering severely for three weeks daily with Asthma. As soon as the Inhaler came, she began using it, and after a few inhalations, the Asthma ceased, and now, Tuesday, it has not returned. She has had this trouble since she was seven years old, and is now forty. We have spent hundreds of dollars in search of relief, purchasing everything we saw advertised.

Rev. GEORGE H. HONEY.

Catarrhal Deafness.

Syracuse, N. Y., March 6, 1895.

Having been personally relieved from Catarrh through the use of an Inhaler charged with Hyomei, I take pleasure in recommending it most highly. Mr. H. H. Warner, of Rochester, of Warner's Safe Cure fame, according to his own statement, made in the presence of a friend of mine, Dr. Frank E. Howe, Barrett House, Broadway, New York, has been cured of Catarrh and Catarrhal Deafness of several years' standing through the use of Hyomei.

E. G. WYCKOFF, No. 209 Genesee Street.

Chronic Cough.

Manchester, Mass., March 26, 1895.

Inclosed find $1.00 for Pocket Inhaler outfit. The one I bought of you for my mother did her a world of good. She writes me that her cough is completely cured. Success to you.

ABBIE J. GANNET.

Catarrh.

Boston, Mass., April 20, 1894. (Care Jordan, Marsh & Co.)

I had Catarrh for twenty years, and the last ten years (passed in this great establishment) I suffered fearfully. It extended to my throat; the base of my tongue was badly affected. I could not sleep with my mouth closed. I began using Hyomei in December, and in two weeks I was entirely — and now, after four months and no return of the disease, I can say, permanently — cured. I am going to ask the head of this firm, Mr. Eben D. Jordan, to indorse this statement. ELVIRA E. B. GIBSON.

Indorsed, EBEN D. JORDAN.

Consumption.

Buffalo, N. Y., August 21, 1895.

In thirty years' experience in the practice of medicine, I have never given my name in support of a proprietary remedy; for I have never seen one that performed all and more than was claimed for it, until I met with Hyomei, which I indorse with all my heart (professional ethics to the contrary notwithstanding), for I believe it a duty I owe to humanity. Since testing Hyomei in Laryngitis, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, Hay Fever, and last, but far from being least, Galloping Consumption, in an advanced stage, which by the use of the Exhaler one hour a day, and the Pocket Inhaler ten minutes every hour, with no other medicine, in four weeks, was transformed into an assured recovery; I believe in it for itself for what it has done, and I gladly add my name to the "Pass-It-On-Society."

Hyomei is a purely vegetable antiseptic, and destroys the germs and microbes which cause diseases of the respiratory organs.

The air, thoroughly charged with Hyomei, is inhaled through the Pocket Inhaler at the mouth, and, after permeating the minutest air cells, is slowly exhaled through the nose. It is aromatic, delightful to inhale, and gives immediate relief. It stops all spasmodic coughing instantly, clears the voice, expands the lungs, and increases the breathing capacity.

Pocket Inhaler Outfit, Complete, by Mail, $1.00, consisting of pocket inhaler (made of deodorized hard rubber, beautifully polished), a bottle of Hyomei, a dropper, and full directions for using. ## WOMAN'S BOARD PRAYER MEETING.

CONGREGATIONAL HOUSE, BOSTON, JAN. 31.

Mrs. E. W. Greene read Gen. 32, directing attention especially to Jacob's prevailing prayer and spoke upon the calendar topic for the day: Prayer for those who are not interested in foreign missions. Prayer was mentioned as the chief means and many instances of personal experience were given where those present stated that they had received direct answers to definite prayers: the lost had been found, relief was found forthcoming, supplies had been received, books needed by a college student who had no money were supplied, business perplexities were made clear.

Among the methods used to win others' interest these were mentioned: personal invitations to a missionary reception, influencing mothers through the children and, notably, the efficiency of the "cradle-roll," definite effort in behalf of an individual, inviting missionaries to address ladies' clubs, such experiment being fully justified by the interest aroused by Mrs. De Forest and others who have addressed clubs upon other topics than missions, but whose knowledge has been gained in missionary work and who are known to be closely identified with it. Successful classes in current events were mentioned as furnishing the opportunity to learn a great deal of the mission side of the world's work of today and as proving the prominent place which the development of missions has in any comprehensive view of what now transpires. Mrs. Judson Smith alluded to the close connection between the executive committee of the Woman's Board and its constituency and spoke of the letter which the committee has recently sent out (through the branches) to all the auxiliaries, with an appeal to each auxiliary member to "pledge herself to make an earnest effort to secure by April 1 as member of the auxiliary one woman hitherto not identified with the work of the Board."

BOSTON MINISTERS' MEETING.

A large audience assembled in Pilgrim Hall last Monday morning to listen to the review of Dr. Gordon's book, The Christ of Today, by Dr. A. H. Plumb. After praising Dr. Gordon's literary style, vividness of imagination and command of language he said that the thought was often lamentably obscure. These writings set forth the Trinitarian view of the person of Christ, the Unitarian view of the work of Christ, which is declared to be purely educational and not at all redemptive. On this point the speaker claimed that Dr. Gordon goes far beyond most Unitarians of the present, and quoted from eminent Unitarians in the past to prove that his views were more advanced than those of the original apostles of Unitarianism. He then stated that the book was Universalist in its teachings as to the result of Christ's work, thus setting aside the Bible, and in its treatment of the scenes of the last judgment absolutely contradicting the Master.

At the close of Dr. Plumb's remarks Mr. Walcott Fay moved that, as a matter of courtesy to Dr. Gordon, the committee be requested to secure a speaker of equal standing with Dr. Plumb to give a review in favor of the book. An amendment was offered to the effect that Dr. Gordon be invited to speak on the points raised by Dr. Plumb, but it was generally conceded that this would not be considered fitting by Dr. Gordon, and the whole matter was tabled.

A resolution protesting against the indignity offered Bishop Arnett last week was adopted as follows:

Resolved, That the Congregational ministers of Boston and vicinity, assembled in Pilgrim Hall Feb. 3, desire to express their regret at the spirit and the deed which denied to Bishop B. W. Arnett of the A. M. E. Church the hospitality of three leading Boston hotels. Bishop Arnett's elevated character and attainments entitle him to the highest consideration. Our hotels are not wont to demand any test on the part of their guests which he did not furnish. We can only infer that he was discriminated against because of his African descent. To say that such discrimination is dishonorable to those who make it is to put the case very mildly. We hope that it does not represent the Boston public. We emphatically declare that the indignity to Bishop Arnett utterly misrepresents our conception of Christianity, humanity, American citizenship and civil rights. And we do not see that any apologies can wipe out the dishonor attaching to the doers of this act. We most emphatically protest that the like should not occur again in Boston or in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

MADAME PORTER'S BALSAM

"To-morrow may be too late!" This lady believed that. It's common sense.

She has made hosts of friends, because she knew how to prepare this Balsam, and they say: "Had it not been for 'Madame Porter's,' the cold and cough would have been worse, perhaps fatal." Madame Porter's portrait has appeared for sixty years on every bottle of Balsam sold, and has become familiar in homes without number. It is a Balsam perfectly safe and pleasant to take. Everybody likes it.

CONSUMPTION.

A scientific discussion of this dread disease, its cause, treatment and cure, by Dr. Robert Hunter, the father of inhalation and most eminent lung specialist of the day. After a period of research extending over half a century, Dr. Hunter explains his perfected discovery of a specific remedy for consumption, and proves its success not only scientifically but through the grateful testimonials of his patients, Dr. Hunter was for forty years the sole advocate of the germ theory of consumption, which is now accepted by the medical profession throughout the world as the only correct theory — thus establishing beyond doubt his superior knowledge of this disease. # HER FACE HER FORTUNE.

Good Looks Women's Strongest Attraction.

How to Have a Clear and Brilliant Complexion.

Here is the Secret of How to Look Your Best.

Women, since the beginning of time, have ruled by their beauty. It is at once their pride and their power. By the fascination of their beauty they attract and conquer. It is therefore a woman's first thought, aye, her first duty, to establish and maintain her beauty in its highest perfection.

All women are by nature beautiful. Beauty does not consist of regular features. Many of the most noted beautiful women of the world's history had decidedly irregular features. Beauty means attractiveness, and attraction is commanded by clearness of skin, pureness of color, brilliancy of complexion, vivacity of expression, sparkling eyes and rosy lips.

All these attributes of beauty must come from within the system. No external application, no face powders, washes or preparations can give anything but an artificial look. Beauty must first of all be natural; it must glow in the skin from within.

The reader's first thought is, how can I improve and maintain my beauty?

Easily enough. First and foremost, you must have good health. By health is not meant that you feel fairly well, you must get your nerves strong and vigorous, for nothing marks and lines the face like the worry of weak nerves; you must get your blood enriched and pure, for it is the blood which gives that natural rosy glow to face and lips which no art can imitate. You must keep stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels in natural activity, for the sluggish action of these organs causes the skin to become dark, sallow, bilious and clogged with impurities and humors.

To do all these things, to keep the system in perfect condition, use that greatest of modern discoveries, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. It will not only give you perfect health, but the beauty which you so ardently desire. It will make your skin pure, clear and fair, your features full and plump, give you a brilliant complexion with rich, red lips, and put the glow of health and color into your cheeks.

To prove this to your complete satisfaction, read these few of the vast number of enthusiastic testimonials received from grateful women who know from their personal experience the wonderful effects of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy on their complexions. Then follow their advice and example and you will be as pleased as you are surprised at the wonderful improvement in your looks.

Mrs. Mary Frances Lytle, of 2 Hunter Alley, Rochester, N. Y., says:—

"I was very pale and delicate—had no color. I took Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy and now I am well and strong, my face is plump and cheeks red, and my complexion pure."

Miss Alice Hopkins, of 632 So. Tenth St., Philadelphia, Pa., says:—

"There was an entire loss of healthy color in my face. After taking Dr. Greene's Nervura my system was toned up, the natural color returned and the effect on my complexion was most satisfactory."

Mrs. Wm. Bartels, 239 East 87th St., New York City, says:—

"Dr. Greene's Nervura made a wonderful improvement in my health and that dark, sallow look left my face. My friends hardly knew me. I have gained in flesh and am like a different person."

Mrs. C. S. Allen, of 128 Pearl St., Portland, Me., says:—

"There was hardly any more color in my face and hands than in chalk. Dr. Greene's Nervura made me well and restored my natural color and complexion."

Mrs. Elizabeth Brown, of 236 Hartwell's Ave., Providence, R. I., says:—

"My face broke out with pimples and I was almost giving up in despair when I got Dr. Greene's Nervura. Now I am well and strong, thanks to this wonderful remedy."

Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy is purely vegetable and perfectly harmless and is the discovery and prescription of the successful physician, Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., who can be consulted free, personally or by letter.

HOME MISSIONARY FUND.

JAN. 14, 1896.

I have been the recipient of your very valuable paper through the generosity of some friend's gift to the Home Missionary Fund. I am still unable to subscribe for the paper. This is my third year in the drought belt. A part of two years' salary is yet unpaid. A family of seven to support, trying to keep two in college by their working for board. Only by your continued courtesy can I continue to have the help of The Congregationalist.

The publication of such letters as the above always brings a number of inquiries for the address of the writer. In a sense these communications are confidential, and usually we do not think it wise to comply with the request. Moreover, letters we print are only specimens of others received, and these cases, thus given publicity, are like scores of others who through this fund are recipients week by week of The Congregationalist. We repeat what we have said before. A second-hand copy of the paper to such workers is only a partial benefit, so much of the matter is of current value, and the home missionary, above all others, needs the best equipment for his work.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

REV. HENRY S. DE FOREST, D. D.

The life of this gifted and useful man was terminated suddenly by a stroke of apoplexy on Monday, Jan. 27, at his home in Talladega, Ala. He has suffered for several years past by impaired health, but the end came as unexpected as it was sudden. Notwithstanding the pressure of ill health, he has devoted his energies of mind and body faithfully to the work assigned him.

Dr. Henry Swift DeForest was of Huguenot descent, being the seventh generation from France, his ancestor, with other Walloons, reaching New Amsterdam (New York) in 1636. He was born in South Edmeston, N. Y., March 17, 1833. He entered and graduated with the class of 1857 at Yale College, and his theological education was obtained at Yale and Union Theological Seminaries. He was tutor in mathematics in Beloit College and in Latin at Yale. He was ordained at New Haven, Aug. 2, 1863, and served as chaplain in the Eleventh Connecticut Volunteers during the Civil War. He was called to the pastorate of Plymouth Congregational Church, Des Moines, Io., Oct. 17, 1866, where he remained until October, 1879, when he accepted the call to the presidency of Talladega College, a position he has filled with great acceptance to the day of his death. He was married Aug. 25, 1869, to Miss Anna M. Robbins, daughter of Rev. Alden B. Robbins, D. D., of Muscatine, Io.

Dr. DeForest was a man of fine personal presence, affable in manner, gifted as a speaker, a scholar and a man of practical affairs. His life has been varied, but in whatever position he has been employed he has soon won the confidence and esteem of those with whom he has been associated. As president of Talladega College he has devoted all his powers to his work and has been successful in obtaining funds, and, if health had been spared to him, he could beyond doubt have secured an endowment for the institution. A good man has gone to his reward.

The funeral service was held at Sherburne, N. Y., Jan. 30, Professor Owen of Talladega and Rev. Messrs. William A. Trow and Samuel Miller officiating. The interment was at New Berlin, N. Y., the former family home.

REV. DANIEL S. TALCOTT, D. D.

Dr. Talcott died in Bangor, Jan. 19, aged eighty-three. He was born in Newburyport, Mass., March 7, 1813; graduated at Amherst in 1831, at Andover 1834; was assistant instructor in Hebrew at Andover till 1836; was ordained pastor at Sherborn, Mass., Dec. 7, 1836. In 1839 he became professor of Biblical literature in Bangor Seminary, and held this position till 1881, when, on account of failing health and advancing years, he retired. He received the degree of D. D. from Waterville in 1853 and from Bowdoin in 1858.

Dr. Talcott was a rare scholar and patient teacher and will be remembered with affection by multitudes of graduates whom he influenced in the most critical period of life. His library contains books in about twenty languages, with all of which he was more or less familiar. He spent much time with his books and came to regard them with real and almost personal affection. He retained his interest in events, and especially in the literary world, and during the last few months read and discussed some of the most scholarly books with as much keenness, relish and discrimination as in years past. Those who knew him appreciated his gentleness, courtesy, warm sympathy and simple piety and will miss his companionship.

REV. WILLIAM H. EVANS.

Mr. Evans, who died Jan. 26, in Big Lake, Minn., was born in London, Eng. In 1863 he enlisted in the United States navy and served in the Civil War. Converted at a German evangelical meeting, he joined that body, prepared himself for the ministry, and for several years acceptably supplied churches of that sect in Ohio. His Congregational ministry began at Big Lake in 1892, where his work has met with marked success. Mr. Evans's career was a striking example of triumph over early surroundings and difficulties.

REV. DR. WILLIAM H. FURNESS,

Who died Jan. 30, was one of the most distinguished, as well as the oldest, of the ministers of the Unitarian denomination. He was born in Boston in 1802, was graduated at Harvard in 1820 and was pastor of the First Unitarian Church in Philadelphia from 1825 till his death. After fifty years of service he became pastor emeritus. He was the oldest graduate of the Boston Latin School and the only surviving member of any class in Harvard up to 1820, though Rev. William H. Russell, who graduated six years later, was born in 1800.

GEORGE FREDERICK MAGOUN, D. D.

Few men have been more influential in any of the new States of the West, or longer active in public life, than Dr. Magoun. Born in Bath, Me., 1821, graduated from Bowdoin in 1841, ordained to the ministry in 1848, he has been in Christian work in Wisconsin, Illinois and Iowa for more than half a century. He held pastorates at Shullsburg, Wis., Galena, Ill., and in Iowa at Davenport and Lyons. He became connected with Iowa College at Grinnell in 1862, and was chosen as its first president in 1864. This position he held till 1884. Since then he has lived most of the time in Grinnell, where he died Jan. 30.

Dr. Magoun was a familiar figure in all national gatherings of Congregationalists. He was a corporate member of the American Board, and till recently was one of the most prominent men on the platform of its annual meetings. He was strongly conservative in his theology, an able preacher, always welcome in his prime in the pulpits of the largest churches. His life work was done as president of Iowa College, where the memory of his wisdom, self-sacrifice and untiring energy will be more and more appreciated with the increasing age and reputation of the institution.

Administered by attaching an instrument to the flesh, which aids the system to take on Oxygen from the Atmosphere, to the utmost amount the system can use.

IT IS A TREATMENT OF THE BLOOD, and by purifying, revitalizing, and loading it with Nature's Nerve Food, ejects DISEASE, by removing its causes. It applies of necessity to all diseases as no other treatment ever has.

THE OXYGEN COSTS NOTHING, the price of the instrument being all the expense necessary for years. It can be used by the entire family.

"I sought the aid of a dozen of the best physicians I could find, but they helped me very little. I also tried Compound Oxygen thoroughly, and the Electric battery, but they helped me very little. On Dec. 17, 1891, I commenced using the Electropoise, and continued it about four months. During this time my disabilities were greatly removed. In the course of a year from the time I commenced using it I enjoyed almost perfect health, which has continued to this date. I have great faith in it." REV. J. H. MANSFIELD, Athol, Mass.

The State Chemist of Massachusetts, who has examined for the State Board of Health all the chief baking powders of commerce, says:

"The amount of leavening gas yielded by the Royal Baking Powder was greater than that given off by any other powder. The Royal was found also the purest of those examined, and contained no alum or objectionable ingredient. The Royal is unquestionably the best."

The market is full of low-grade baking powders, mostly made from alum, which are urged upon consumers by parties interested in the great profits which they yield. They are unwholesome in practical use, expensive, and should be avoided under all circumstances.

Baking powders sold, either wholesale or retail, at a lower price than "Royal," are almost invariably made from alum, and therefore of inferior quality and dangerous to health.

Why use Pond's Extract?

Because—

Dr. J. J. THOMAS says: "It is incomparably superior to any extract of Hamamelis I have ever used."

Dr. O. G. RANDALL says: "Nothing can equal Pond's Extract. I have tested others, and yours is four times as strong as the best."

Dr. H. F. MERRILL says: "It is far superior to any I have used in strength and purity."

Boston Thursday 13 February 1896

WILLISTON WALKER, D. D.

Waldo Professor of Germanic and Western Church History at Hartford Seminary.

CONGREGATIONALISM has had a history of over three hundred years since its beginnings in England. It has been more than two centuries and a half on American soil. It settled and molded New England, and through its influence on the political institutions of that region it has contributed far beyond any other polity to the fashioning of the political ideals of the United States. It has sought more than any other polity on American soil to promote education. It has been forward in missionary activity. It has maintained a high, strenuous ideal of the Christian life. It has been a prime force in the political, intellectual and spiritual development of America. But while its adherents are thankful for the heritage of noble men and worthy deeds into which they have entered, they believe that it has a greater mission yet to perform than anything which it has done in the past.—From Professor Walker's History of the Congregational Churches in the United States.

"I have read with interest your itinerary. Your plans are so well made I cannot think of any suggestion which we could make that would add. I wish for you a most prosperous trip and one that I am sure will be of great profit to missionary enterprise."

In appropriate succession to our late Church Music Tour to the world's center of church music, and our delightful pilgrimage to the places memorable in the Church's history, we have arranged for a tour to the great centers of missionary work, on the occasion of the centennial of the sailing of the first missionaries to the South Sea Islands. The same care in all details as to comfort, and similar rare facilities for pleasure and profit, which marked the other tours, will render this a very unusual opportunity for visiting these beautiful and romantic portions of the world. Party limited to twenty-five. To start from New York April 8th, and to return about September 1st. Fee, $1,350. For particulars, address

PROF. WILLISTON WALKER, whose portrait appears on our cover-page this week, belongs distinctively to the younger generation of men who are today shaping and extending American Congregationalism. Though he has but recently passed his thirty fifth birthday, he has by thorough and brilliant work in the field of scholarship and by the singleness and force of his moral and Christian purpose earned the respect and admiration of a large and increasing number of persons throughout the country. His collegiate course at Amherst College and his seminary training at Hartford were supplemented by instruction in Germany, from which he returned to teach at Bryn Mawr and then to take up his work at Hartford Seminary. To this he is now giving the entire energy of a nature that loves study for its own sake and that is also peculiarly gifted with the power to impart to others the knowledge he has acquired and the habits of study through which such knowledge is attained. Professor Walker has also won distinction as an author, his most notable publications thus far being Creeds and Platforms of Congregationalism and The History of Congregationalism, which appears in the series on different denominations published by the Christian Literature Co. Our own readers will be able to form an estimate of Professor Walker's scholarly and popular qualities by following the valuable series of articles on The Historic Creeds which begins in this issue.

Our missionary societies are struggling in sloughs of debt, and the worst of it is that, while one foot is being lifted out by earnest friends, the other sinks deeper than before. In each of the three larger societies, as is the case with the Home Missionary Society—whose condition Dr. Stimson describes on another page—the gifts of the living have been considerably increased in the hope of canceling the debt, but they have not been sufficient to balance the great falling off of the legacies. When a shrinkage in values comes the dead cannot be moved by the pressure of present needs to increase their gifts. These societies, we fear, will continue to suffer severely through every time of business depression till they adopt the method of distributing their legacies over a term of years, thus, in a measure, equalizing the amounts yearly at their disposal. This is the method adopted by the Sunday School and Publishing Society, and, though it has been obliged to cut down its appropriations and restrict its work, it has been able to do this gradually, with much less suffering to its workers and its work than if it had suddenly found itself, with a depleted treasury, crying for help.

As a result of the disposition shown by the officials of the Baptist Young People's Union to draw the color line and refuse to Negroes their rights as men and Christians, the large and flourishing local chapter of that organization identified with Tremont Temple in Boston has withdrawn from the Union and become a Society of Christian Endeavor. Dr. Lorimer, the pastor, heartily approves of this significant action, which could scarcely be otherwise, for Tremont Temple was established in order to provide an arena where men and women could freely express their hatred of slavery and friendship for the Negro. This action, together with the Boston Common Council's condemnation of the landlords who spurned Bishop Arnett, shows that there are still those in the city of Phillips and Sumner who are not victims of color-phobia. It is quite likely that the Massachusetts legislature will enact supplementary legislation making it an even more dangerous and costly infringement of the statute-law for hotel proprietors to treat any American citizen as they treated Bishop Arnett last week.

Letters received at the missionary rooms in Boston from different parts of Turkey bring the cheering news that the generous sums already contributed for the relief of suffering have reached the field and are accomplishing their work. These letters also make plain that the dimensions of the suffering to be relieved are even greater than we have supposed. One fact brought to view deserves special attention. No small part of the suffering to be relieved is found in families of pastors and preachers in the mission churches who have been slain or driven from their homes, and also among the teachers in the many schools that have been closed because of the troubles. That part of the support of these helpers in the missionary work which has come from native sources can no longer be provided, and these men are doubly dependent upon the grants which they have been accustomed to receive from the missions. Whatever is bestowed on these is in reality a part of the relief work now in progress, so that churches and Sunday schools and young people's societies that desire to contribute to the work of relief may with all propriety, if so minded, designate the sums which they gather for this purpose as intended to provide for this class of the native agency in Turkey, so suddenly thrown out of all means of support. Such sums will accomplish to the fullest extent the purpose of relief desired and at the same time will provide a welcome relief to the mission treasury.

Many people, in cases of severe illness, feel a dread of being taken or of sending their friends to the hospital. Yet when these institutions are well managed, as they usually are, a hospital is a safer place for a sick person than the majority of homes can be. Recently we have known of several ministers and other public men who have either been patients in public hospitals in Boston or have had members of their families in these institutions. Their testimony is uniform and emphatic in their appreciation of the ability and faithfulness of physicians and nurses and of the comforts provided for all classes of patients. Rev. Dr. W. E. Barton of Shawmut Church, having found it necessary to place one of his children in the department of the City Hospital provided for contagious diseases, writes feelingly to the Herald of the patience, courtesy and kindness he has experienced. His words may reassure some who contemplate with anxious hearts the necessity of sending loved ones into the hands of strangers. He writes:

> When parents, with a grief that none can measure save those who have experienced it, for the sake of the better care than the home can secure, and to protect the lives of others, send to the hospital those to whom they would gladly minister, it is no small satisfaction to know, if they may know, that alike in the private rooms, where those who can afford it pay for their treatment, and in the open wards, where the poorest are tenderly cared for, devoted and conscientious physicians and nurses care day and night for the trusts sacredly committed to them.

The Sublime Porte, which means the sultan of Turkey, has cabled to the Turkish legation at Washington to deny most emphatically the statements of Rev. Dr. Barnum in the article published in last week's Congregationalist. We appreciate the sultan's estimate, thus indicated, of the importance of Dr. Barnum's testimony to the atrocities in Armenia. The Sublime Porte affirms that "the stories related therein are mere inventions of revolutionists and their friends intended to attract the sympathy of credulous people. There is no forcible conversion to Islamism in Turkey and no animosity against Protestantism." This is sublime impudence. The statements thus contradicted are not made by Dr. Barnum alone, but represent conditions certified to by official reports, by careful investigations made by correspondents of newspapers in England and the United States and by hundreds of private letters from persons in the region where the massacres have occurred. Moreover, this declaration of the sultan is contradicted by centuries of Mohammedan history. Perhaps he will also deny that the following is the daily prayer of Mohammedans, concerning Christians, counted by them as infidels, to which recent indescribable inhumanities in Armenia may be regarded by them as an answer:

O Allah! make their children orphans, and defile their abodes! Cause their feet to slip; give them and their families, their households and their women, their children and their relations by marriage, their brothers and their friends, their possessions and their race, their wealth and their lands as booty to the Moslems, O Lord of all creatures!

THE COLLEGE IN THE COMMUNITY.

This is the season of alumni reunions. When college graduates gather around the festive board they are boys again, and every allusion which brings back the scenes of academy life evokes unbounded enthusiasm. But these reunions are by no means confined to college reminiscences. No assemblies show a keener interest in public affairs, a broader outlook or a more comprehensive knowledge of world movements as related to our own country and communities. Education, religion, social questions, politics, international affairs are all within the range of the after-dinner speeches, and, though no extended discussion is possible, epigrammatic allusions often call forth spontaneous applause, which shows how deep is the interest in the subjects mentioned.

It is the glory of the American college that it fosters no class distinctions. It takes its students from every social rank; it receives rich and poor on the same level, measures them according to the manhood they develop in their academic life, and sends them out to work with and for the people. The highest value of the college is the leaven it puts into common life. So far as any college fails to do this it is un-American and unworthy of support. The university that should encourage scholasticism, and that should aim to create a class by itself whose members pride themselves on exclusive knowledge and authority in a country like ours, would be a nuisance which ought to be suppressed. And the educated man who sneers at the opinions of college professors on public affairs, as though the atmosphere of the university unfitted men to be leaders in citizenship, by so doing dishonors his alma mater and his country.

No other assemblies manifest a more hearty appreciation of genuine religious feeling and high moral principle than these alumni reunions. They show that a liberal education promotes manhood, increases the sense of responsibility for others, and fits men for heroic self-sacrifice when the country calls for it. If a frivolous spirit reigns supreme at any of these reunions, it is remembered with the same mortification which an honorable alumnus feels when the students of his alma mater are caught in some foolish escapade. But such occasions, so far as our knowledge extends, are rare. Our colleges are our best fortresses. They train men to see the folly of fighting without just cause, and give them the courage of wisdom to do battle when the need for battle arises. No more patriotic investments are made than those which equip these institutions for training American manhood, and which intrust the money to those whose aim is to build character rather than monuments of stone.

These alumni gatherings do much more than keep alive loyalty to the colleges they represent. They help to keep men in touch with the college spirit, and to preserve it as a vital element in the community. No honest words spoken anywhere are more effective than in these assemblies. Nowhere is enthusiasm more earnest; while, if really representative men attend them, the revelry of these occasions is as wholesome as it is harmless. Educated men owe it to their colleges, their communities and themselves to maintain these gatherings and to keep their influence strong for sound learning, religion, patriotism and humanity.

"ARE THERE NONE RIGHTEOUS?"

British authors can scarcely be won to a cordial liking for The Bookman as they read its assertion that they appealed to American authors for joint co-operation in maintaining peace between the United States and Great Britain because they "were afraid of losing the income which they might derive from their American copyrights." Notwithstanding some peculiar incidents that have followed the issuing of the address by the British authors, we prefer to believe that Sir Walter Besant when he wrote it, Mr. Hall Caine when he edited it, and the authors when they signed it meant just what they said they did, irrespective of any effect it might or might not have on their royalties from American publishers.

The Bookman's charge is one of many that might be cited showing how common now is the practice of imputing ulterior and base motives for almost all acts or words that are spontaneous, generous and intended to conserve peace and secure justice. The President of the United States, standing as a bulwark against those who would place this country on a level with Mexico and China must, forsooth, be charged with venal motives by a vulgar blackguard, Mr. Tillman, who now represents South Carolina in the United States Senate. Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan lends his ability and weighty connections with financiers abroad to the furthering of our national finances, and the New York World forthwith charges him with having no higher motive than pouring millions into his own pocket. The most eminent clergymen of the country and our ablest professors of international law in our colleges and universities dare to plead for peace between Great Britain and the United States, and men like Mr. Theodore Roosevelt and the editor of the New York Sun immediately call them cowards and traitors and advise them to cease attempting to influence public opinion. William Watson ventures to express in plain English his opinion of Great Britain's humiliation and infamy in refusing to save the Armenians by living up to her treaty obligations, and immediately the new poet laureate, Mr. Austin, intimates that Mr. Watson must be seeking notoriety or he would not so castigate his motherland. No wonder Mr. Watson replies thus:

Treachery's apologist, whose numbers rung
This eventide, remonstrant in my ear;
Thou to whom England seems a mistress dear,
Insatiable of honey from thy tongue:
Because I crouch not fawning slaves among,
How is my service proved the less sincere?
Have I not also deemed her without peer?
Her beauty have not I too seen and sung?
But for the love I bore her lofty ways,
What were to me her stumblings and her slips?
And lovely is she still, her maiden lips
Pressed to the lips whose foam around her plays!
But on her brow's benignant star whose rays
Lit them that sat in darkness, lo! the eclipse.

Diogenes might seek far and wide for a wise man were he to return to earth, but we aver he would not have to go far to find honest men. Patriotism and righteousness are not extinct.

OUR PILGRIMAGE.

The interest expressed in England in the visit of Americans proposed by The Congregationalist is already much beyond our anticipations. The religious newspapers have spoken of it in the tone of cordial welcome. Private letters give us warm assurances of purposes to leave with our party the pleasantest memories of Old England. We had expected that brethren of our own denomination would afford us such courtesies as they could conveniently extend. But each week brings us also evidences that the friendly feeling toward Americans is ready to manifest itself quite beyond denominational bounds. The mayor of Plymouth wishes to give us a public reception on our arrival at that port. The Dean of Wells Cathedral, one of the most interesting in England, has kindly offered his services to conduct the party through and about that ancient minster. The Dean of Westminster has invited us to an afternoon service, after which he will address the party in the Jerusalem Chamber. Dean Farrar's cordial invitation to visit Canterbury has been accepted. Ambassador Bayard has promised to deliver an address at the laying of the corner stone of the Congregational church at Gainsborough, and arrangements are being made for this service to take place when the American Congregationalists visit that town. These are only a few of the tokens of friendly interest we have received during the last three or four weeks.

It is most important under these circumstances that our denomination should be suitably represented. We have decided to limit the party to a small number for obvious reasons. We especially invite ministers and laymen who are interested in the history of our Pilgrim fathers and in the inheritance which has come to us through them from England and Holland. We shall be pleased to have their wives and sons and daughters accompany them, and we hope the members of our party will come from the Interior and the West as well as from the East. We are confident that they will find the journey one of the most memorable in their lives, not only in the things seen and learned, but in the friendships made and in inspiration for future Christian work.

Already a number of clergymen and business men have signified their intention to join the party. Of the success of the enterprise we feel well assured, and we invite especially the co operation of those whose presence will bring Congregationalists of England and America into closer fraternal relations and will promote friendly feeling and a community of interest between the two nations.

THE TESTING OF THE STORM.

Such a storm as swept over the coast cities last week puts every exposed structure to the test. Roofs are shaken, chimneys overturned, trees uprooted, ships driven on shore. Among other exposed and threatened structures at such a time is the spirit and temper of man. He is tried by the small annoyances of pelting rain and buffeting winds, by delays and losses and sometimes by the sudden access of danger, which calls into play the heroic qualities of soul. Such emergencies are prefigurings of the judgment. They divide men according to the true bravery of their spirits and not according to any outward seem-

ng. In their presence we find ourselves compelled to revise our social prejudices and to acknowledge that there is a worth which does not of necessity go with outward show.

Most of our readers must have noticed the account on the day after the storm of an accident to a railroad bridge in New England. The bridge was shaken by the storm and a train broke in two as it passed over the swaying timbers. The engineer recognized the peril and the one means of meeting it—ran back, and by a quick coupling pulled the runaway cars off the structure just in time to save them. Next it became necessary to replace the ruined bridge with the new steel span which was ready to be put in position. In wind and rain and the darkness of the evening a gang of men worked to clear the wreck and replace it by the new structure. Standing upon a fragment of the old bridge some support gave way, and they were precipitated into the swollen wintry stream. Some were rescued by the heroic efforts of their fellows, others were killed by the fallen timbers or drowned in the rushing stream.

We are so much used to take the security of our travel as a matter of course that it may be well to consider for a moment that it is absolutely dependent upon the faithfulness and courage of these men whom we see every day—trackmen, engineers, brakemen and conductors, without whom the best machinery is of little use. The quick recognition of the peril and the opportunity, the work under hard conditions to clear the way as swiftly as possible for our easy journeys, the facing of risk and the self-forgetful help in danger, all are qualities which call for recognition—the recognition of fellowship in a common human obligation and of joy in the best qualities of human faith and courage wherever shown. It is not often that an opportunity of courage comes which claims and wins the public notice, but all are tried in little ways or in large, and it is pleasant to remember how often the swift peril finds the ready mind and hand to meet it.

LOVE OF COUNTRY ESSENTIAL TO CHRISTIAN CHARACTER.

It is possible to be a zealous patriot, and to be the nobler for one's patriotism, without being a Christian, but nobody is a true Christian whose Christianity fails to include the love of his country. This seems to be an inborn quality for it endures throughout life and it is independent of conditions. The native of the most sterile and uninviting land loves his country as loyally as the native of the most attractive region. Yet patriotism often becomes feeble, especially when it appears to conflict with personal interest and ambition.

The most serious peril to the true love of country is that its nature be misunderstood. Too many, even among quite intelligent people, regard it chiefly as the spirit which takes for its motto the utterance, "My country, right or wrong," and is disposed to be boastful, arrogant and regardless of the merits and the just claims of other countries. This is not genuine or useful patriotism and, if unchecked, it always leads to evil consequences.

The only proper estimate of the love of country is that which is made from the Christian point of view and which regards it in its relation to religion. It is a real element of a properly developed Christian character. It is not fundamental, like penitence for sin or faith in Jesus Christ as our Saviour. But no one can remain a true, and therefore an increasingly enlightened, Christian without it.

Such a Christian realizes that God has given us our country to be loved, saved and cared for. Because it, rather than any other, is ours, we have a responsibility for it. We cannot do our duty before God if we deny or forget this obligation. By as much as we allow ourselves to be indifferent, by so much our Christianity is defective and useless. This truth needs present emphasis. And in connection with it should be remembered the fact that great national heroes, such as Washington and Lincoln, seldom, if ever, have failed to make prominent their belief in it. He who loves Christ aright must feel a deep concern, because he is a Christian, for the highest welfare of his country.

THE WEEK IN REVIEW.

The Bond Issue Over-subscribed.

In response to the circular letter of Secretary Carlisle issued Jan. 6, asking for bids for $100,000,000 thirty year, four per cent. bonds, the bankers and people of the United States have intimated a desire to take $568,289,850 worth, that is to say the loan was over-subscribed nearly six times. For the $100,000,000 which the nation pledges to pay in 1925 and upon which it must pay interest at the rate of four per cent. for twenty-nine years, it will receive within a few months about $111,000,000 in gold. The bondholders will receive a rate of interest averaging slightly less than 3⅝ per cent., according as their bid equaled or exceeded the rate bid by Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan and his syndicate who bid 110.6877 for the entire issue and will receive about one third of the loan. Those whose bids exceeded 110.6877 numbered 780, many of them thrifty individuals or executors of estates bidding larger or smaller sums for investment, but most of them banking corporations or speculators who already have sold their assignments with profit, the bonds bringing today 116 or 117 in open market. Strictly speaking it has not been a "popular" loan, but contrasted with the last loan it has been popular and infinitely preferable to it though lacking in some essential safeguards that make its ultimate effect problematical. Not until it is proved that the gold with which the successful bidders make their payments comes from sources other than the national treasury gold reserve is there much ground for optimism save that of a temporary kind. It is true that we have demonstrated the ability of our people to absorb an issue of such magnitude without resorting to foreign capitalists, but it cannot be forgotten that the loan is placed in times of peace to pay current national expense, that it adds to the debt of the nation a load which a generation must carry, and all, forsooth, because of the lack of wisdom and courage of past and present legislators. The Senate persists in its devotion to free coinage of silver. The House, fortunately, refuses to accept any such legislation, but insists on its revenue-increase measure, and the President stands ready to veto either scheme should it pass. As an interesting side light on the situation comes a document, an open letter to Eastern manufacturers signed by sixteen Republican senators—fifteen from States west of the Mississippi—making future legislation protecting American industries dependent upon legislation restoring the free coinage of silver in the United States at a ratio of sixteen to one. "You must indorse such a platform by the Republican party or there will be no Republican party," says Mr. Wharton Barker of Philadelphia, who issues the letter.

The Wonders and Uses of Applied Science.

Throughout Christendom, wherever there is a laboratory devoted to physics or a workshop equipped with electricity, physicists and professional inventors like Mr. Edison, Nikola Tesla or Mr. Elihu Thomson are working day and night to develop and utilize the hitherto unsuspected X rays discovered by Professor Roentgen, to which we referred last week. From Hanover, N. H., Montreal and London come well-authenticated reports of the use of the process in surgery, in Montreal serving to locate a bullet in a man's leg, in London to discover the broken point of a knife-blade thrust between vertebræ which had caused paralysis that had baffled the physicians for weeks, from Dartmouth Medical College in revealing clearly the fractures in a broken arm. The experiments of several American investigators have made certain the fact that the use of the Crookes tube is not a sine qua non for securing results. Mr. Edison has made some remarkable experiments, using what he calls "fluorescent tubes," using which the X rays have penetrated steel of the best grade, revealing structural defects where they existed and demonstrating what has been predicted from the first, viz.: that methods of testing metals, armor and the like would be revolutionized. Our consul in Berlin promptly called attention to this aspect of the discovery in his valuable report which first brought the matter officially to the attention of the authorities in Washington.

Dr. Selle of Brandenburg, Germany, is reported as having contrived a photographic instrument which will reproduce with minute details the various colors of objects, persons and landscapes brought within range of the instrument. Five years of Dr. Selle's time have been spent in perfecting the invention. Many of the photographs so taken have been submitted to and praised by experts and there seems to be no doubt of the results achieved but the method Dr. Selle keeps to himself.

Pursuing a different policy and in accord with the ethics of his profession, Dr. Cyrus Edson of New York city has given to the public and his fellow-physicians the formula of a preparation to which the name "aseptolin" has been given, a preparation containing phenol which Dr. Edson and fifty other physicians possessing the preparation have found beneficial in dealing with 212 out of 216 cases of consumption treated by them. Dr. Edson has high rank as a physician. His statement in the Medical Record, showing how he thought out and perfected his discovery, is a model of candor and a demonstration of the value of the inductive method, and he seems to have waited for results long enough to warrant him in speaking now with authority. If it proves to be true that a foe to phthisis has been found thousands of his fellowmen will rise up to call Dr. Edson "blessed" and mankind will take a new lease of life.

A Halt to Prize Fighting.

Congress is to be commended for the alacrity with which it drafted and enacted a law last week making prize fighting illegal in any of the territories of the United States. Pugilists, driven from Florida, Louisiana, Texas and other former familiar haunts, had conspired to fight soon what they were pleased to call "a great event" in New Mexico, and El Paso, Tex., even now is full of toughs and sports from all parts of the North, South and West. But now, owing to this law, they must either flee to Mexico and fight or risk a contest on some of the islands in the Rio Grande whose ownership is disputed by Mexico and the United States. There is this to be said in connection with this prompt action by Congress, that the legislators would win even more praise if they would show a like degree of solicitude for the welfare of honest business men throughout the country and like alacrity in giving sane financial legislation.

Colonel Clarke's bill, now before the Massachusetts legislature, has been amended so as to satisfy the criticism of those who feared it would prevent games of football and other sports in which rough play is at times an incident, but it retains enough grip if enacted to put an end to such exhibitions of prize fighting as the Boston aldermen recently licensed, and it is to be hoped that the bill will commend itself to all right minded men among our State legislators.

Our Foreign Policy.

The Turkish Government has replied to our request that a second naval vessel be permitted to pass the Dardanelles and anchor off Constantinople that the request must be preferred to the European Powers who signed the Berlin Treaty and thus govern the passage of Dardanelles. Russia is said to have stood in the way of granting our request and suggested this answer. We suspect that, let the issue be critical enough to warrant such action, our vessels will go where they are ordered whether Turkey and her new ally desire it or not. Our consul at Smyrna is credited with decisive action there, action that saved the lives of many Armenians. Minister Terrell will designate Miss Barton and her assistants as Americans worthy to give aid and administer alms to the suffering in interior Turkey, and, trusting that all will go well after she arrives in Constantinople, Miss Barton and her lieutenants have left Paris for Constantinople via Geneva. Mr. Terrell is said to be the only foreign minister invited to dine with the sultan nowadays. It may be politic for him to do so, but we fear they will prove barmecide feasts—for Mr. Terrell. As we go to press there come reports of the attempted arrest of Rev. G. P. Knapp at Bitlis, charged with sedition and murder. Minister Terrell is rightly insisting that, if the charge is to be pressed, Mr. Knapp must be brought to Constantinople and tried before him.

The members of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate have decided to go a step farther in recognizing the Cuban rebels, and have reported to the Senate the following resolution, which as soon as the appropriation bills are out of the way will be debated and voted upon:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in the opinion of Congress a condition of public war exists between the government of Spain and the government proclaimed and for some time maintained by force of arms by the people of Cuba; and that the United States of America should maintain a strict neutrality between the contending Powers and accord to each all the rights of belligerents in the ports and territory of the United States.

Our minister to the Hawaiian republic, Mr. Willis, in declining to participate as an official in the celebration of Jan. 17, the anniversary of the founding of the new government, seems to have done it in such a way as to revive the old feeling of dislike for him among the inhabitants of Honolulu and to have merited the protest which President Dole and his cabinet have filed at Washington. If we have recognized the Hawaiian republic by retaining Mr. Willis there as our representative and if we have accepted its representative in Washington, it is not apparent to the mind of the ordinary citizen how it can be truthfully said that we have not recognized the republic, and yet this was Mr. Willis's defense for not accepting the invitation.

Sectarian Aggrandizement at Public Expense.

Three of the great English-speaking peoples are vitally concerned just now with the question of public support of sectarian institutions. The A. P. A. in the United States draws most of its strength from the conviction of American citizens that in the past altogether too much of the money raised by State and municipal taxation has gone to the support of Roman Catholic charitable institutions; and during the past fortnight our Federal legislators have shown a new degree of sensitiveness on this subject, compelling the withdrawal from the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia of appropriations for Protestant and Roman Catholic eleemosynary institutions—worthy no doubt, but not deserving of such further aid from the national treasury as would commit the Government to a recognition of their claim or establish the precedent of a union between church and state.

In Canada the question of questions today is whether in the elections now being held legislators in sufficient number will be returned who believe in the Dominion's attempting to coerce Manitoba into establishing Roman Catholic schools and supporting them by general taxation. Sir Charles Tupper, who believes in this policy, has just been returned by a Cape Breton district, but notwithstanding the influence in his favor brought to bear by Roman Catholic ecclesiastics and American capitalists—Bishop Cameron describing all who oppose coercion of Manitoba as "hell-inspired hypocrites"—his majority was very small, indicating that many of the Roman Catholic laity agree with Archbishop Walsh of Toronto who has come out recently in favor of abandoning the attempt to coerce Manitoba, his speech indicating that the Roman Catholic hierarchy is by no means a unit on the subject and that the ultra-conservatives hereafter are not to govern without opposition from within.

We do not care to continue a discussion with the Sacred Heart Review over our differing opinions about the merits of the question of schools in Manitoba. The facts of a prolonged controversy cannot even be fairly stated in the brief space which we can give to the subject. That the Treaty of Paris secured to the Roman Catholics of Manitoba the privilege they claim, the highest court of the British Empire has decided, as we have repeatedly stated. As between a treaty concluded in 1763, however, when the new territory was practically without population, and the matured convictions of a vast majority of the present inhabitants of Manitoba in favor of the total separation of church and state in education, we repeat that we think the Province is justified in its revolutionary action. The question is, in a word, whether the needs of the present are to be determined by a treaty made by Europeans in Paris one hundred and thirty years ago, or by the living voice of Manitoba today. The legal decision, determined by the dead hand, may be in favor of the Roman view, but the Dominion can hardly venture to enforce a law so made against the will of a whole Province.

Mr. Balfour's public admission last week that the British coalition ministry now in power intend to introduce a bill at the session of Parliament which opened on Tuesday, calculated to give to the Anglican and Roman Catholic churches additional authority over English schools and added revenue from taxation for such schools as they would control, means that a great conflict is about to open in Great Britain which may compel the ministry to realize that, despite their intention to stand or fall by their foreign policy, there are pitfalls in their domestic policy, for the Nonconformist conscience is aroused as it has not been since 1870, and the spirit of Independency is once more belligerent, prepared to fight.

How to Use Washington's Birthday.

With the opening of the British Parliament on the 11th it became possible for the British people to determine and shape their foreign policy, or at least to determine whither their leaders were taking them. Lord Salisbury and his associates have had a free hand up to date and the result can scarcely be said to be gratifying to British pride. Concessions to France and Russia have been made that are unexplainable and unpardonable—from the British standpoint—unless there has been a decided reversal of British policy and corresponding gains. The movement for a permanent arbitration tribunal of Anglo American difficulties takes shape slowly in Great Britain, and in this country an appeal has been issued by some of the best citizens of Chicago to all who intend to celebrate Washington's Birthday in any way that each assemblage shall, in its own way, embody its views on the following questions:

1. Do we wish the governments of the United States and Great Britain, by formal treaty, to establish arbitration as the method of concluding all differences which may fail of settlement by diplomacy between the two Powers?
2. What is our opinion of war as a mode of deciding controversies between the United States and Great Britain?

Dr. William C. Gray, 69 Dearborn Street, Chicago, and William E. Dodge, 11 Cliff Street, New York, will receive the record of such proceedings, which should be sent in duplicate, and arrange them for transmission to the President of the United States and the queen of England.

While this praiseworthy movement is developing another quite as significant should not be lost sight of, viz., the call issued by Ecuador for a Pan-American Congress of South and Central American republics to be held in August, 1896, to discuss the Monroe Doctrine and the future political and commercial relations of the United States and the Latin-American nations.

Things move faster today than when the last century was drawing toward its close. The President's Venezuela message was pub-shed all over this country and Europe the ay it was given to Congress, but the Decla- ation of Independence, adopted by Congress uly 4, 1776, in Philadelphia, did not appear n the chief newspaper of that town till July 3 and was not published in Boston till nine ays later.

IN BRIEF.

We expected a good deal from our "80th an- iversary offer" (The Congregationalist twelve eeks and The Bonnie Brier Bush for twenty- ve cents), but the response during the past hree days has surprised us. Orders and ames come by the hundred. Pastors and rominent church officers recognize this op- ortunity of circulating a religious paper and most useful book. A prominent layman in n inland city writes us that he proposed to ave a canvass made and double our list. A pastor of a country church says he expects o send fifty names. It must be remembered hat the time during which the offer holds ood is limited. We shall stop with a week's otice.

Read Mr. Gulick's optimistic article on apan and be cheered by it. He knows what e is writing about and gives good reasons or his statements and his hopes.

Nearly one-fifth of the persons engaged in he retail liquor business of the United States ive in New York State. No wonder that that tate is the chief center of political interest.

The Interior boasts of a subscriber with a ubscription paid up to 1930. That man has aken from his posterity the privilege of sing the argument, so dear to minds of a cer- ain caliber, "Stop my paper."

Present discussions in Congress give new ertinence to the remark of James Freeman Clarke that the difference between a statesman nd a politician is that the former looks to he next generation and the latter to the next lection.

Dr. A. J. F. Behrends says: "Assuming, for he sake of argument, that the Venezuelan nessage was a wise piece of policy, I think t would be as wise if that same fist were loubled up under the nose of the Turk." Yes. If the fist must be doubled up that is he place to put it.

The Yale Alumni Association of Boston umbers 450 members. It is the largest asso- iation in the United States except one, the Yale Association of New York. This is one of the signs that the enthusiasm of the sons of Yale is unsurpassed by the alumni of any American university.

The many friends of Mr. Percy Alden of the Mansfield House Settlement, London, who ectured in this country in the summer of 1895, will regret to hear that a fire in the Settlement House recently brought the heavi- est loss to Mr. Alden. His library, his papers nd a manuscript almost ready for the press, representing the labor of years, were de- troyed.

It is again announced that Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson has become a Baptist, having been mmersed at Croydon, Eng., by Dr. James Spurgeon, brother of the famous pastor, late of the London Tabernacle. Though the son, Rev. Thomas Spurgeon, succeeded him, he had a formidable rival in Dr. Pierson. The only obstacle in the way of Dr. Pierson getting the place was that he was not a Baptist. Now that that obstacle is removed the waters of the London Tabernacle seem to be stirring with premonitions of a storm.

A minister in a town not far from the Miss- issippi River rebukes The Congregationalist sharply for criticising the United States Sen- ate because of its support of free coinage of silver. He says that such criticism "indicates a narrow provincialism incomprehensible to a Western man." Well, this is bad. But when he sees how this narrow provincialism has possessed the other branch of Congress, how confused his brain must be! We ven- ture to suggest a text for his private medita- tion: "To get understanding is rather to be chosen than silver."

The heir to the throne of Bulgaria is about to renounce allegiance to the Roman Catholic Church and join the Greek Church. The na- tions of Europe are greatly interested in the young prince's conversion. Yet he himself has never said a word on the subject. He is only two years old. In this case religion is politics, as it is in much of Christian history where changes of belief mean merely changes of human masters. God forbid that kings or legislatures should ever decree in this coun- try to what particular church any of its chil- dren shall belong!

A Boston association, seeking sermons for a syndicate of Sunday newspapers, recently of- fered four prizes for the best sermons. Three of the four were taken by Episcopal clergy- men, whereupon the Churchman sees occasion to compare the preaching abilities of Episco- pal ministers with those of other denomina- tions. Inasmuch as the object of the associa- tion appears to be mainly to secure the in- dorsement of Christian ministers for the Sunday newspaper, we venture to guess that the competitors for these prizes were mostly within the Episcopal and Unitarian denomi- nations.

The South Western Presbyterian of New Or- leans, in changing from the folio to the octavo form recently, wished its subscribers to un- derstand that, although changing its exterior, nevertheless "with respect to the Westmin- ster Confession of Faith and the Longer and Shorter Catechism it has been and will con- tinue to be immovable. We doubt if one can improve the multiplication table." We doubt whether a denomination led by an organ so devoted to the definitions of the past will have much reason for resorting to the multi- plication table, or even to the addition table.

The entire country may well join in this prayer of Rev. Dr. Hoge in the Virginia legis- lature:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, may we remember that all successes gained by fraud or by measures which enlightened con- science comdemns are but temporary tri- umphs, and result only in demoralizing the people and in subverting the only true and safe foundations of the public warfare. We bless thee that the great principles which un- derlie all duty are unchanging, and that to the end of time truth, honor and justice will be the only foundations on which good gov- ernment can rest.

The Standard of Chicago has been to the Baptists of the Interior and the West what the Examiner and Watchman have been to those of the East. Much of its commanding influence and position has been due to the toil, ability and devotion of its editor, Rev. Dr. Justin A. Smith. At a dinner given in his honor in Chicago not long since he said that no fact was more noticeable to one who had served as long as he in the profession of religious journalism than the improved tone, diminished asperity, increase of professional courtesy and fraternal regard among religious journalists. Our Chicago correspondent re- fers to the esteem in which he was held locally.

Upon the ecclesiastical connection of the priest who was convicted of arson in Roches- ter, N. Y., the other day we have no comment to make. Ministers in every denomination of Christians are men, and it is a tribute of praise to their work that so few of them go astray. It is stated, however, that while holding the pastorate of the Roman Catholic church whose school building he was con- victed of setting on fire he was engaged in extensive speculations, and this points a moral which we have more than once in- sisted on. The pastoral office rightly re- garded is quite enough to absorb a man's whole executive energy, and with its highest development wide business speculation is wholly incompatible.

It is in the police courts more frequently than anywhere else that the amazing com- plexity of American life comes to notice. Here in Boston, for example, the other day was a priest of the Greek Church on trial for marrying two Arabians without a license. It was shown that he had acted in good faith and he was discharged, but what had hap- pened was this. The priest had been but a few months in America and spoke little but Greek. The Arabians, being told that they must have a license, went to the Ottoman consul, who gave them a permit written in French, and this the priest, not being able to read either French or English, accepted with- out understanding, and proceeded to perform the ceremony. Here is a curious tangle of nations and tongues — elements of the na- tional life which must be shaped to a Chris- tian civilization.

Several letters from Presbyterian ministers assure us that we did them a valuable service by warning them against being drawn into speculation through the blind pool which they were invited by a prominent clergyman of that denomination to join. One of them relates an incident, which we hope is a rare one, of a gullible minister involving an inno- cent victim in the same fate with himself. He is said to have tried to induce a lady to invest a considerable sum in a speculative scheme which promised very large profits. She hesitated. He proposed that they seek divine guidance. After he had prayed with her she was still undecided. But a second prayer turned the scale. She handed over her money and lost it. A minister risks more than other men when he becomes absorbed in financial ventures which make great promises on uncertain foundations.

The January report of the receipts of the American Board is not an encouraging one, for the total amount is $60,008 as against $74,647 for January, 1895. Last month closed the first five of the current fiscal year, the total receipts for which amount to $234,924, while during the same period in the pre- ceding year the sum of $269,593 was given. The falling off, as in the case of the Home Missionary Society, arises from an unprece- dented decrease in legacies. Doubtless the fact that the hard times make it difficult to convert securities into cash explains to some extent the falling off in legacies. Just as much money may have been bequeathed dur- ing the last year or two, but the settling of estates proceeds more slowly, and legacies which several years ago would have realized their face value are likely to undergo a large shrinkage.

Last week the Boston Association of Smith College Alumni gave a dramatic presentation of Shakespeare's Tempest at the Bijou Thea- ter. The Emerson College of Oratory pre- sented Shakespeare's Othello on Monday afternoon at the Museum and on Friday Bul- wer Lytton's Richelieu. At all these per- formances the theaters were filled with the friends of the institutions in whose names the plays were given, and the proceeds, which were large, were devoted to the needs of the colleges. The work of those who took part in these dramas, especially that of the profes- sors and students of the College of Oratory, was of a high order, giving brilliant illustra- tions of the possible results of elocutionary training. If such dramas, rendered as these were, could be separated from the ordinary associations of the theater their influence would be as wholesome as enjoyable.

Although the late Rev. Dr. T. W. Chambers of New York was an eminent light in the Dutch Reformed Church, he occupied a few years ago the chair of New Testament exegesis in Hartford Seminary for a year. He was a good exegete, but could not remember names or faces, and the exercise was always conducted with a printed list of names on the desk to which the professor constantly referred. On one occasion, when the class was reading in Colossians, the Doctor called for Mr. X. to read the next verse. A moment's pause, and some one volunteered the information that Mr. X. was absent that day. O! would Mr. Y. please read it? Mr. Y. was reported also absent. Ah! was Mr. Z. present? Yes? Then would he read the verse? Mr. Z. began, but was interrupted by the outburst of mirth from the class. The verse was, "For though I am absent in the flesh, yet am I with you in the spirit."

As often as the birthday of Washington returns, the words of the Farewell Address should be recalled, and never with more emphasis than at the beginning of a "presidential" year. "Of all the dispositions and habits," he says, "which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and cherish them. . . . And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure—reason and experience doth forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle." The added observation and experience of a hundred years of national life only add force to this onclusion.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM THE INTERIOR.

A Righteous Verdict.

For a long time Chicago has been cursed with a sheet whose managers seemed determined to do all in their power to pervert and destroy the moral sense of its patrons. Its advertisements are said to have been of the most questionable character, and the atmosphere of the paper so miasmatic as to render its presence dangerous. Finally the publisher and editor, Mr. J. R. Dunlop, who had long defended his course by saying he was simply giving the people what they wanted, was arrested, brought to trial, and by the decision of the jury which patiently listened to his defense found guilty. If the motion for a new trial is denied, the case will go to the Supreme Court, where it is to be hoped the decision will be clear enough to prevent any repetition of the crime of which Mr. Dunlop is charged. The penalty is a fine ranging from one hundred to one thousand dollars on each indictment—five were brought against Mr. Dunlop—and from a month to ten years' imprisonment.

Murder and Suicide.

As already mentioned in these columns Chicago seems to be suffering from an epidemic of crime. Possibly the influence of such sheets as the one alluded to above may have had something to do with it. At any rate twice since New Year's have whole families been swept out of existence by the husband and father. Jan. 14 Jens Hansen, a milkman with a fairly good business, turned on the gas in his house and deliberately smothered himself, his wife and five children. Business disagreements are thought to have been the cause of this distressing act, and efforts have been made, thus far without success, to fix the responsibility for it on a man whom Mr. Hansen accused of robbing him of money which in some way had come into his hands. Feb. 5 Richard Klaettke, a German anarchist, murdered his father and mother, his wife and three children by shooting them, and then finished the tragedy by sending a bullet through his own brain. The man was thirty-eight years of age, able but unwilling to work. The family had been supported by the wife, who had gone out washing and nursing, and by the father, who had recently come to this country. Brooding over the wrongs done the laboring man and drink are undoubtedly the immediate causes of the crime, although his acquaintances speak of him as a man who might be expected to do just what he has done. Although these horrible crimes are committed nearly always by foreigners, most frequently by Germans who have sunk from the swamps of social democracy into the deeps of anarchy, Chicago must bear the disgrace of them.

Justin A. Smith, D. D.

It is refreshing, therefore, to turn from the contemplation of a life like that of the murderer Klaettke to think of one like that led by Dr. Smith, from its foundation in 1853 editor of the Standard, the leading Baptist paper of the West. Dr. Smith died at his residence at Morgan Park, near Chicago, Tuesday afternoon, aged seventy-six. A fine scholar, a man of wide reading, large experience and almost unerring judgment, a Christian gentleman, ready always to grant others the privilege of cherishing opinions diverse from his own, intensely interested in the welfare of his own denomination and doing all in his power to increase its influence, he will be sincerely mourned not only by thousands of Baptist households to which his words brought comfort and encouragement week by week, but by multitudes outside his more immediate associates to whom his pleasant smile, his hearty greeting and his sympathetic words were a joy and a refreshment. At the funeral appreciative words were spoken by leading men of the denomination. Dr. Smith was the Nestor of our religious editors and a favorite with them all. Between himself and Mr. Edward Goodman, a partner during all these years and the publisher of the Standard, there has existed a most delightful fraternal relation. To him, to the surviving family, to all associated with him on the paper, which will miss him so sadly, we extend our heartiest sympathy.

Dr. George F. Magoun.

It seems fitting that mention should again be made of the man who has done so much for Iowa College and for the State in which his long and active life was spent. Passing away in the early morning of Jan. 30, the funeral services were held in the church at Grinnell Sunday afternoon, Feb. 2. They were conducted by Rev. E. M. Vittum. The audience-room was crowded, not only by residents of the village by whom the doctor was honored and beloved, but by people who came from other parts of the State. President Gates made an eloquent address, giving his predecessor due honor for the work he had accomplished for the college and the State. The sermon was by Dr. A. B. Robbins of Muscatine, for half a century an associate with Dr. Magoun in all religious, educational and reformatory movements. Both have long been corporate members of the American Board. For many years both were directors of the Chicago Theological Seminary. The discourse was a heartfelt tribute to the friend of a life time, all the more tender because uttere at the open grave of his son-in-law, Presi dent De Forrest of Talladega. Dr. Magoun' influence was emphasized by a personalit which few could successfully resist. Had h chosen a political life rather than the minis terial he might have added another to th illustrious statesmen whom Maine, his na tive State, has produced. That he ha served his generation quite as effectively i the pulpit and as a college officer none wh have known what he has done can doubt.

Rabbi Hirsch.

Sinai congregation, the large, wealth and influential Chicago Jewish congrega tion to which Dr. Hirsch has for fiftee years ministered, has been greatly trouble for some weeks over rumors that its pas tor was to be called to New York at a muc higher salary than he has received here Sunday Dr. Hirsch set these rumors at res by saying that he had declined the Ne York call and intended to remain with hi people here at least two years longer, an to make them test years of their purpos to work with him for the moral welfar of the city. Recognizing the generosit shown him in his salary, he asked the in all seriousness if they had co-operate with him in all his efforts, if they had a ways been present as they might have bee at the services on Sunday, if they ha shown that deep interest in the welfare o others which, as their pastor, he had a righ to expect from them.

There are few abler men in any of ou pulpits than Dr. Hirsch, few who have ha a better training or have made a better us of it. As the leader of the Reformed Jew the pastor of their strongest organizatio it is only natural that his influence shoul have been the widest and most decisive i the West. His removal to New York woul be the withdrawal of a strong moral forc from the city. Although an earnest Jew Rabbi Hirsch is yet able to work in heart sympathy with others in all movements tha look to the welfare of society or that see to alleviate suffering. Many Christian peo ple trust that he will long remain one o our citizens. He has done a great deal fo the university, has been the moving spir in the establishment of a hospital, whic is a model of its kind, and of a missio among the more needy of his race on th west side of the city which has brough light and hope into multitudes of wear hearts.

Christ of Today.

Dr. Gordon's book, now fast becomin famous, was reviewed at the last Minister Meeting by Drs. Gilbert and Beaton. Bot gave it high praise, although both seeme to feel that some of its positions may no prove to be absolutely impregnable or it arguments entirely convincing. For it style, its movement, its magnificent rhe oric, its illustrations and its lofty spiri there were only words of commendation With this estimate of the reviewers most o our brethren who have read the book woul undoubtedly agree. To many what may per haps be termed the episodes of the boo give the greatest satisfaction. None ca fail to recognize its ability or to see in i promise of still better work in the future All rejoice to be borne along by the spirit ual earnestness of the author even whe they doubt if the discussion, especiall that in the second chapter, really estab lishes the points at issue. But the book ailed as an omen of good, as a proof that e power of the pulpit has not waned and not likely to wane while it has in it such illiant preachers of righteousness as the astor of the Old South Church, Boston.

FROM THE NORTHWEST.

ublic Protests.

The cause of oppressed Armenia has lled out large mass meetings in the Twin ties, where men and women of all shades political and sectarian opinion expressed rror at the atrocities. Strong resolu- ons have been passed, condemning the osition of the sultan, and calling on the resident to protect American citizens, nd to impress on Turkey the sense of umanity as entertained by Americans. iberal offerings and pledges have been ken, and Mayor Pratt has been appointed receive money in Minneapolis for the ed Cross Society.

axpayers' League.

For some months the citizens of St. Paul ave been protesting against exorbitant xes. A committee was appointed, ask- g that the salaries of certain municipal fficials be reduced and that appropriations ade by the common council for public nprovements be carefully scrutinized. As result already a reduction of almost a alf-million of dollars in taxes has been ade, and the end is not yet.

Minneapolis is in the midst of a hot fight ong similar lines. The council recently assed a resolution recommending the pave- ent with asphalt of a large district in the nter of the city. The charter provides hat the city engineer make estimates gainst property affected and that prop- rty holders be consulted, but neither of hese things was done, and as a result the axpayers called a mass meeting to pro- st against the illegal procedure of the ouncil and also to declare that the im- rovements contemplated are extravagant nd unwise. They also protest against the nbusinesslike methods of the council in acing contracts in lines where competi- on is quite limited, and in making of fu- re repairs it is restricted. Mayor Pratt as just vetoed the paving resolution, and is hoped that the aldermen will see to that his action is sustained. The tax- ayers favor improvements, but only after onsultation with property holders. They so desire to reduce to a minimum the mptation of boodle methods for the board f aldermen. This Taxpayers' League has ready a membership of more than a hun- red of our best business men and heaviest axpayers, who are determined to stand for harter rights and municipal fair play.

rayer for Colleges.

At the University of Minnesota a large ody of students gathered in the audito- um of the library building to listen to an arnest and searching address on Denying f Self, by Rev. A. E. Thomson, the evangel- t, now leading union services among the eighboring churches. Nearly ninety per ent. of those present testified to their alle- iance to Christ. Others also rose indicat- g a desire to lead a Christian life. At arleton College the day was anticipated y some special services the week before nd the result was quite manifest. Dr. Mer- ll of Minneapolis gave two addresses of un- sual power. Although nearly all the stu- ents are Christians the day called forth eeper consecration and some pledged themselves to Christ's service for the first time. In both of these institutions vital Christian principles are not only respected but are daily exemplified in the life and conduct of the students.

Booker T. Washington.

This foremost champion of negro problems has just concluded a series of addresses in the Twin Cities in behalf of the education of his people. His earnestness, his eloquence, his rare ability have won for him and his cause many new friends in the Northwest. Hereafter the great institution of which he is the head will find warm friends in this region, notably among men who do not belong to ecclesiastical bodies already doing aggressive work in the training and salvation of the negro race.

Sign of the Times.

The editor of the Minneapolis daily Penny Press, a paper popular among laboring people, has asked four pastors to write for each Thursday's issue short, suggestive, helpful comments on the Bible school lesson for the following Sunday. These, together with the full text of the lesson, are issued each week. The enterprise is pushed, not primarily for religious reasons, but rather as a financial scheme. The results are already quite marked in the increase of circulation and the many commendatory letters from all parts of the State. It emphasizes anew truths which need constantly to be remembered in these times when so much eloquence and printer's ink are used in trying to tell us that the working people care less and less for Christ. In this region, so largely occupied by people from over the sea, this simple desire for Christ's word and helpful suggestions concerning it is strong evidence that the carpenter's Son has a deeper place in the hearts of toiling men and women than shallow reformers are wont to think.

Here and There.

For some years the Saturday Union Bible teachers' class has experimented with different leaders with only fair success. Recently they have asked Dr. Merrill of the First Church to lead the meeting and the attendance is growing rapidly. Already many wish that he could devote his entire time to training teachers in the different sections of the city. The annual meetings of our Twin City churches reveal varied burdens and struggles but, in many instances, a distinctive advance in benevolences. This is largely due to the systematic method in many of the churches of getting some offering, if possible, from every member of the congregation, Sunday school and Endeavor Society. Our churches are brave and hopeful on entering this year of service and aspire still to shine as stars of the North. J. A. S.

CURRENT THOUGHT.

AT HOME.

Zion's Herald, commenting on the retrenchment ordered by the American Board, confesses its "amazement that the Congregational denomination, in which there is so much wealth, could consent to take such action. And we must be equally frank in saying that it does not seem to us to have been necessary. If the love for the cause of missions had been cultivated in that church during the last decade as in its previous history, we cannot believe that a situation involving so much of distress and humiliation would have been reached. The cause of missions everywhere is greatly harmed thereby."

Moses Merrill, head master of the Boston Public Latin School, writes to the New York Sun protesting against the formation of a national interscholastic athletic association: "The local leagues demand quite as much time as pupils can afford to give and yet pay proper attention to their studies. I am quite sure that the teachers desire to give every reasonable encouragement to athletics in these schools, but the multiplication of leagues and associations tends to give altogether too much prominence to what should be a recreation from study and the proper development of physical health and strength; but they wish athletics to be unattended as far as possible by the undue excitement and nervous strain which come from contests among rival teams for the championship. If such contests are allowed at all, they should be confined to a few schools in the immediate vicinity of one another."

Prof. Albion W. Small of the University of Chicago, in The Standard, discussing International Arbitration, says: "Peace and friendliness between individuals and between states is an ideal to be striven for with serious purpose, but it is a lesser evil to dissolve factitious harmony between individuals and nations than to suffer impairment of the integrity or proper dignity of the personalities concerned. Whoever thinks a different view is Christian has failed to calculate the perspective in Christian doctrine between ideal conditions and the moral economies of conduct in present relations. No nation is respectable that permits itself or its citizens to be victimized. It is a part of the moral mission of nations to be bulwarks of justice, at all hazards, against every form of injustice."

ABROAD.

Mr. James Bryce, M. P., in the February North American Review, speaking for Englishmen on the Venezuelan question, says: "The notion that Great Britain is not a free country, because the head of the state is not elected, but (greatly to the convenience of a democratic people which has elections enough already) is selected by statute from a particular family according to a defined rule, must surely long since have disappeared from the United States. Yet the converse idea seems to linger that a community is free and self-governing because it calls itself a republic and its head is a president. What a singular illustration of the power of a name! . . . So far from endeavoring to increase our influence as against the United States, on the shores of the Gulf of Mexico or Caribbean Sea, I believe that if the United States were presently to annex Guatemala, say, or Venezuela itself, Britain would look on with unconcern, so far as no treaty rights of her own were affected. Many of us would rejoice at the prospect of improvement for these countries, and would entertain no apprehensions save for the well-being of the United States Government itself, which would be embarrassed by incorporation of populations unfit for the civic duties and powers of citizens of a free republic."

The London Chronicle, commenting on the revelations of the British Blue Books respecting the Armenian massacres at Sassoun and Moush says: "The moral of the report is that the outrages were instigated, perpetrated and sustained by the regular soldiers of the Porte under orders from Constantinople. It is state directed murder with which we have to deal. It is rape and child-slaying organized by a European ruler, with whom—faugh!—the Queen of England is compelled to have dealings. And these things have all happened in a country of which we are the virtual suzerains, and which we have bound ourselves to defend against a Russian invader. Now here it is in letters red as blood and black as hell. What do we think of it all? What does Russia think of it—Russia, the sworn defender of Eastern Christianity, whose czar is the recipient of costly presents from the chief malefactor, and who is the supposed protector of this modern kingdom of Attila?"

Grounds for Renewed Enthusiasm for Missions in Japan.

By Rev. Sidney L. Gulick.

Well-founded, indomitable enthusiasm is an essential of successful missionary work. One of the most discouraging signs of the times is not the state of the work in Japan, but rather the state of feeling here in America—the lack of zeal, of enthusiasm for the missionary work in Japan, as also in other lands, which characterizes the attitude of so many of our leading Christians and churches. Because the enormous growth of the churches in Japan anticipated and prophesied ten years ago has not been realized, many in America seem to think that disastrous reverses have overtaken the enterprise. Because critics of missionaries and their methods have arisen among the Japanese Christians many supporters in America are disheartened. Because a few rationalists and Unitarians and agnostics have appeared in the Kumiai churches and in the Doshisha some would withdraw and leave the field and the churches to them. Because under the inevitable limitations of international treaties some property, costing no more than $5,000, held by the natives in the interests of the Board's work, has been diverted from its proper uses, some, indignant and disheartened, pronounce the work thus far a failure and would abandon the whole field.

It is this feeling of disappointment and discouragement, now entertained by some of the Congregational churches of America, which is the most disheartening feature of the situation. We seem to lack the courage of faith in God and the assurance of the coming of his kingdom. Instead of withdrawing, or even relaxing, our efforts, do not these very difficulties call for added zeal and fidelity and vigor? So it seems to many of us. But there are good reasons for thinking that the difficulties and so-called reverses and dangers are real blessings in disguise. They are providential. Through them God is working out a nobler plan than we had dreamed.

In the shortness of our vision, what ten years ago we deemed success and growth was a most fearful danger. The very successes of those days of success are the curse and the weakness of the church in Japan today. A misleading standard of growth was set up. Hundreds, if not thousands, flocked into the churches and became members who had little or no Christian experience or training. Had the growth continued as prophesied by the oldest and most experienced Christians and missionaries alike, there would today have been in Japan two or three millions of Christians instead of a paltry 30,000. Such growth would in all probability have been fatal. Japanese Christians would have been dominated by Confucian and Buddhist thought, habits of life and superstition.

The real cause today for anxiety over the theological situation in the Kumiai churches is the emergence in their religious thinking of Confucian metaphysical thought, supported and stimulated as it is by the agnostic and materialistic metaphysics of the West. This Neo Confucian movement of thought was sure to come. It was certain to chill the faith and weaken the Christian life of many. It would have been far more general among the churches and far more destructive to Christian faith and life had it been the movement of semi-Christian millions in the church today, instead of the reaction and unrest of the scores and possibly hundreds who are now wrestling with the great problems of Christian thought.

Providential, too, and in its broadest sense far from disastrous, was the coming of the Unitarian and German missionaries to Japan. Without doubt they did much to start the ball of doubt, of "higher criticism," of comparative religion and the philosophy of religion. But who would have the infant churches of Japan ignorant of these things? Only as they grow up, knowing and choosing between the good and the evil, the true and the false, will they be steadfast and strong. It is, therefore, a merciful providence that stemmed the flood of crude Christians flowing into the church, removing the artificial political stimulus that was leading them on and suffering this period of doubting and sifting while the church is still small. Political popularity is the greatest evil Christ's cause has to fear in Japan.

Not otherwise is it regarding the problems of property and administration. Ere the churches grew to be large, undertaking to meet national problems, it was needful that certain principles should be settled, settled forever because settled right. It was needful that the native churches themselves, as well as the missionaries and the Board, should know and acknowledge that the churches are absolutely free and independent in organization, in support, in faith, in creed and in administration. The churches must do their work in their own way with their own money. It was needful, also, for all to learn and acknowledge that foreign money and men must be controlled and administered by the Prudential Committee and the mission. But such knowledge could come only by some mistakes, by some criticisms more or less just, and by mutual consultations and agreements. I believe this experience has been won and this plan accepted. The visit of the deputation to Japan has helped to secure and confirm this result.

Turning from the difficulties, let us see whether there are solid grounds for enthusiasm. The great results which have already been accomplished in Japan, largely though not wholly through the missionary enterprise, should cause every Christian's heart to leap for joy. These results are not to be measured by any statistics of conversions and baptisms, of churches organized and pastors ordained. God's kingdom is not limited to those on the church rolls. It cometh not with observation. The kingdom of God is coming in Japan as in no other non-Christian land. The national ideals as to government, education, morality, justice, law and the family have become, in fact, largely Christian. The aim is for universal education and for girls as well as for boys. Between three and four million children are in attendance in the schools. Ethical instruction receives increasing attention and emphasis. Government is representative and is progressively democratic. Like all Christian nations, and like them only, Japan no longer looks to the past but to the future for her golden age. Her laws aim at justice; her prisons at reform. Her police and her courts repress crime and vice. Religion and morals are increasingly identified, a thing to be found only in lands enjoying pure Christianity. Marriage is honored as never before. The silver wedding of the emperor, celebrated two or three years ago, was the first instance on record in Japan of such an honoring of the marriage relation. Japan's face is set Christward.

Marquis Ito, one of Japan's greatest statesmen, who has done so much to bring in the new Japan of today, though not a Christian himself, has recently said that he and his associates have looked upon mission schools with favor from the first, and that now they are certain that the presence of the Christians in the land saved the students, even in the government schools, from sinking into immorality which would otherwise have been unavoidable. A leading Christian in Tokyo lately said in an address that the younger men did not know what old Japan really was, and that practically the Christian missionaries had saved the empire.

If ever there was a time when the Christian Church should be filled with enthusiastic joy because of the growth of the kingdom in any land, it is today over the coming of the kingdom to Japan. Its real coming is far more rapid than its appearance. And I believe that, notwithstanding the presence of some doubters and some agnostics in the ranks of the Christians, there was never a time in Japan when the kingdom was making more wholesome, positive growth than it is at present.

It is not necessary to paint the Japanese character black or to describe the Japanese civilization in lurid colors in order to show Japan's need of Christ and his salvation. If America and England need Christ so does Japan. If ever there was reason for and justification of enthusiasm in the missionary work, it is now in these closing years of the nineteenth century, when we can see more clearly than ever before the marvelous results of missionary work, the imperative need for it, and the assurance of its final, perfect success throughout the world.

TALMAGE AT THE NATIONAL CAPITAL.

BY H. A. B.

As the Washington Monument looms impressively above all lesser structures, so the famous divine known the world over as T. De Witt Talmage rises conspicuously above his fellow-pulpiteers today in the nation's metropolis. It may not be well to press the comparison too far and contrast the quality of this conspicuous preacher with able men preaching elsewhere in the city. But it is only the recognition of an obvious fact to say that Washington is not one whit behind New York and Brooklyn and other great cities of the world in its desire to hear Talmage.

It is true that the few months during which he has been co-pastor with Dr. Sunderland at the First Presbyterian Church have not been without their element of friction, arising largely from the difficulties naturally inhering in a triple pastorate, for besides the senior pastor, who has been one of the war horses of the denomination for many years, Dr. Talmage has had until recently a second colleague in Rev. Adolos Allen, who, somehow or other, has come to feel that his particular usefulness in this section of the Lord's vineyard is about at an end. One gathers from newspapers and current talk that the trustees of the church have been inclined to indulge in what is known ecclesiastically as the "freezing" process, arousing thereby the indignation of Mr. Allen's circle of strong friends. Matters reached such a degree of intensity that the local presbytery stepped in and after careful investigation issued a document that bears down heavily on the trustees and gives Mr. Allen as warm a vindication as his admirers could desire. Notwithstanding this support he has left for pastures new, and rumor hints that before long Dr. Sunderland will follow suit, leaving Dr. Talmage in sole and glorious possession.

Meanwhile the old First Church, on Sunday evenings when Dr. Talmage preaches, is invaded by a throng the like of which it has not sheltered on successive Sundays for many a year. More than an hour before the doors are open people begin to gather on the steps, and by 7.30 a struggling mass of humanity is working its way through the vestibule and up the stairs to a point where, at a given signal, it can scramble for available seats. Being constitutionally averse to such crowds, I had in the afternoon exhibited the assurance characteristic of my craft and called at the Arlington, where Dr. Talmage lives, and intimated my desire for a reserved seat. This was courteously accorded me, and, armed with a note in the doctor's own handwriting, I easily passed all the sentinels and, after a short wait while the belated pewholders were being seated, succeeded in establishing myself in a good seat about half way up the broad aisle. On entering the auditorium one soon discovered that, beside the great preacher himself, the anticipated presence of Mrs. Cleveland was a hardly less potent magnet to some of the crowd. "Don't seat me so far up that I can't see Mrs. Cleveland," I overheard a woman say to the usher.

This First Church, be it said in passing, is one of the furthest down town of all the Protestant organizations, and from it has almost entirely receded the wealthy and fashionable population which years ago occupied comfortable mansions thereabouts. The result is that the down-town problem in its most aggravated form confronts the trustees, and it is intimated that one object in securing Dr. Talmage is that he may recruit the financial resources of the church. It is certainly a bold experiment, looked at from the monetary point of view, and it remains to be seen whether silver-tongued eloquence is more successful in sustaining an old plant in a discouraging environment than the adoption of institutional methods. It is said that when Dr. Talmage came to Washington he intimated his willingness to rely on the evening collections for his salary, but, judging from the looks of the plate when it got down to me, I should say that an average evening collection would about pay for one day's board at the Arlington.

No barren formality characterizes the services with which Dr. Talmage has anything to do. Promptly at the moment he appears on the platform and his resonant voice rings out with a brief invocation. "We want," he prays, "that this occasion should be different from all others. May it be defined as more solemn and more joyous than all previous gatherings. Speak courage to our fears and comfort to our sorrows." Then he opens a Bagster Bible to the Forty-second Psalm. "This Psalm," says he, "is only understood by people of mercurial temper. Phlegmatic persons don't get hold of it." Then he reads the Psalm, accompanying the reading with brief epigrammatic comments. When he reaches the verse "Why art thou cast down, O my soul," he says, "This is one part of David talking to another part of him," and to emphasize the realistic picture the doctor smites first the left side of his manly bosom and then the right. When he reaches the verse where the Psalmist tells of his songs in the night, Dr. Talmage remarks that David must have been troubled with insomnia and says the best thing a man can do when he can't sleep is to sing songs. The long prayer follows and it is a comprehensive, specific and devout outpouring of the heart. Reference is made to the fact that the assembly is gathered in the nation's capital and to the question of the national finances as seeming to be beyond human solution, but the doctor calls to mind as an apparent encouragement the way in which God interposed at the time of the war to settle questions which human wisdom was powerless to decide.

After a simple gospel hymn—sung by the congregation, for there is little separate choir work—the sermon begins, the text being Matt. 27: 24, "He took water and washed his hands before the multitude, saying, I am innocent of the blood of this just person. See ye to it." The introduction is a brilliant word picture of the appearance of Christ before Pilate, the two men being sharply delineated and contrasted. The main thought of the discourse is then put forth, which is that a man can never escape the monitions and rebukes of his conscience. It was empty ceremony when Pilate washed his hands. The sermon then proceeded to illustrate by numerous historical references the remorse and misery of men goaded by their conscience, Adam and Eve, Felix, Charles II. of Spain, Charles IX. of France and other erring mortals in high places being cited in evidence. But the nail was driven even more closely home and in the congregation before him the preacher discerned men and women whose consciences were to them at that moment an accusing fury. These were pointed to the only remedy for sin, the only fountain for uncleanness. And the sermon closed with these words: "Over against the disappointing and insufficient laver of Pilate's vice and Pilate's cowardice and Pilate's sin, I place the brazen sea of a Saviour's pardoning mercy."

Enough has been given to show the trend of the sermon, but it is impossible to reproduce its dramatic force, its brisk movement and its tender appeal. "Talmage is a born actor," whispers some one at your side. And it is true that it would not take a very vivid imagination to see Irving or Booth in the man before you. When he wrings his hands to show Lady Macbeth's wretched plight, you can almost see the water dripping from her finger tips. The cowardly, cringing Pilate reappears, and the humble, holy, hunted Man of Nazareth lives again on the canvas. Talmage is a master of facial expression too, and, as he has the habit of picking out individuals in the audience and fastening his gaze upon them, there is a subtle power in his look that irresistibly influences the susceptible listener.

Though he speaks without a word of notes, the phrases and sentences are carefully wrought out, which, considering his frequent indulgence in similes and metaphors, is all the more remarkable. The only blemish in the discourse which I heard was the expression, "snowbanks of white and glistening sculpture," and perhaps only ultra-fastidious critics would take exception to that. A strong factor in his style is his use of antitheses. Not only did the sermon begin and close with them, but they abounded throughout. He was especially happy in comparing believers in God with atheists and skeptics, who, though they deny it, have a creed of their own which runs about like this: "I believe in nobody, in the forgiveness of nothing, in the communion of Nothingarians and in the life that never shall be." Against this chain of negations he put in vivid contrast the noble Apostles' Creed. One other excellent feature of style was, to my mind, the sharp and almost abrupt termination of the discourse. This was characteristic of the prayer also, and I am persuaded that it was a distinct and decided element of power. The sermon did not come to a good stopping place and then go on, to the weariness of the listener.

One realizes, too, how much pure animal force counts in preaching. A tall, commanding figure, a penetrating, resonant voice and a superabounding vitality constitute in themselves an equipment for pulpit work which goes far toward guaranteeing success from the start. And yet there is far more in Talmage than a superb physical constitution. He knows how to put truth in picturesque and glowing forms. He knows the way to the inmost citadels of the human heart and he knows what the gospel is. To be sure one misses certain notes of what we call modern preaching. The discourse is built almost altogether on the old lines, but the heart of the gospel is in it, and it is thrust home with no apology and yet with a sweetness of persuasion that must and does have its effect. Certainly the man who, now that Spurgeon and Phillips Brooks are gone, is heard and read by more persons throughout Christendom than any other living preacher cannot be disposed of as a humbug and a mountebank. It is a great thing to see at the nation's capital a splendid company of men and women, white and black, rich and poor, learned and ignorant, filling Sunday after Sunday the seats and galleries and aisles of one of the largest edifices in the city, to hear, not Talmage only, but the gospel of his Master that he so powerfully proclaims.

Every Christian ought daily to remember his own church, to think of his duties to it and to pray for its prosperity. The church in Wakefield has provided for its members an aid in doing this both ingenious and beautiful. It is a church calendar in which every part of the handsome edifice is brought before the eye, with appropriate sentiments on every page.

Certain Historic Creeds.

I. The Apostles' Creed.

By Prof. Williston Walker, D. D.

The history of the Christian Church has illustrated two extreme positions regarding the value and use of general confessions of faith. On the one hand, the vast majority of the bodies into which the church has been divided have looked upon their acceptance as essential to salvation; and if so fundamental an importance is not usually attributed to them today, they are, nevertheless, regarded by the greater part of Christendom as the natural tests of ministerial orthodoxy and of ecclesiastical communion. On the other hand, certain religious associations, especially in recent years, have prided themselves on a disregard of creeds, and have viewed any general statements of belief as an infringement of individual liberty. Between these two antagonistic positions the Congregational churches have always taken a middle ground. Unlike the Greek, Roman, Anglican, Lutheran, or Presbyterian communions, they have never recognized general confessions as tests of binding force, but have asserted the right of each congregation of believers to formulate its faith in its own way. Yet they have been ready at most periods of their history to bear public and united witness to their convictions of Christian truth, as in the approval of the Westminster Confession by the Cambridge Synod in 1648, the Confession of 1680 in Massachusetts, and of 1708 in Connecticut, and, coming nearer to our own day, the Burial Hill Declaration of 1865 and the Commission Creed of 1883. But these general confessions of Congregationalism are testimonies, not tests.

Holding thus an independent standpoint in regard to the authority of general creeds, a Congregationalist is in a position to study with peculiar profit the great historic testimonies of the church universal to its belief, without feeling compelled to find in any one that perfect rule of his own faith which he believes exists in the Word of God alone. Unfortunately the necessary limits of space in a religious newspaper like The Congregationalist will permit only the most superficial glance at a few of the symbols which possess peculiar importance either in themselves or in connection with the Congregational communion.

Some confession of belief is natural to every Christian heart. Christ spoke the strongest words of commendation he addressed to any disciple to Peter when that apostle confessed him as the Son of God [Matt. 16: 16]. Paul presents the confession of "Jesus as Lord" as a duty incumbent upon the believer [Rom. 10: 9]. Traces of creed-like statements are to be found in the epistles [1 Cor. 8: 6; 15: 3; 1 Tim. 3: 16]. But doubtless the formula of baptism [Matt. 28: 19] was the portion of the teaching of the Master which was most influential in giving shape to the creed expressions of the primitive church. Converts to Christianity were from the first interrogated as to their belief before receiving the rite, and as the perception of Christian truth deepened it became the custom, as Tertullian records of the African church about the year 200, to "answer somewhat more fully than the Lord prescribed in the gospel." This fuller statement of faith, which thus grew out of the New Testament formula of baptism, was the original form of the Apostles' Creed.

According to the belief of the Western church, held from the third century till the era of the Reformation, this creed was the work of the apostles themselves; and, as this belief grew ancient, legendary representation came to describe with increasing detail the circumstances and time of its composition. As related, for instance, by the Franco-German missionary Pirminius, for the benefit of his just Christianized disciples, about 750, the origin of this creed was as follows:

> Then the disciples of the Lord returned [from the Ascension] to Jerusalem, and continued with one accord in prayer till the tenth day, which is Pentecost . . . and on that day . . . they were all filled with the Holy Spirit, and began to speak with other tongues as the Holy Spirit gave them utterance; and they composed the creed. Peter [said]: "I believe in God the Father Almighty, maker of heaven and earth." John: "And in Jesus Christ, his only Son, our Lord." James said: "Who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary." Andrew spoke: "Suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead and buried." Philip said: "He descended to hell." Thomas spoke: "The third day he rose from the dead." Bartholomew spoke: "He ascended to heaven, [and] sitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty." Matthew spoke: "From thence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead." James [the son] of Alphæus said: "I believe in the Holy Ghost." Simon Zelotes spoke: "The holy Catholic Church." Judas [the brother] of James said: "The communion of saints, the forgiveness of sins." Thomas also spoke, "The resurrection of the flesh, the life everlasting."

Picturesque as the story is, it has long been recognized to be only a legend. Not only is the Apostles' Creed not the work of the apostles; the form of words given by Pirminius, and with which all Western Christians are now familiar, is much later than the conversion of the Roman Empire; and was completely developed not in Jerusalem but in southern France. But while the Apostles' Creed in its modern form cannot be traced back of the fifth century, and a few of its turns of expression not beyond the seventh, its essential portions are embraced in a much older creed—the oldest elaborate creed of Christendom, the original Apostles' Creed—which ran thus:

> I believe in God the Father Almighty; and in Christ Jesus, his only-begotten Son, our Lord, who was born of the Holy Ghost and the Virgin Mary, who was crucified and buried under Pontius Pilate, rose the third day from the dead, ascended into heaven, sitteth at the right hand of the Father, whence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead: and in the Holy Ghost, the holy church, the forgiveness of sins, the resurrection of the flesh. Amen.

This ancient compendium of the Christian faith can be traced back to about the middle of the second century (A. D. 140–160), and first definitely appears as the symbol of the Roman church—a creed which probably originated at Rome, though it is possible that it was brought thither from a yet earlier beginning in Asia Minor. It is interesting for a Congregationalist to observe, however, that this noble confession was at first the creed of a local church. From Rome outward, as from the great center of religious and political life in the western half of the Roman empire, it speedily spread to and was accepted by the churches of northern Africa and western Europe. But though these various churches kept the essential elements of the confession unaltered, they treated it with considerable freedom, adding to it and rendering its clauses more graphic. Thus the church at Aquileia, on the northern shores of the Adriatic, inserted a phrase which has continued in the Apostles' Creed to this day, but which had no place in the Roman original: "He descended into hell"; and the always "high church" African communion made its version declare a belief in "eternal life through the holy church." Meanwhile, as the creed grew older legend came to ascribe its origin to the apostles themselves.

It is one of the curiosities of ecclesiastical history that this original Roman creed came to be laid aside in the church of its birth, probably about the beginning of the sixth century, its place being taken by the Nicene symbol, either because that seemed a fitter test to bar out Arianism, or because of the political supremacy of Constantinople. After two or three centuries the old creed came back, not, however, in its original form, but wearing the garb of that Frankish land which, under the leadership of Charlemagne, had established a new empire and had made Rome once more the capital of western Europe. And so it came about that the form of the creed which we call the Apostles' was given it in southern France, while its content has come down essentially unaltered from the early days of Christianity in that city to which Paul wrote his chief epistle and where he suffered martyrdom.

The last three or four years have seen a controversy in theological circles in Germany as to whether this creed, ancient as it is in its original form, really represents the belief of the apostolic church as to the birth of our Lord, and whether the interpretation which represents the Holy Ghost as a person is not foreign to the creed itself. The criticisms of Professor Harnack of Berlin have been ably answered in some of their more important elements by Professor Swete of Cambridge, and the scope of this article will allow no more than a mention of this debate, a discussion which, though eagerly contested, is not likely ultimately to rob this creed of its time-honored repute as an epitome of the primitive teaching of the church.

For this is the crowning merit of the Apostles' Creed—it is a simple, nonpolemic statement of the more important facts of the gospel. It does not contain the whole of Christian truth, it has no theory of the Scriptures or of the method of salvation. Its treatment of the work of Christ or of the future state is most rudimentary. Whatever it may be for individual Christians, it is not a full or an adequate expression of the belief of a Christian body after nearly nineteen centuries of fulfillment of the Saviour's promise of the Holy Spirit as a guide "into all the truth." But it does contain the essentials of Christianity. It links itself distinctly to the baptismal formula given by our Lord himself. Its three primary divisions are the three divine names in that rite—"I believe in God the Father . . . and in Christ Jesus

. . . and in the Holy Ghost," is the backbone of the ancient confession. But it goes further than the baptismal formula, in that it answers the question to which every Christian should be ready to make reply, "Dost thou believe on the Son of God?" by a simple presentation of the primary facts of Christ's relation to the Father, of his miraculous birth, his passion, resurrection and glory, and of his future coming in judgment. And it also presents the three fundamental facts in the Christian life and hope—union in fellowship with the Master in his church, pardon for sin, and the resurrection unto eternal life. These characteristics of the earliest type of the Apostles' Creed are the features also of its later recension that has come down to our own day as a statement of faith in which the Latin, Anglican and Lutheran churches agree. The more modern form is amplified rather than altered. Of all the confessions of the Christian Church now in use that called by the name of the Apostles' is the simplest, the oldest and the most deserving of honor.

THE HOME MISSIONARY CRISIS.

BY REV. HENRY A. STIMSON, D. D.

The debt of the Congregational Home Missionary Society on April 1, 1895, was $134,000. Since that time $56,446 of this have been paid, almost entirely from the General Howard Roll of Honor, leaving a balance still due on that account of $77,554.

In the ten months of the current year the society has received as contributions from the living $181,200, an increase of $17,649 from the same source in the corresponding months of the preceding year. This, added to what has been paid on account of the debt, represents an increase of $73,000 in the gifts of the living for the ten months of the current fiscal year, which would be a most encouraging fact in our Home Missionary situation if this were the whole truth. But, by a strange providence, the $148,000 received from legacies in the corresponding ten months of the previous year have fallen in the past ten months in the current year to $92,000, a loss of $56,000.

The appropriations of the society last year were cut down $75,000, following a year in which the greatest care had been exercised to reduce the outlay to the smallest possible sum. Notwithstanding this reduction in the appropriations and expenses, the society is behind, at this date in the current year, $101,446. It is true that the months of February and March generally bring into the treasury considerably more money than is expended, and, ordinarily, that surplus would go far towards reducing the present deficit, but there are exceptional reasons why it may be expected that the surplus of these two months this year will be less than usual.

As a consequence the friends of the society ought to know its present condition and the possibility that its present indebtedness, composed of the current deficit added to the still unsettled balance of last year and representing a total of $179,000, may stand at the end of the fiscal year, April 1, substantially as it is now. This would be a condition of things so unprecedented in the history of the society as to create the gravest anxiety and inevitable distress. The movement to reduce the debt last year has been wide reaching and largely successful. With the ordinary receipts from legacies the society might have expected to close the current year with little if any greater indebtedness than what may remain unpaid of the balance of last year's account. As it is common business prudence should require us to recognize the probability of facing on April 1 the indebtedness I have indicated.

What is to be done? It is a question not for the executive committee only or for the officers or servants of the society, but for our entire Congregational constituency. It is a question which concerns the very life of the land. In view of the continuance of the hard times the executive committee in January planned a reduction of appropriations for the coming year of between $30,000 and $40,000. The difficulty of carrying such a reduction into effect will be appreciated when it is understood that all new work must still continue to be refused and that the outlay in support of the existing work and of missionaries actively engaged in the service has already been seriously reduced and must now be cut to the point at which the work is imperiled, but no alternative seems left. This is a possibility so painful in its execution and so wide reaching in its consequences that all who are called to administer the affairs of the society may well beg to be excused from facing it, but these facts are of such a compelling nature that they must be dealt with.

What then can be done? Our people, at least those who give at all, are already giving largely. Special appeals, which may meet occasional exigencies, are apt to be measured by a diminution in regular receipts. These facts can be brought home by personal conversation to many who perhaps are not aware of the situation, and in that way many individual gifts may be secured if the friends of the society will charge themselves with this duty. Many churches might increase their regular contributions, and perhaps in some cases take a special one.

There is money enough in the hands of Christian people for all the Lord's work, if its necessities were understood and the blessings attending it were appreciated. The information which will bring the giver in touch with the work is what is perhaps most needed, but one other suggestion just now has timeliness.

The inevitable consequence of the hard times is the increased urgency with which all forms of incidental appeals for outside charities are everywhere pressed. There is an unusual number of such appeals today. As a consequence, a large part of the benevolences of our churches and of individual givers is turned into these channels. The appeals are personal, the causes are good, the exigency in each case is great and the pressure is strong. There are few of them, perhaps, which are not wholly worthy of all they may receive, but it ought to be borne in mind in regard to the work which we as Congregationalists are doing through our great missionary societies that if we do not support our own work no one else will support it for us, and that if we suffer a work which has been going on for nearly a hundred years to flag and want for needful appropriations, not only do we suffer in the diminution of work today, but we introduce a paralysis into the system which will be felt for years to come. Confidence is impaired and distrust created, by which the courage and hope so essential to young movements are made impossible. Besides, trained workers, detached from their work and scattered, are hard again to secure. There is therefore special reason why the churches and givers should be urged to put aside as far as possible all pleas for incidental benevolences until the critical condition of our great societies be alleviated or removed.

The difficulties which confront us are not due to any neglect or misjudgment in the administration, as is shown by the fact that our brethren in other denominations are all encountering the same condition. The intelligent zeal with which they are bravely meeting their burden should inspire us to corresponding efforts, and if the thoughtful and the generous will recognize the force of this appeal and come forward to the support of the Home Missionary Society as a first obligation, because upon the prosperity and strength of our churches largely depends our power both to guide and to do in the Lord's cause, there is good reason for hoping that we shall soon be able to exercise that breadth of benevolence along the whole line which has been the glory and the joy of our Congregational churches.

In any case it should be recognized that the exigency of the Home Missionary Society is as critical as it is real and that it rests upon our entire constituency. Impairing our missionary churches we strike the heart of the Lord's cause. Every dollar that can be contributed or saved by economical administration is a dollar for which there is the utmost need in a department of Christian work upon which the blessing of God has abundantly rested from the beginning, and upon which we may joyfully say the same blessing may be expected in the future.

That the International Sunday School Convention to be held in Boston next June will be a success we have no doubt, for those most interested in it have proved already their ability to prepare for and manage successful conventions. The meeting of representative workers last Thursday evening at the Brunswick Hotel in this city made preliminary arrangements for its coming. But it is of great importance that the Christians of Massachusetts should be alive to their opportunity and make the most of it. Our State, through energetic efforts made during the last three or four years, has the best Sunday school organization of any State in the Union. This great triennial convention now comes to New England for the first time, and it probably will not again be held in this section of the country during the present generation. Every Sunday school in New England ought to receive a new impulse from this gathering, and will do so if its leaders plan for it wisely. Each church should hear of it frequently, should know what is expected from it and how the best results are to be obtained. It has sometimes been said that the International Sunday School Association does not adequately represent the churches. Let it be remembered, then, that it is the organization which, far more than any other, determines the character and methods of the Sunday school work of America. It does represent the churches, for its delegates are all members of the churches; but if this coming meeting shall prove to represent the churches more fully and ably than any of the seven which have preceded it none will be more gratified than those who have been most prominent in this great movement.

A WEEPING CUPID.

Why love! I thought you were gay and fair,
Merry of mien and debonair.
Why love!
What then means this brow so black,
Whose sullen gloom twin eyes give back,
Poor little god in tears, alack!
Why, love?

Why love! I thought that in your smiling cheek
Dainty dimples played hide and seek;
Why love!
Passing by like a winter's night,
With stormy sighs from lips all white.
Poor little god, how comes your plight,
Why, love?

A maiden said you were tall and bold,
With an arm of steel and a heart of gold;
Why love!
Whose changing face would make her day;
When came a frown, the sunshine play
Of smiles would chase the clouds away.
Why love!

A youth once said you were like a maid
With sunny hair in a golden braid;
Why love!
Whose cheeks were each a rose uncurled;
And brow a lilybell unfurled;
The fairest maid in all the world;
Why love!

Why love! I find you so weak and small,
A human child, not a god at all;
Why love!
Two angry, sleepy eyes that cry,
Two little hands so soft and shy,
I'll hush you with a lullaby.
Come, love!

A few months ago, in our issue of Sept. 5, we printed the opinions of five unmarried young women on the subject of matrimony. The girls voiced the sentiments of different classes—the daughter at home, the college graduate and the wage-earner, and the geographical representation was correspondingly broad. A discriminating reader remarked of their utterances: "Nothing impressed me so much in reading those articles as the absence of sentimentality and sensationalism. The writers were dignified, modest and practical, but they discussed the matter as dispassionately as they would calculate an eclipse." Must we therefore conclude that sentiment has no place in the life of the typical young woman of today? This week, in honor of the old-fashioned knight, St. Valentine, we have invited several young bachelors to air their views on matrimony, and it will be interesting to compare the two sets of opinions.

It is strange how seldom mothers seem to realize the force of their example in regard to public interests. Take, for instance, the church housekeeping. In the care of the kitchen, its cupboards, table linen, etc., the standard of neatness and carefulness differs greatly from that observed at home. Simply because it is a public concern individuals shirk the responsibility for order that is essential to good management. This reacts on the children more directly than seems possible at first thought. A dish in a church kitchen is broken heedlessly and all the furnishings are handled carelessly. The harm of such education upon the child is far greater than the intrinsic value of the property. Young Americans are naturally too regardless of the public welfare, especially of property rights, and every mother should do all she can to emphasize practically a due respect for them. Boys and girls who are reckless with utensils belonging to the church will not make ideal church treasurers when they are older.

Not long ago an advertising periodical reproduced in its pages one of the "interesting" pictures given away with cigars. It was the copy of a living picture photographed by a famous firm. The publication which reproduced it commented on the fact that a United States official judged it sufficiently moral to be sent through the mails! Let us lift up our hands once more against these miserable pictures. But can we not lift them in effort rather than in holy horror? One class of men has seldom been asked to help crush the abominable efforts of tobacco manufacturers to ruin boys' lives and bodies, and that class is the smokers. We all must admit that there are hosts of good men who smoke and who claim that the habit properly indulged in does no harm. With them, therefore, should lie the chief burden of ridding the trade of its debasing embellishments. Many parents who keep their boys from low museum shows would be shocked to find in their sons' pockets pictures taken from tobacco or cigarette boxes far worse in their influence than the ballet.

THE WOOING OF MARGERY BREWS.

A FIFTEENTH CENTURY VALENTINE.

BY EDWARD PORRITT.

All the parties concerned in this story of a fifteenth century valentine lived in the County of Norfolk. One of the families, that of the Pastons, although of the lesser landed gentry, occupied a prominent place in East Anglia in the times of Edward IV., Richard III. and Henry VII. In those days, as now, in marriages in this rank of English life, the settlements stand out as matters of great importance; but in the wooing of Margery Brews, these famous old Paston letters show that, while on the part of the father of the bride and the mother and brother of the bridegroom, emphasis was laid on the settlements in land and in money, there was much real love-making on the part of the two young people most concerned.

The Brews and the Pastons were already connected. Sir Thomas Brews and his wife, Dame Elizabeth of Topcroft, were cousins to John Paston and his elder brother, the Squire of Paston. The acquaintance between John Paston and Margery Brews had existed for some months before St. Valentine's Day, 1477. John Paston had heard of the comeliness of his half cousin of Topcroft from many and diverse persons, and "specyally by my right trusty frend Rychard Stratton," by whom he sent his first letter to Margery. The original of this letter is now one of the manuscript treasures of the British Museum. Its present interest is the boldness with which John Paston made his choice. As yet he had not seen Margery. He was content to take her on the word of his friends, and in asking to be permitted to pay his addresses he sought to know Margery's own desires in the matter. Then comes a gap in the love letters.

But Margery and her mother, Dame Elizabeth, were both willing that matters should proceed. Dame Elizabeth looked with great favor on even a younger son of the Pastons, and wrote pretty and encouraging letters to Margery's suitor. She labored hard, also, with her husband, Sir Thomas, to make settlements which should be satisfactory to the Pastons; and as Valentine's Day approached success was apparently attending her efforts. If John Paston's friends would secure him an income from land of twenty pounds a year, Margery's father was willing that the suit should proceed, and he would contribute £100 towards the housekeeping of John and Margery. Nor was this all that was to go with Margery. Dame Elizabeth adds:

> And cosyn, that day that sche is maryed, my fadur will gyffe hyr fifty merk. But and we accorde, I schalle gyffe yowe a grettere tresur, that is, a wytty gentylwoman, and, if I sey it, bothe good and vertuous; for if I shuld take money for hyr, I wold not gyffe hyr for a thousand pounds. But, cosyn, I trust zowe so meche that I wold thynk hyr wele besett on zowe, and ze were worthe meche more.

Margery herself was quite eager for the match and wearied of the delays involved by the discussions between the families on ways and means. On the eve of St. Valentine, Dame Elizabeth writes to John that Margery has now become such an advocate of him that "I may never have rest night nor day for calling and crying upon to bring the said matter to effect." "And Cosyn," continues Dame Elizabeth, > uppon Fryday is Sent Volentynes Day, and every Brydde chesyth hym a mate; and yf it lyke yowe to come one Thursday at nyght and so purvey yowe that ye may abyde there tyll Monday, I trusty to God, that ye schall so speke to myn husband; and I schall prey that we schall bryng the mater to a conclusyon. For, cosyn,

> It is but a sympill oke,
> That is cut down at the first stroke.

After this comes the first letter from Margery. It reads:

> Ryght reverent and wurschypfull, and my rryght wele beloved Voluntyne, I recomende me unto yowe, ffull hertely desyring to here of yowr welefare, whech I beseche Almyghty God long for to preserve unto Hys plesur, and yowr hert's desyre. And yf it please yowe to here of my welfare, I am not in good heele of body, nor of herte, nor schall be tyll I her ffrom yowe;
> For there wottys no creature what peyn that I endure,
> And for to be deed I dare it not dyscure.
> And my lady my moder hath labored the matter to my ffadur full delygently, but sche can no mor gete then ye knowe of, for the whech God knowyth I am full sory. But yf that ye loffe me, as I truste verely that ye do, ye will not leffe me therefor; for if that ye hade not halfe the lyvelode that ye hafe, for to do the grettest labur that any woman on lyve myght, I wold nor forsake yowe. No more to yowe at this tyme, but the Holy Trinite hafe yowe in kepyng. And I beseche yowe that this bill be not seyn of none erthely ccreatur, safe only your selffe. And thys letter was indyte at Topcroft, with full hevy herte,
> By your own, MARGERY BREWS.

The Brews family was less careful of letters and papers than the Pastons. John Paston replied to Margery's valentine, but his letter is not preserved. Margery's next letter shows that the Pastons were still insisting on better terms. Margery assures her lover that her father cannot do more than he has promised, and, anticipating that this inability or unwillingness of her father's to make a better settlement may put an end to the suit, she adds that the idea of such a termination "causyth myne herte to be full hevy." If John Paston went to Topcroft and his visit ended as he had suggested it might, then writes the much-tried Margery, "schuld I be meche mor sory and full of hevynesse." Marriage with a younger and almost landless son had no terrors for Margery, who was now very much in love with John Paston, and she tells him that if he could be content with what her father had offered "and my por persone, I wold be the meryest mayden on grounde."

Margery's mother never got discouraged. When matters were at a standstill between Margery's father and John Paston, a neighbor of the Brewses, evidently at Dame Elizabeth's instigation, wrote to tell Paston that the bride's chamber and her raiment would be worth two hundred marks, and that Dame Elizabeth was willing that the newly married couple should have their board with her for three years after their marriage. He tells him also that Dame Elizabeth thinks it might be better if he pressed Sir Thomas still further, and adds: "And I harde my lady say,

That it was a febill oke,
That was kit down at the first stroke."

Later on John Paston thinks that something can be settled if Dame Paston, his mother, and Dame Elizabeth meet at Norwich to discuss the matter, and in urging this conference reciprocates the pleasant things Dame Elizabeth said about him. "I trow," he writes to his mother, "ther is not a kynder woman leveing then I shall have to my modyr in lawe if the mater take, nor yet a kynder fadyr in lawe then I shall have, though he be harde to me as yet."

Next the two knights get into communication and discuss settlements at first hand. Sir Thomas would do more for Margery, but he has younger daughters to provide for, and consequently assures his cousin, the Knight of Paston, that he is "ryght lothe to bestowe so mech upon one doghter that the other her sisters schuld far the wars." And so the conferences and correspondence go on through the spring and summer of 1477, until Dame Margaret gives up one of her manors to her second son, Margery's father increases the marriage portion to four hundred marks, and the marriage takes place at the end of the year. It was a happy marriage, for seven years later, when John Paston was detained in London over Christmas, Margery writes from Norfolk expressing her sorrow at his absence and telling him, "I shall thynke myself halfe a wedow because ye shal not be at home."

YET LOVE CAN LAST.

Yet love can last, yet love can last,
The future be as was the past,
And faith and fondness never know
The chill of dwindling afterglow,
If to familiar hearth there cling
The virgin freshness of the spring,
And April's music still be heard
In wooing voice and winning word.

If when autumnal shadows streak
The furrowed brow, the wrinkled cheek,
Devotion, deepening to the close,
Like fruit that ripens tenderer grows;
If, though the leaves of youth and hope
Lie thick on life's declining slope,
The fond heart, faithful to the last,
Lingers in love-drifts of the past;
If with the gravely shortening days
Faith trims the lamp, faith feeds the blaze,
And reverence, robed in wintry white,
Sheds fragrance like a summer night,
Then love can last!

The effect of uncovered electric lights upon the eyes is claimed by London oculists to be extremely detrimental. The feeling among them is so strong that it is even suggested that Parliament take up the matter and prohibit the use of plain glass globes for electric lights unless they are properly shaded.

THE WAY TO GET HAPPILY MARRIED.

BY AMELIA E. BARR.

Marriage is destiny, and when we say "Marriages are made in heaven" we make no mistake. True marriages are foreordained, and the good and wise Orderer of human lives not only selects the parents best for the childhood of individual souls, but also takes thought for the companion with whom the active and influential years of life must be spent. Not all men and women are elected to matrimony. Many in every generation have characters which would attain their highest excellence under the fine discipline of solitary life. But as they are creatures of free will, they often insist on finding mates for themselves. In such self-elected marriages there is a conscious violation of the unwritten Scripture, enlightening every human heart, and they who make it must take whatever sorrow they have invited to themselves by the forcing of their destiny. These are the marriages of convenience, juxtaposition, self-will, vanity, etc. And they are also the marriages that furnish the tragedies of life, and for whose relief the divorce courts have been brought into existence.

But with true marriage there is no doubt and no difficulty. The parties to it may be far as the east and the west asunder, but when the hour strikes for their meeting the whole circumference of the world will not keep them apart. Some happy accident—for we always call God's part in any affair an "accident"—will bring them face to face, and as soon as they meet they look, they love, and then tell each other the reason why. Such marriages are always happy. They may not be always prosperous, but they are happy. Poverty does not kill this love, personal faults make it more patient, sickness more tender, death more pure and enduring. Whatever is predestinated is good and right, and these marriages arranged by a prescient love and wisdom—though not without the sorrows incident to the condition—have the strength of the predestined. They bring forth love and joy, united hopes and double happiness.

These being indisputable facts, what then is the best way for a woman? To be at rest. To be serene in waiting. To keep busy in the duties she has, for it is in the way of duty a good destiny is met. Was not Rebecca going to the well for water when Abraham's envoy put on her the golden bracelets and bespoke her for his master Isaac? It is good for a woman neither to hurry her destiny nor to cross it by her own meddling. If anywhere in the world there is a true husband for a woman, he is as sure to come at the proper hour as the sun is sure to rise after the dawning. And when he comes her heart will know him; there will be no delays and no uncertainties, and the meeting will grow to matrimony as surely and as naturally as the dawn grows to the noontide.

But if the Preserver of men has said to any soul, "Be thou solitary and alone, for it is best so," in vain will that soul seek a mate. There is no mate provided. It may break through the bars of providence and circumstance and choose its own lot, but in some way or other a bitter lot it will be. From such willful spirits come willful woes of all kinds. There is but one word of warning for them—if God has shut the door to the house of marriage, do not get in at the window.

Closet and Altar

We misunderstand each other—it would be strange if we did not often misunderstand the ways of God. The essential thing is that we should be at rest in heart in the remembrance that it is impossible that he should misunderstand us or judge us hastily or harshly. It is when our minds are most perturbed that we are inclined to quarrel with his dealings, and then (if we will but stop to consider it) our opinion is not valuable. As one who waits for a cloudless day to estimate the genial warmth of the sun, we must wait for the clearing of our clouds of doubt before we imagine that we know the purpose of God's love.

We need to be more alone with God that we may learn, as only in solitude we can learn, the sweet secret of his Fatherhood.—George Dawson.

Jesus comes and looks into your face, with that calm, holy, searching gaze of his, and says, "Lovest thou me?" As you are about to answer you think of all that you have done that is dishonorable and sinful. You are dumb before him. Yet you are conscious that you do love him, that in your heart, beneath all your sins and failures and faults, there is love for him. What a comfort it is to cast yourself on his knowledge of what is in you! I am glad that perfection is not the test of discipleship. We may be full of faults. We go on stumbling every day. We do nothing beautifully. We misrepresent the Christ whose name we bear. We hurt the friends we want to help. Christ knows all these sad failures. But, while he sees the worst, he sees also the best, and he loves on—loves unto the uttermost.—J. R. Miller.

Lord, many times I am weary quite
Of mine own self, my sin, my vanity.
Yet be not thou, or I am lost outright,
Weary of me.

And hate against myself I often bear
And enter with myself in fierce debate;
Take thou my part against myself, nor share
In that just hate.

—R. C. Trench.

Our Father, let us hear thee say to us as we step forth into the untried day that thou art with us, holding our right hand. We are like the bruised reed and the smoking flax. Instead of being fervent and earnest, constrained by the love of Christ, we are fickle and changeful and uncertain. We creep where we should fly, we stumble where we should run. We are often weary with ourselves, but do not thou weary of us, Saviour of men, until thou hast done in our life what thou shalt yet do in the world in causing the deserts to rejoice and blossom as the rose. Make darkness light before us and crooked places straight. Let thine angel lead us forth into the liberty of the sons of God. Some of us shrink from our life work, from those with whom we have to associate, from unwelcome toil and irksome tasks. Enable us to see thy plan and to trust thee, who art working out thy plan in our lives. May we find the pearls at the heart of sorrow. Let thy presence be as a film of protection between ourselves and everything that might hurt spirit, soul or body. Amen.

Matrimony as Viewed by Young Men Today.

SENSE AND SENTIMENT.

When I was a boy my mother said to me, "Never look for a wife, my son. When the time comes for you to be married you will find the right one." I have watched my friends, and have found that those who took up the duties of everyday life, and thought nothing about their matrimonial future, were the ones who were best prepared to meet it when it came.

Young men are often misjudged and called flirts, when they are simply seeking those whose society will develop their manhood most fully. Physiologists tell us that a man is not fully developed until he is twenty-five years old, and I have reason to believe that some are not matured till long after that. The first thing a young bachelor should learn is that he can make progress alone without serious inconvenience. He should understand that a wife is not absolutely necessary for his existence. Many have lived single and accomplished as much as the majority of married men. As I write, I think of a far-famed artist, a prominent Boston philanthropist, and a preacher who was loved and honored on both sides of the Atlantic, who died unmarried. . . . Marriage brings responsibilities and duties which prevent a man from performing social service that he otherwise could. An eloquent pulpit orator recently said to an audience of Christian Endeavorers, "You can work as we older Christians cannot, with our load of cares and anxieties." True, but who is to direct these earnest, eager disciples? It can best be done by some older man whose time is not absorbed in planning to make a salary of seventy-five dollars a month pay monthly expenses of eighty-five dollars.

A young man is expected to be more generous when single than when he has a wife to support, and his home duties and ambitions give him an object in life which makes him more decided in refusing outside calls where he would otherwise yield.

When a young man is attracted to a lady his first thought should be, "Does she satisfy all the higher elements of my nature?" When he is certain that she fills a place in his life that no one else does, giving him hopes, aspirations and desires that are unselfish, he can feel sure that he is justified in availing himself of her society, until marriage seems the consummation of their happiness. He who depends on God for aid and direction in all other affairs of life is not warranted in neglecting him in considering that sacred union which not only affects his own happiness but that of many others. I think there would be more happy marriages if the following saying of the old Greek philosopher were adopted: "God is ever drawing like to like, and it is he who gives to those whom he intends should be friends letters of introduction."

A Man About Town.

FROM THE THEOLOGUE'S STANDPOINT.

This is the bitter cry of an unhappy theologue. A tyrannical church decrees that, whether I will or no, I must be married directly. That particular society which is somewhere waiting to become the object of my first efforts at ministerial leadership has prepared a dwelling place for me and my non-existent family, has made ready a lot of thankless work for my hypothetical wife to do when she arrives, has become predisposed to look with curiosity if not with suspicion upon bachelor preachers, and has within it a modest quota of gossips and mischief-makers, who will lose no opportunity of annoying me as long as I refuse to take unto myself a help-meet (who will also be a help-eat, and that on a painfully small income).

But, alas, I have no wife, nor am I to any extent engaged, nor—so far as I can judge—irrecoverably in love! What, then, shall I do? Shall I seek out some approachable young person of suitable age and condition—say some city missionary or pastor's assistant, whose charms are ethical rather than æsthetic—and say to her, "My dear young lady, I am in a most embarrassing position. My profession demands that I support an establishment. I consider you, on the whole, a most unobjectionable young woman, and I should esteem it a favor if you would be so kind as to render me a little assistance in the present exigency." Is that what these ladies and gentlemen would have me do? And yet, from my own point of view, it would be an abominably bad thing not to marry, though I might be pardoned for not doing so on the ground that I was born a bachelor. But, seriously, I know that if I remain single I shall become a queer stick, only loosely bound to my fellows, much distorted by the influences of my profession, living in the world as an outsider, very lonely at times, and, worst of all, deprived of the best opportunity life offers for the development of the higher affections. And these things weigh the more heavily when I see that their influence is deeply personal, and that in no profession in the world is personality so largely the basis of success as in the preaching of the gospel. Such, then, is my complaint—which I think to be second only to the groans of the Britons—and I can see but two ways out of the predicament. One way is to fall madly in love, to be regardlessly married and to live happily ever after. The other is to shave off my beard and go over to Rome.

LOOK BEFORE YOU LEAP.

Marriage seems to me a great separation, because when a man marries a woman he surrenders his problematical interest in all other women. At present, I regard all the unmarried women as mine. If I should marry one of them I should be separating myself from all the rest. But the impression left by actual experience may be quite otherwise. . . .

My impression is that almost always a man meets with a girl suitable for him by the time he is one and twenty. The notion that there is only one person in the universe who could satisfactorily fill the rôle is the product of ignorance and vanity, though I do not suppose suitable persons are so common that if a man fairly loses one good opportunity it may not be years before he meets with another.

The suitability of the person should be the first consideration and the ways and means quite subordinate. As a rule, however, I should say it is not wise for people to be engaged until they can see pretty clearly how they are going to live. The attraction of one sex for the other is often so powerful as to overthrow all rational and prudential considerations. Hence, it is seldom that one is safe in trusting exclusively to his own judgment. Every one has a few friends (parents or others) whose judgment he feels bound to respect, and if he does not literally consult these he should at least consider what they will think of the matter when they know it. As a means of discovering the right person, I have said on two or three occasions to young men who have spoken to me on the subject: "It is the person whose society is not only pleasing but wholesome and, in some sense, restraining in its influence upon the mind."

There must, of course, be substantial agreement on some fundamental questions, but married people should not agree in opinion beyond the dictates of their judgment. Many a woman will agree with her husband in everything in return for a good home and plenty of money to spend. She would like to go to church on a Sunday, but if her husband does not want any religion and prefers to stay at home she too will stay at home. This is the sort of relationship that is often called a happy married life, but it does not strike me so. Each should have the full benefit of the other's opinions and convictions. . . .

As to why I myself have lived half a century without marrying I do not wish to say and yet I do not know why I should not, especially as that is just what people would like to know. Briefly, then, for about ten years—say from twenty to thirty—I was decided against married life because I believed that, as a Christian, I could live a more satisfactory life single, being, indeed, under the influence of the monastic principle—though far removed from sacerdotalism. Since a change of sentiment the circumstances have never seemed favorable to a change of state. My present position is this: I have so much confidence in the goodness of God and in the wisdom of his providence as to desire nothing in my future but the fulfillment of his good pleasure. What, however, this may be on the subject in question I feel at present unable to divine; but this I know, the first step towards improving your position, by marriage or in any other way, is to make yourself perfectly contented just where and as you are and this is what I do.

A WISTFUL BACHELOR'S REFLECTIONS.

Our feminine college graduates seem to be worrying because they do not marry faster. Their fears, if well based, are important to their former professors and boards of trustees for, if it become an ascertained fact that her sheepskin is likely to keep a woman "spinster of arts," grass will soon be growing in the halls of Wellesley and of Smith. For one, however, and as a patriotic man, I do not believe it, else Mrs. Poyser's remark will obtain a new and shameful significance: "You say women are fools? God knows he made 'em to match the men." Men are not altogether without sense and have some consciousness of the value of a quickened intelligence.

But I have not quite touched the point. The trouble is supposed to be, not that men are afraid of women graduates, but that the women's ideal of a husband is raised out of sight of the practicabilities. True in some cases, no doubt, but, if we are fair in our review of the feminine collegians whom we have known, we shall emphatically disbelieve it for the most part. A women's college is a new thing, relatively, and strong in its ideals therefore, but I question whether the ideal of married life is much higher in it than in a man's college, temperamental differences of the sexes being taken into account. Remember, too, that in the earliest days a girl graduate could marry none but a minister or a missionary, and admit that at any rate the ideal is rapidly decli— ahem! changing. (I am a minister myself.)

As to college men, they are quite given to matrimony, although they marry later than their schoolmates who do not have the impediment of four years of collegiate unproductiveness. I have been out of college ten years and seventy-five of my 115 classmates are married. The other forty want to be, and some of them would be if it were not for the contrariness of woman.

Marriage is a custom which will not go out of fashion. When it becomes obsolete we shall have entered on the heavenly state. (Somehow, the sound of that implies more than I meant.) The survival of the fittest favors fatherly men and motherly women. The refining of life increasingly exalts the home. It makes men and women more sympathetic and more necessary to each other. It intensifies the love of children and yearning for them. It makes the lot of the solitary harder.

Yet solitaries there will continue to be, men and women who by reason of some coldness of temperament have missed the great rapture, persons disappointed in love, or of broken purposes, sons who had to take fathers' places, maiden aunts summoned to care for motherless children, women in half-deserted farming districts, men full of some great work and remaining unmarried "for the kingdom of heaven's sake." Will they not have heartsicknesses for that closest friend whom they have never known? Will they not almost ache for the touch of little bodies leaning trustfully against their own? Most surely. And just then, while the bachelor college graduate meditates wistfully, sitting in his classmate's happy home, that classmate will exclaim, jovially, out of the excess of his happiness, "Jones, old man, you ought to be married!" Does he not know it? And does he not realize a little, yes, a little, how Enoch Arden must have felt when an old friend advised him: "Man, you ought to look up some nice girl. You're not old yet." No, he was not old. Well, the heart knoweth his own bitterness, but I wish rather to think, not bitterly, of the multitude of happy marriages which help to keep the stranger a "living soul," though he may not intermeddle with their joy. JONES, UNWILLING BACHELOR.

DON'T WAIT FOR RICHES.

I am thoroughly in favor of marriage, but not at too early an age. I do not think it always wise to wait for better circumstances. I believe in the support of the family being borne by the man, but a true wife, realizing the dignity and beauty of the relation of wife and mother and care-taker of home will take her share of the responsibility. Each should help the other in the best way. A man's character is strengthened by a good marriage, and I believe that a good wife intellectually is the best business partner a man can have, looking at it from a worldly point of view.

A YOUNG BUSINESS MAN.

WHY MEN SHOULD MARRY.

It was clearly meant that all men, as well as all women, should marry; and those who, for whatever reason, miss this obvious destiny are, from nature's point of view, failures. It is not a question of personal felicity (which in eight cases out of ten may be more than problematic), but of race responsibility. The unmarried man is a skulker, who, in order to secure his own ease, dooms some woman, who has a rightful claim upon him, to celibacy. And in so doing he defrauds himself of the opportunities for mental and moral development which only the normal experience can provide. He deliberately stunts the stature of his manhood, impoverishes his heart and brain, and chokes up all the sweetest potentialities of his soul. To himself he is apt to appear like the wise fox that detects the trap, though it be ever so cunningly baited; that refuses to surrender his liberty for the sake of an appetizing chicken or rabbit, which may, after all, be a decoy, stuffed with sawdust; while, as a matter of fact, his case is that of the cowardly servant in the parable, who, for fear of losing his talent, hid it in a napkin, and in the end was deemed unworthy of his stewardship.—H. H. Boyesen in North American Review.

Elizabeth Stuart Phelps Ward tells an amusing story of Professor Park of Andover. He had been preaching somewhere in the days of his prime, and after the service a man lingered and, approaching him, declared Dr. Park's discourse had moved him so much that he should owe the salvation of his soul to the preacher. The stranger continued, "I wish to offer, sir, to the seminary with which you are connected a slight tribute of my admiration for and indebtedness to you"; whereupon he drew out his purse, and while Dr. Park waited with breathless expectancy of a generous contribution, the gentleman drew out with indescribable dignity a five-dollar bill. Was this the price at which he valued his soul?

13. TERMINAL DELETION.

The Christian world reproachfully hath gazed
On happenings where, its worship's birthplace near,
Armenia cowers, gaunt and pale with fear,
Before the Turk's assassin arm upraised—
Hath gazed and, horror-stricken and amazed,
Dropping the while a sympathetic tear,
Hath muttered threats of vengeance swift and dear
For wrongs of those poor souls oppression-crazed.

Our boasted "Land of Liberty" within,
Meanwhile, Mob-murder stalks, erect and proud,
Plying his tortures; and, although the crowd
ONE fulminating 'gainst the Islam's sin,
We ALL in vain to hear amid the din
One manly voice arise in protest loud.

14. THE DONATION PARTY.

(Fit into each blank the name of some city or country.)

The minister's donation party was over, and he was examining the things so kindly brought him. It was a strange collection of the useful and the ornamental.

Most conspicuous of all his gifts was a fine large , ready stuffed for the oven. It was lying on a flowered platter of * ware, which was, of itself, a beautiful addition to his small  closet. There were two aromatic paper bags, the smell of one suggesting the * drink without which his breakfast was never complete, and the other being his favorite * tea. There was also a large bag of , that brought to his mind the goodness of muffins. Two packages held toilet articles: one had a cake of * soap and the other a bottle of sweet smelling *. Then there was a * * clipped from the big rock of Gibraltar, that he was to use for a paper weight. It had been a good donation indeed.

15. EXCLAMATORY NUMERICAL.

He said that when the moon was full
We would go sailing in the "Gull."
But when we reached the place at night,
Our white-winged craft was not in sight.
"1-2!" "2-3!" "3!" "2-3-4!"
Resounded on the sandy shore,
As we exclaimed at adverse fate,
And sulkily sat down to wait.
Now as we talked of various things,
In rambling chat that twilight brings,
"1-2-3-4!" "2-1!" rang loud and clear.
All started up: "The Gull is here!"
"4!" "3-2!" "2-1!" then we cried,
And quickly "speeled the vessel's side,"
While Echo swooned in consternation
At so much noisy exclamation.

Until it gets the WHOLE to sail.

Since the last Tangles were sent to the printer several corrections of the supposed error in the settlement of the "Business Tangle" have arrived, proving this to have been a particularly neat "catch." The point so many overlooked was mentioned two weeks ago.

THE PRIZE AWARD.

The "County Fair" was a great success. The solvers who obtained complete lists of the counties were unexpectedly numerous, nearly 100 of the lists received being practically perfect. It was provided that neatness should be counted in case of a tie, and in this respect the list of Henry Lincoln Bailey, Middletown Springs, Vt., appears to be slightly better than any other. He is therefore awarded the prize. A little confusion was caused by the placing of counties 30 and 43 in Montana instead of Missouri, but most solvers quickly detected the error and were not misled.

The Conversation Corner.

MY DEAR CORNERERS: I have had many letters showing your kindly interest, all over the land, in our suffering Eskimo boy, Pomiuk, as he lies on his bear skin in the little shore hospital and sings "Takpanêle, takpanêle," all the long arctic winter. I hope you will continue to remember him and to pray for him, but this week our thoughts go to another part of our great world, where also we have "Corner" friends in peril and in suffering.

To begin with, get out your map and find Armenia in Turkey in Asia, the scene of the fearful massacres, where so many hundred Christian people have become martyrs for Christ's sake and where thousands of others are still suffering the loss of all things and threatened with death if they still believe in His name. Make a blue pencil mark under Trebizond, on the southeast shore of the Black Sea, and find in the interior Yozgat (where our "Turkish Twins" live), Cæsarea (where the Fowle children are), Marsovan, Marash, Harpoot, Oorfa, Mardin, Van, and other stations where are missionary families which some of you know. (At Oorfa lives Miss Shattuck, a Corner correspondent and contributor to the Cabinet, who has suffered most of any, but has bravely kept at her post through two fearful massacres.)

The photograph on the cover of last week's Congregationalist is a picture of a part of the people who were at the mission house at Trebizond on one of the distributing days (Dec. 28). The first letter about it is from a dear little Cornerer in that city, from whom I have often had messages and whose photograph is in the Corner Album. She is ten years old.

TREBIZOND, TURKEY, JAN. 8, 1896.

Dear Mr. Martin: I have never written to you before, but my brothers have. A few days ago we took a picture of some of the people who come for help. We have sent you one. We are helping over 5,000 people. The massacre here began on Oct. 8, 1895. About 500 people were killed in town. At the villages there were not many, but many houses were burned. I am your constant reader,

RUTH PARMELEE.

You can see little Ruth sitting beside her brother Julius (whose letters have been in the Corner) at the left of the picture, their father, Dr. Parmelee, standing behind them against the house without a hat. Mrs. Crawford of Brousa—near Constantinople on your map—who just joined her husband at Trebizond to assist in the relief work, writes in explanation of the picture:

This mission house sheltered two hundred people after the massacre, some for a week, some for a longer time. The string is not a clothesline. It represents an Oriental custom. When there is a ring at the gate, somebody above or below pulls it to lift the latch, à la Red Riding-hood: "Pull the string and the latch will fly up." The stone building is a Persian khan, which is filled every night with great, big camels, and from which the camels, loaded with European dry goods and groceries, start out every day, hauled at and bawled at by funny looking drivers with caps as big as half bushel baskets made of camels' hair. From the upper windows of the mission house little Ruth Parmelee saw a man shot in the road that runs between the mission house wall and the khan.

Miss Astina, with an open book in her hand, an Armenian lady teacher, who keeps the list of the city poor and pays them their weekly allowance, with Miss Chambers, who stands beside her, visit in all the homes to see who are needy. Behind Miss A. is Takouhi Doudon, servant at the mission house. If the string connected with the outer door of the house had been pulled one minute later on the day of the massacre her little boy would have been killed. As it was he just escaped inside, and then the gun that would have been fired at him was aimed at the man whom Ruth saw shot. Next to Julius Parmelee is one of his little playmates, Dihran, whose father was massacred and buried in the trench. Dihran's brother, Aram, stands next to Miss Astina. He had to give up his college course at Marsovan and come back to attend to his father's business.

The men in front are the head men of the different villages, who were all well-to-do farmers. When the massacre began they escaped to the mountains with the clothes they had on their backs. Their clothing, their bedding, the food that they had laid up for winter, bushels of filberts from their filbert groves, cows, oxen and sheep were taken away from them. After complaint was made to the government some things were returned to them—old, worn coverlets where new ones had been stolen, and one cow where ten had been taken away. The old man in the center is blind. The dark-bearded man in front is Paul, the son of Black Ishmael.

Other letters, too, have to do with the missionary families in Turkey. A Chicago boy writes about his cousin in Harpoot:

. . . Cousin Herbert is nearly eight years old. He lives in Harpoot, because Uncle Frank is a missionary. When the Kurds were trying to kill the Christians and burn their houses they left their house and went into the yard of the girls' school. They had to wake the baby up. He was having his nap. Pretty soon the flames came out of the schoolhouse beside them and a bad man came into the yard and shot at Uncle Frank. He missed him. Cousin Herbert was not afraid. He said to his papa: "Papa, it is not that I am afraid to die, but I am afraid I may be badly wounded." They sent them a box from Mardin, and when that reached them they undressed that night and went to bed for the first time in seventeen days. Herbert said, when he saw what was in the box: "How wonderfully the Lord has supplied our needs."

You can see the house (President Gates's) where Herbert lived in the picture of the Harpoot mission premises in the Missionary Herald for January. That house, although robbed and set on fire, escaped the destruction which came to the other buildings. We send our love to him. How little we can realize how much those missionary families must suffer as they bravely stay at their posts and care for the persecuted Christians among whom they work. Another letter says that Herbert G. said: "The angel of the Lord must have encamped round about us so that we were not harmed."

And now I have a letter from the brother of Ruth and Julius, who, with the mother, is in this country.

CLIFTON SPRINGS, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Martin: Thank you for certificate of admission to the Corner. We had a very nice time in Europe, visiting Genoa, Turin, Geneva, Macon in France and Paris. We were four days in London and went to Chester, stopping at Oxford for a few hours. On Sunday we walked around the town and went to the Cathedral. On Monday we had a bath in the river Dee, and went up to Eton in a little steamboat. In the afternoon we went to Hawarden. We walked around in the park and passed Mr. Gladstone's house. We tried to get into the old castle, but it was closed. Then we went to the church and there we were told that Mr. Gladstone would be there at the evening service. So we waited and when he came he passed right behind us, us, and Mrs. Gladstone was with him. Then we went to Aberfoyle. There we rode on a stagecoach to Loch Katrine, which we crossed on a steamboat and went to Glasgow. The next day we sailed for New York on the "State of Nebraska." It took eleven days to cross the ocean. Yours truly, MAURICE P.

BRIDGEPORT, CT.

Dear Mr. Martin; I had a new writing-desk for Christmas. May I belong to the Corner? I am twelve years old. Did you know that three pennies will pay a boy's board for a day in Turkey? HERBERT G.

Is not that about the rate we paid for Aram and Vahan? Poor boys—I wonder if the cruel Turks have killed them!

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK.

How Big Are We? An article in a recent English magazine upon "The Measurement of a Man" has some very interesting facts worthy of preservation. They were collected by the "British Association." The average Scotchman is 5 ft., 8⅝ in. high; the average Irishman 5 ft., 7⅞ in.; the average Englishman, 5 ft., 7½ in.; the average Welshman 5 ft., 6⅝ in. The British professional class, according to the bulk of the statistics, average 5 ft., 9 in., and are the tallest men in the world, except some of the South Sea Islanders. About 10,000 persons were examined at the Health Exhibition: the tallest man was 6 ft., 7½ in.; the tallest woman, 5 ft., 10⅜ in.; the heaviest man was 22 stone (how much in pounds?); the heaviest woman, 15 stone, 12 lbs. Yet it was remarkable how level were the dimensions of the vast majority.

Comparative Stature. It is asserted in the same article that the Briton is evidently getting longer and heavier, and seems to be approaching the time when he will average 5 ft., 8 in. high, and weigh 10 stone, 10 lbs. His recruiting stature is three inches higher than that of any European army and two inches higher than it was eighty-five years ago. The professional man in the country is taller than his fellow in the town, and the country schoolboy is taller than the schoolboy of the great cities. It would be well to compare these figures with similar statistics in the United States.

Who Can Run the Fastest? Even if the Britons are so tall they were beaten in running by an American native—that is, by "Deerfoot," a full-blooded Seneca Indian, whose death was reported as occurring at the Cattaraugus Reservation a few days ago. I remember seeing him in one of the Indian camps at the World's Fair in 1893, and I have a memorandum in my note-book that at Cambridge, Eng., he ran 11½ miles and 29 yards in one hour. "Deerfoot" was then sixty-five years old, and looked stolid and stupid enough, but it was in 1861 that he defeated the English champions in running and was presented with a purse by the Prince of Wales.

Holland Canals in Winter. Those who read the Corner letter of last week about the canal boats of summer should read a sketch in the London Leisure Hour for January on the skating tour of two English girls in that same queer, quaint Deutschland, for in the winter the canals are all frozen from the Zuider to the North Sea, and everybody travels on them, either for business or pleasure. It is the usual custom to skate in single file, either using a pole or taking hold of hands. At one time the writer says, "We heard through the snow skates behind us, and three giant Dutchmen loomed through, skating in this way, one behind another. I thought the last of them invited me to take his disengaged hand, at any rate it was held out behind him, so I took it and away we all went. Suddenly bells are heard, a sleigh, drawn by three dogs, laden with barrels and a woman, baby, and man in fur cap, comes in sight. The track is very narrow. Our leader's skate catches in a rut, he shoots into deep snow on the right side head first. Instantly we all separate, we dash on without turning, and never see our three men, or those three dogs with the woman, the man and the baby, again."

The Two Moons Again. One statement in the Scrap-Book of Jan 30 was a little ambiguous and ought to be made plain. The "seven instances of the same phenomenon within fifteen years" were of two full moons in one month, not in the month of December; of this latter there was one case during that time—in December, 1884.

LESSON FOR FEB. 23. Luke 8: 43-55.

FAITH ENCOURAGED.

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D.D.

Two incidents are before us in this lesson old by the evangelist to show what is faith n Christ and how he rewards it. The climax f the lesson is in verse 50, in the words of esus, "Fear not, only believe."

1. Faith is confidence in Jesus Christ born f a sense of need. That is just what Jairus llustrated. He was a man of wealth and fficial position. Such a man expects to naintain his dignity, to summon help for his vants and to pay for it. But he had come to crisis in his life where he had a supreme eed. The utmost pathos is compressed into is simple statement as he fell down at Jesus' eet: "My little daughter lieth at the point f death."

He was shut up in his need to Jesus alone. Ie may have had confidence in physicians, nd rightly. But there was no longer help or him in them. The touch of death already pparent in his child's face told him that they vere powerless. No human device could ave her. It was Jesus or nothing, and that vithout delay.

He knew some reasons for placing confi- ence in Jesus. Many sick had been healed y him. Some hopelessly diseased ones had een restored to health. Jairus knew that esus had cured persons as sick as his daugh- er was. Though he was shut up to Jesus his ase was not hopeless.

He had also a strong claim to present to esus—the claim of humanity. Jesus was a an, and no true man will turn away from nother's need when he knows that he alone an help it. Every supreme need gives to the ne who has it a claim on Jesus. Such a per- on has reason to expect help if he asks for it. uppose you had a son in a distant city and ad suddenly learned that he was homeless, riendless, in great trouble. Suppose he were s far beyond your power to help as Jairus's aughter was beyond her father's help. But ou knew of one man who had it in his power o save your boy. What hope would you ave? You would say, "If he has the heart f a man in him, he'll help my boy." But uppose you had heard that he was a good an and that he had often done like service or strangers. You would feel confident that e would respond to your need.

This claim which we have on Jesus when ve want what only he can give is not based n our worthiness. It is the claim of human- y. When the slave, Sojourner Truth, as she alled herself, became free, she set out to nd her children who had been sold and were ost to her. She told how she found them: I kept praying as I searched. I used to say, O Lord, if I was as rich as you be, and you as as poor as I be, I'd help ye, you know I ould; and, O Lord, do help me'; and he id." She prayed aright. "We have not a igh priest that cannot be touched with the eeling of our infirmities." "Let us there- ore draw near with boldness unto the throne f grace, that we may receive mercy and find race to help in time of need."

What are supreme needs? Some of them ve may mention. One is desire for forgive- ess because of remorse for sin. The longing f parental affection to recover to righteous- ess a lost child; a passionate, pure love for nother which one longs to have returned; he ambition of youth to realize a life of use- ulness; that highest love for our fellowmen vhich seeks their salvation—all these may be upreme needs. They are distinguished from ommon desires in that they shut us up to esus for help.

How can we gain satisfaction of these needs? irst, tell them to Jesus as Jairus told his eed. Your confidence may be small, based nly on what others say about him, but it is nough to justify you in telling him what you want. Next, study the life and work of Jesus in the spirit of prayer. In doing this hope rises into confidence and the heroic life begins. For heroism is supreme devotion to the highest welfare of others with confidence in Jesus Christ.

2. Faith is made controlling by Christ's response to the cry of need. Jesus did not at once answer the petition of Jairus in words, but he left the feast and started to go with him. That act inspired hope. But soon obstacles appeared. The crowd blocked the way. It must have seemed to Jairus that they would never get to his child. Then another person with her own need claimed and received the attention of Jesus. He seemed to have forgotten Jairus and his daughter in his absorbed interest in the woman who had been twelve years a sufferer. Despair crept like a cloud over the light of faith. Next, Jesus declared that the woman's faith had made her whole, and hope kindled again. But at that moment came the servants with the message which crushed all expectation: "Thy daughter is dead." Up to this time no word had been spoken by Jesus in answer to the prayer of Jairus. His reputation and his action had been sufficient to sustain the anxious father's faith. But now something more was necessary, and it was given—"Fear not, only believe." Here was something new for faith to rest on, a personal promise. "He has done it for the others," Jairus said to himself, as he hurried to find Jesus. "He acts as though he meant to do it for me," he said, as he went toward home with Jesus following. Then, after the moment of despair, Jairus could say, "He has told me that he will heal my child."

Such an experience marks a great advance in the history of one who has begun to follow Christ. The pressure of a supreme need has awakened him to his condition and its possibilities. The wonders which Christ has wrought in history have inspired him with hope. New convictions of sin, new conceptions of life have come. But new and unexpected obstacles have also appeared in the way of realizing the ideal, and hope fails. Then, to him who turns steadfastly to Jesus, there comes the new, sweet, personal assurance which is beyond all testimony from without. Then agonizing desire passes into trust, the tone of prayer rises into confidence, and the believer, as a partaker of Christ and of the heavenly calling, goes forth to his work as if victory were already achieved. How can we reach that experience? Ask for it. Life is a failure without it. Life with it is great beyond expression.

3. Rewarded faith lays great responsibilities on men. Jairus could not restore his daughter to life. But he had done the one thing he could do for her—he had placed her case in the hands of Jesus and had trusted her to him. The power belonged to him, but their faith made his power operative. Perhaps you thought that prayer of Sojourner Truth an easy one to offer. But could you make it? He has put into our hands a great power to serve him. Though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor. Would you help him if you could? Will you help him? He calls on us to co-operate with him to raise the spiritually dead. Have you a man's heart in you? Will you complete the work for which he gave his life by bringing those in need of him who do not know their need into contact with him? It is our privilege to exercise the faith inspired by our experience of his promises fulfilled to save souls to make others feel his renewing power. This is success indeed. Nothing can defeat the aim of those who are united to him in his supreme purpose, because they have had experience of his power to satisfy their supreme need.

OUR OWN WORK.

Miss Child's First Letter from Bombay is a very attractive feature of Life and Light this month. Especially interesting is her description of the American Mission high school under the charge of Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Hume. This is, so far as known, the only high school in India where coeducation exists. After speaking emphatically of the necessity of larger dormitories and of the over-crowded condition of the schoolhouse, Miss Child writes: "With all its needs and disadvantages, however, the school is a splendid success, and when the nearly 200 boys and girls are in the compound it presents a very busy, animated scene. Almost all the pupils are children of Christian parents and come from different parts of the mission as well as from Bombay, and in time go out as trained teachers and Christian workers either in their own homes or elsewhere." Of the missionaries to whom the success of the institution is due, she says: "You do not need to be introduced to Mr. and Mrs. Hume. I need only say that I am more and more impressed by the overmastering love they have for these pupils and their native people, and the abounding enthusiasm for the work which makes them the power they are."

Influence of the Bible in Mexico. A letter from Mr. Case of Mexico tells of the opening of mission work at Batopilas, a new point connected with the Hermosillo station. It is a mining town having a population of 4,000 and is the center of a well-populated region. Direct beginnings of Protestant faith can be traced to copies of the Bible introduced there many years ago by a Mexican returning from California and another visitor from Parral and more recently to the Bibles sent to this region from the Chihuahua. Various other circumstances have operated to prepare the way for the gospel, and assure successful results to the native preacher from the El Paso school who occupied the field last summer. It is noteworthy that the just and Christian conduct of an American mining company in Batopilas has been an indirect but powerful influence in favor of Protestant Christianity. Of the present status of the work Mr. Case writes: "Since our arrival the interest has continued to increase. The chapel is usually filled with attentive listeners, while many gather about the doors. The C. E. Society numbers more than twenty active members. A regular Sabbath school has been established and in January we hope to organize a church."

THE WORLD AROUND.

New York Indians. There is an interesting movement on foot under the auspices of the Presbyterians to found an industrial school for young Indians in Western New York. It is a surprise to learn that there are about 1,500 children of school age among them. These youth are growing up with little or no education of any kind, only a fourth of the whole number having attended any school last year, and this fourth was composed largely of different pupils from week to week. During the last two years' of President Harrison's administration permission was given to send a limited number of New York Indians to the Carlisle and Hampton schools at Government expense. No fewer than 125 thus received a practical education, and three times that number would have gladly entered these institutions had there been sufficient accommodations. With a change of administration, however, the privilege was withdrawn, so the synod of New York now proposes to have a school of its own in Portville, Cattaraugus County, taking Carlisle and Hampton as models, and an effort is being made to secure an endowment of $10,000. A farm of 100 acres has already been pledged. This will furnish opportunity for agricultural training and the plan is to have, also, one or more shops for instruction in machinery and trades. A dairy, a bakery and a laundry will give the girls employment. It is hoped that the enterprise will be self-supporting, in part, from the first. Intellectual and religious, as well as industrial, training will be given. Rev. Dr. W. S. Hubbell of Buffalo, one of the trustees, says: "We expect to start in a modest way with some twenty or more pupils, out of at least 100 who desire to attend. The head of the school will be Miss Clara E. Snow, who for many years has had charge of the Indian girls at Hampton, where she has been the confidential friend and adviser of the Indian lads."

United Movement Towards Self-Support. New York was again the place of meeting for the fourth conference of the representatives of foreign missionary organizations in the United States and Canada. Twenty-two societies were represented and the sessions extended through two days. Among the most interesting topics under consideration were the Missionary Training in Our Theological Schools, and Self-Support on Mission Fields. The latter has proved a particularly fruitful subject of thought and discussion during the past two or three years, a special committee, of which Rev. Dr. Judson Smith is chairman, having been appointed to collect statistical information along this line and to stimulate the native churches to larger contributions. The report of this committee shows decided encouragement. Last year it sent out a pastoral letter to a large number of native churches of various denominations, showing friendly interest and urging self-support. This epistle was well received, and in some cases, notably in the Zulu Mission of the American Board, has given a decided impulse to the effort towards financial independence. The following tables show how some of the mission boards stand in this matter:

| | Appropriations. | Native Contributions. | Per cent. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Methodist Episcopal (North), | $1,009,018 | $372,817 | 37 |
| Evangelical Lutheran (General Synod), | 53,883 | 16,984 | 32 |
| United Presbyterian in North America, | 130,580 | 29,045 | 22 |
| American Board, | 715,231 | 109,603 | 15 |
| American Baptist Missionary Union, | 564,199 | 45,679 | 8 |
| Presbyterian (North), | 976,102 | 65,828 | 7 |
| Protestant Episcopal, | 238,102 | 7,409 | 3 |

PEN AND SCISSORS.

The editorial paragraph in the February Missionary Herald, which sets forth in clear, concise terms the situation in the Transvaal, is of more value to the average busy man and woman than all the articles which have appeared in the daily papers.

The French Protestants have begun to feel a sense of responsibility in regard to missionary work in Madagascar. The committee of the Missions Evangeliques has appointed a delegate to convey to the Malagasy churches the fraternal greeting of the Protestant churches of France and to inquire how help can best be rendered. It is reported that the newly-appointed resident general in the island is a Protestant.

Mr. Currie of the American Board's West Central African Mission writes that there is a good prospect that the little church in Chisamba will soon be ready to undertake not only the support of its pastor but also that of several assistants. But he adds: "We have need to make haste slowly and cautiously. The changes that are going on in the country make these trying times for an infant church and for the cause of Christ in the land."

The Woman's Board has issued an attractive illustrated leaflet calling upon the C. E. Societies to make special pledges for the coming year, assuming not only the salaries of Miss Abbie G. Chapin and Miss Sarah H. Harlow, which have been paid by contributions from the young people during the past year, but in addition undertaking the support of Miss Annie Stockbridge, a young missionary who is doing evangelistic work in Ahmednagar, India. Societies are also urged to aid in erecting the much needed new building for the girls' normal school in Madura, to be called Capron Hall.

PRAYER MEETING.

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN.

Topic, Feb. 23–29. What Faith Can Do for Us. Heb. 11: 1–10; 12: 1, 2.

It is perfectly proper for us to consider what good the possession of faith will do us. Every young man choosing his profession naturally seeks not only a place where he may do good, but the kind of employment which will develop and enlarge all his powers. The youth with an artistic bent desires to know what the cultivation of it will do for him. Will it pay him better than the development of some other gift with which he may be endowed?

Now the Christian religion in the highest sense of the word pays. First of all, the faith faculty rounds out and gives symmetry to all our other powers. No matter how highly gifted and how broadly equipped a young person is, something is lacking if faith does not crown and control the other faculties of mind and heart. Sometimes in winter we see a tree incased in ice. How cold and lifeless its beauty is until the morning sun strikes it and illumines it from the trunk to the furthest twig. So a life, otherwise beautiful and attractive, needs the glow of a living faith and that is received only from the Sun of Righteousness. "Awake, thou that sleepest," says the apostle, "and Christ shall shine upon thee." And when one sees a life otherwise strong and valuable, but destitute of faith, one feels like crying to it, "Awake, O thoughtless soul, to the divine possibilities of your being."

Faith provides a refuge and a resource for us when everything else fails. I care not how rich a life may seem or may be, how full of satisfaction and delights. Sooner or later, and sooner rather than later, come the dark days when all around one looks gray and blank. The things to which in ordinary times one betakes himself for comfort fail now to solace. He runs over his book shelves and finds nothing there which just meets his case. He gazes upon beautiful works of art, but they have no ministry to the weary or the diseased spirit. The society of his friends brings a measure of relief, but the sore spot in his heart is not healed. Then it is that the man of faith rises to the glory and the value of his possession. How much securer he is than one who walks by sight! Who are the calmest men today in Turkey? Not the fanatical Turks, not the scheming, diabolical politicians, but the missionaries of the cross, who know that their God is able to prevent a hair of their head from being harmed. The calming, steadying power of faith only those who have cast themselves without reserve upon a sublime confidence in God understand.

In brief, it may be said that faith will do just as much for us as we will let it do. If we think of it as a puny thing, if we never do anything to cultivate it, if we never actually put it to use, it will have about as much practical value in our eyes as a piece of useless bric-a-brac on the shelf. But if we live under the daily inspiration of a great faith in Christ, that will become a priceless possession, the effects of which upon our characters and influence will be incalculable.

Literature

PURITAN OR IMPURITAN.

Believers in the theory that the history of man returns upon itself may find encouragement, perhaps, in the recurrence of French influence upon American thinking at the interval of a century. It was French infidelity of the school of Voltaire and the deists which gave our religious leaders such anxiety, and it is French impurity associated with the names of Zola and De Maupassant that threatens the established canons of our literary morality and the future of our children. It was useless then to think about borrowing an index expurgatorious from our Roman cousins, and it is useless now to appeal to anything else than the good sense and self-restraint of our countrymen. It is an age of liberty, and those who have passed beyond the restraints of parental authority must be won and not driven. It is a testing such as God permits for human souls, and we must leave the results to him.

It grows increasingly clear that this is no imaginary danger. The floods of impurity are let loose. It has come already to the choice—in the words of Hazlitt—between puritanism and impuritanism. It began in the theaters. It has extended to the novels. It is the burning question of criticism. It allies itself to the interest in woman's widening sphere and to her protest against man's injustice. It finds its echo in the columns of society gossip. The veil of reticence and decorum which has made the intimacy of the sexes purer and more delightful is ruthlessly torn away. Modesty, we are told, is childishness. Urania was a myth, but Venus and Priapus, naked and not at all ashamed, are the proper studies of literature and art. Prurience pays, and publisher and author do not stop to reason further than the proceeds of their sales.

Set apart from the fascination of the manner—the artist's skill in color or in style—this indecency would be disgusting to every healthy mind. Let us take an instance from the current criticism of the theater, that we may see what it all comes to in cold blood. Here is a French artist—a woman—who comes to us with a performance of music and song, and the criticism is from the regular report of the highest class newspaper of one of the great cities. "What is really marvelous in the use of her voice," the critic says, "is the astonishing 'high flavor' of suggestiveness she can throw into it. Take, for instance, her delivery of Les Vierges [The Virgins], when she sings the refrain there is a sort of sing-song mock devotedness in her tone and inflection that reaches the very acme of scurrilous sarcasm; seldom has maidenhood come in for such contemptuous flagellation." What kind of man—much more, what kind of woman—is it which can enjoy the contemptuous flagellation of maidenhood by a woman on the public stage? What can have been their memories of childhood? What love can they have for wife or husband, or hope of happiness in marriage? With what eyes can they look upon the innocence of their daughters?

BOOK REVIEWS.

THE LOVE AFFAIRS OF A BIBLIOMANIAC.

To be loved as Eugene Field was loved by thousands is better than any merely literary reputation. It insures, also, for a long time at least, the permanency of a writer's fame. The aroma of a notable and lovable personality increases the vogue of an author in his own time, but it does more than this, it calls attention to his work in the generations following. Every advantage which this loving curiosity can give Eugene Field is sure of, in his own West especially, where he has done so much to raise the level both of public opinion and of literary consciousness, but elsewhere as well. It is too soon to determine what his permanent place as a poet and essayist will be, but the appearance of his not quite finished Love Affairs of a Bibliomaniac, which is, perhaps, the most deliberate and well-considered work he did, and, therefore, most characteristic, gives occasion for this tribute to his powerful and delightful personality. The book belongs in the little group of wise and humorous works where Elia and the Autocrat have their place. It is full of a genuine love of humanity, a genial view of life, and of that delight in "quips and cranks and wanton wiles" without which the author would have written under pressure of an irksome constraint. All book lovers will delight in it, and we think it will make converts to their ranks, but those who laugh at bibliolatry will find material for laughter, and its humor is of the pleasant kind which bears no sting. [Charles Scribners' Sons. $1.25.]

HISTORY.

The Growth of British Policy, an historical essay by Sir J. R. Seeley [Macmillan & Co. 2 vols. $3.50]. In the death of Professor Seeley English literature lost one of its clearest thinkers and most incisive writers. History and religion were the subjects which most interested him, and in both fields his utterances were of weight in shaping the thought of his generation. In each field there is, indeed, a certain arrogance of assured conviction which, especially on the religious side, made him many enemies, but no one doubted his strength or his sincerity. He was not an accumulator of material after the German fashion, though he could do this work also; but he had a rare talent for acute and comprehensive generalization joined with a power of abstraction which kept the particular phase of the subject with which he chose to deal always in focus. For example, this last and not quite finished book is a powerful review of British history on the side of its external relations through the time in which, from Elizabeth to the Revolution, Great Britain was growing to its present imperial position, and of that alone. It begins by a history of the causes through which the Hapsburg dynasty grew so great, in the course of which for many pages England is hardly mentioned, yet all the while the purpose of the book is kept constantly in view. If this historical abstraction and absorption seem easy to attain, at least the recurring changes and cross purposes of many other historians will show that they have not found it so. The book contains a striking portrait of Professor Seeley, and a careful and appreciative memoir by G. T. Prothero.

Mr. Hamblen Sears, editor of Harpers' Round Table, has published through Flood & Vincent of Meadville, Pa. [$1.75], a handbook of contemporary history called Governments of the World Today. It is intended for the use of newspaper readers, especially those who, as Mr. Sears says in his preface, "are not and never will be students,' because they have but little time for study, but who desire to become better acquainted with the affairs that are taking place in the world. That there is a large and increasing number of newspaper readers who desire this knowledge for intelligent reading we do not doubt. The book suffers somewhat from compression, and the English is careless at times, but the author has forestalled criticism by the explanations of his preface, and the age moves so swiftly that any book must soon be left behind in the progress of events. We like the plan of the book, which puts in small compass a great deal of useful information which it is sometimes difficult to find without much trouble and waste of time, and hope its success may warrant a new and improved edition.

A monograph devoted to one of the most interesting personalities of the French court in the later years of Louis XIV. is The Second Madame, a memoir of Elizabeth Charlotte, Duchesse d'Orleans, by M. Louise McLaughlin. The Madame of the book was the second wife of Philippe Duc d'Orleans, the brother of the king, and her son was regent during the minority of Louis XV., surviving his mother only a year. Madame was a German princess and went very reluctantly to the uncongenial splendor of Versailles, and it is to her voluminous correspondence with German relatives and friends that we owe a large part of our acquaintance with the inner life of the court in the later years of the king's time, and on through the extravagancies of Law's Mississippi Bubble and the distress of its collapse. Brought up in the Reformed Church and accustomed to the comparative simplicity of a small German court, combining the quietest of personal tastes with a strong sense of her own dignity, she looked with cool and impartial eyes upon the artificial life in whose center she stood. The book is well put together and interesting. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25.]

HISTORICAL FICTION.

To the making of a successful historical novel a combination of qualities is necessary. First of these is the historical imagination, by virtue of which the past becomes real to the writer, so that for the time he lives in it and thinks the thoughts of its people. Next is the imaginative grasp of character, which reads the heart and knows the sequence and expression of thought and passion. Then must come the constructive ability, seeing the end from the beginning and keeping a nice balance of values in character and incident. Last of all, though by no means to be dispensed with, is a competent knowledge. Without imagination the book will inevitably be dull, and might better be written as a simple history. Without grasp of character neither history nor fiction is worth the ink it costs to write it. Without constructive skill we shall look in vain for the dramatic power which is the salt of fiction. But granted all these and a book may be great even though it is not always accurate. Let our author set flesh and blood before us and make us breathe the air and feel the movement of the spirit of forgotten times and we shall not quarrel too earnestly with his petty anachronisms or the geographical liberties which he may choose to take. And, on the other hand, almost the surest way to make a book of this kind unreadable is to overload it with details dug from the mines of the archæologists.

It is hard to say why The Red Republic, a Romance of the Commune, by Robert W. Chambers, is not a greater success. There is knowledge enough, evidently secured through personal experience in the scenes depicted, and there is no lack of exciting incident or of sharp delineation of types of character. Perhaps it is because the scenes were so real and vivid in the memory of the author that he found it hard to put himself aloof from them so as to select the elements of his plot solely in the interest of its artistic development. When all this is said, however, the book is interesting, and it moves on toward a dramatic end with full and increasing power. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25.]

Of The Shield of the Fleur de Lis, by Constance Goddard Du Bois, it is not possible to say so much. The book is handicapped from the beginning by its choice of a subject which is necessarily an anti-climax, the story, that is, of the legendary survival of Jeanne d'Arc after her trial and (supposed) execution by the English in Rouen. If it were true that the maid was spared by the pity or contempt of the English, and married and was seen here and there in France and even at the court of the king, the thought of the earlier and larger career which has touched the heart of all the world hangs like a blight over the author's effort to interest us in these lesser scenes. There is evident careful study of the historical setting, but the picture is poor and thin. [The Merriam Co. $1.50.]

Nor do we wholly like Antipas, Son of Chuza, by Louise Seymour Houghton, though it is a much less ambitious book than either of the others. It requires a hand at once so reverent and so firm to bring before us in a different setting the actors whose words and deeds preserved in the gospels are the marvel of all literature for simplicity and strength that it is not to be wondered at that we find most modern efforts in this direction disagreeable. The reverence is here and the power of story telling, but not the lightness of touch which is the final mark of strength in this field of work. The author has done careful work which may be useful in some cases in helping slow imaginations, but we like her work better in a different field, referred to elsewhere in this department. The book is beautifully printed and the illustrations are admirable. [Anson D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.50.]

RELIGIOUS.

From the Bible Study Publishing Co. we have two little books devoted to the study of the life of our Lord. Both are worked over from material previously used in newspaper comments on the Sunday school lessons suggested by the Bible Study Union—The Life of Christ by Lyman Abbott in the Outlook, and The Life of the Lord Jesus by Mrs. Louise Seymour Houghton in the Evangelist. Although the books correspond chapter for chapter, as the method of composition necessitated, they are written upon quite a different plan and could easily be used in conjunction. Mrs. Houghton's method may be called the critical, and Dr. Abbott's the graphic. The one is thinking first of the questions that will arise in the mind of the student, and meets them point by point, the other fuses the whole matter under consideration into a picture informed by large knowledge and set in its relations to modern thinking. Both methods have their advantages and each admirably supplements the other. [Each 75 cents.]

In a brief hand-book for the use of those who read only English Prof. George W. Gilmore of Bangor Seminary has given us a résumé of the Johannean problem. It is an attempt to make a presentation of "the weightiest evidence, the most decisive indications" for "those who have not time to wade through the flood of literature on the subject." The author confines himself strictly to the narrower meaning of his title, viz., that which concerns itself with the antiquity and authorship of the fourth gospel. He has succeeded in the difficult task of finding room for the learning necessary to the discussion of the problem without overweighting his style. The book is not easy reading for those who have no acquaintance with the questions involved, but it is exactly suited to many who wish to get at the real facts of the controversy and to understand the grounds upon which the authorship of John is attacked and defended. [Presbyterian Board of Publication. $1.00.]

The Teaching of St. John the Apostle by Augustine F. Hewitt, D. D. (Father Hewitt of the Paulist Congregation) consists of a polemic introduction and a revised translation of the first epistle, the gospel and the epistles to the seven churches. Although made from the Vulgate, as the law of his church requires, it is interesting to see how closely, in the interests of "a correct version in good English of the antique pattern" (the italics are the author's) Father Hewitt conforms to the received version which we know so well. The questions at issue with those outside the Roman communion are summarily begged throughout the book, as is made clear, for example, by the assertion that "Nicene, Tridentine and Vatican Christianity are identical," which indicates the spirit of the dogmatic parts of the book. The abundant process illustrations are now and then rather smudgy, and the publishers have put a severe tax upon the eyes of readers in the use of a hyper-glazed paper, but we are glad that so good a version of a part of the Word should be circulated among our Roman Catholic brethren. [Catholic Book Exchange. $1.00.]

JUVENILE STORIES.

Oliver Bright's Search and Reuben Stone's Discovery are numbers in two parallel series of stories for boys by Edward Strattemeyer. There is probably no more difficult task in literature than the writing of a succession of wholesome and natural stories for boys, well-spiced with reasonable adventure and yet kept within the bounds of truth and simplicity. Mr. Strattemeyer's conception of these bounds is very different from ours, and we confess that we think that he has approached his task with far too light a heart. That we are not prejudiced against stirring experiences goes without saying, but we do object to adventures which are dragged in by the ears to keep the blood stirring. The Oliver Bright of the first of these stories is quite too much of a hero for us. He is a mere schoolboy, and yet plays detective upon a bloodthirsty Spanish adventurer who has cheated his father of the possession of a mine, meets wild adventures on the Isthmus on his way to California, puts out a fire in the hold of the steamer when none of the sailors would venture, jumps overboard to rescue his chum and incidentally kills a monstrous shark with a knife, is imprisoned in a mine and escapes to capture and unmask the villain quite in the style of the pantomime. There is no true character drawing and the English is not up to the mark, as a single sentence, "I know the value of such," may show. We have dwelt upon the book because it is a sample of the sort of thing which, without being positively bad, gives our boys' taste a bias toward the theatrical rather than the natural in literature. [Merriam Co.: New York. Each $1.50.]

In His Great Ambition we have a bright and wholesome story of boys and girls in a Western college town, by Anna F. Heckman. It evidently has a background of personal recollection and experience which contributes very much to the descriptions of the book. It hardly has dramatic unity enough to hold the attention of most boys, we fear, and perhaps it would be truer if there were more of the shadow side of life depicted in it, the shadow of sin and not of suffering, but there is a well-sustained sense of humor, and the friendships of the young folks who figure in the book are pleasant to read about. [Presbyterian Board of Publication. $1.50.]

Twilight Stories, by Elizabeth E. Foulke, is a book of bright, original verses and stories for little children, which show a full appreciation of the needs of the wee folks who are just beginning to read. The print is large and the pictures bright and pertinent to the text, nor is the moral at any point too obtrusive for the taste of children. [Silver, Burdett & Co. 36 cents.]

MISSIONS.

In his timely little book, Madagascar of Today [Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.00], Rev. W. E. Cousins, who went out to the great African island in 1862 as an agent of the London Missionary Society, has set forth the main facts regarding the country, people, history and missionary activities of Madagascar, together with a concise explanation of the political situation. Its fresh facts regarding the present state of Christianity among the Malagasy will be of special value to students of missions.

In writing In the Path of Light Around the World Rev. Thomas H. Stacy has given us a pleasant glimpse of the possibilities of travel for one who is interested in missions. The style is too often that of hastily-written private letters, and the author's journey was much too rapid for impressions of very permanent value, but there is a fuller account than we have elsewhere seen of the Free Baptist missions in Bengal and Orissa, to which a trip of official inspection was made. Many of the illustrations are effective, but we hope, for the sake of the author's reputation in Japan, that his pictures of the Mikado and of Fujiyama may not fall under the notice of the art-loving people of that country. [Fleming H. Revell Co. $2.00.]

MISCELLANEOUS.

Darwin and after Darwin by the late Prof. G. L. Romanes, LL. D., is the second of three projected volumes discussing the development theory and its growth and changes since the death of its great expounder. The book begins with a statement of the later division of opinion between those whom Professsor Romanes considered true Darwinians, who hold that natural selection is the main cause of development but not necessarily the only cause, and the divergent party led by Wallace and Wissman, who maintain that natural selection is the sole method of change, although Wallace at least expressly excludes the production of the higher side of man from its working. Most of this volume is devoted to the discussion of hereditary and acquired characters in opposition to this narrower view. There is a good portrait prefixed to the book. [Open Court Publishing Co.: Chicago. $1.50.]

In a little book called Great Words from Great Americans G. P. Putnam's Sons have brought together the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, Washington's Inaugural and Farewell Addresses and Lincoln's Inaugural and Gettysburg Addresses. A few historical notes add to the value of the book, and there is a good index. There could be no better gift for an ambitious boy in this month of the birthdays of Washington and Lincoln. [75 cents.]

FEBRUARY MAGAZINES.

Bradford Torrey contributes one of his breezy papers of outdoor life to The Atlantic, carrying us (as is appropriate at this time of the year) to the South. There is a warning, not unnecessary, as the newspapers show, in the article on Unclaimed Estates, by H. Sidney Everett, while an anonymous article on the Presidency and Mr. Reed is at once a proof of his great popularity and a statement of some reasons why sober-minded people are wondering what kind of a president he would make. ——An article in The Century, by Kenyon Cox, on Puvis de Chavannes will be of special interest to all who have seen his large fresco in the Boston Public Library. History, both recent and more remote, finds full recognition in the installment of the life of Napoleon, which brings him to the hight of his triumph at Tilsit, in Captain Mahan's article on Nelson at Cape St. Vincent and Stanley's Story of the Development of Africa, while Edward Mortimer Chapman seeks to explain the present isolation of England by showing that it is the logical result of Lord Palmerston's ideal of Diplomacy.

Casper W. Whitney's description of his expedition to the unexplored Arctic north of our own continent, under the title of On Snow Shoes to the Barren Grounds, is the freshest of the contributions to Harper's, but the number maintains the accustomed level of interest.

McClure's continues Miss Tarbell's life of Lincoln, with new and interesting process portraits which we wish might be more carefully printed. While we are finding fault we may as well call attention also to the difficulty in finding the table of contents in this magazine, of which we have heard more than one complaint. Of more purely literary interest are a chapter of autobiography by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, which gives us an interesting glimpse of Emerson on Andover Hill and an unpublished story by Stevenson.

An article in Scribner's on the Colorado Health Plateau will give many readers a new idea of the charm and limitations of the Rocky Mountain resorts. President Andrews continues his history of the last quarter-century of the United States, Barrie's powerful story moves on through later stages of the boyhood of Sentimental Tommy, and H. F. B. Lynch contributes a finely illustrated article on the ascent of Mt. Ararat.

The New England Magazine prints the titles of its prominent articles in red ink, The Passing of the New England Fisherman, Rogers the Sculptor, Ibsen, and Modern Providence are the titles thus selected, and they are the most important of the number.

The most popular article, in the sense of its appeal to the interest of laymen, in the Popular Science Monthly is that of Lee J. Vance on Gathering Naval Stores, which is fully illustrated. There is also the usual miscellany of articles of a special scientific bearing and interest.

The complete story in Lippincott's is Ground Swells by Jeannette H. Walworth. Frederic M. Bird contributes an article which he calls Paralyzers of Style, which we recommend to those who write and wish to make the most of the little helps afforded by the mechanical aids of printing, and especially to some who are given to overmuch punctuation.

The lithographic presses of The Cosmopolitan are put to use in supplying cover and frontispiece for the February number. These have at least the benefit of careful printing as compared with the process plates in the body of the text. For young folks we have the ever popular St. Nicholas and Frank Leslie's Pleasant Hours. Other February magazines and periodicals received are The Forum, Nineteenth Century, The Review of Reviews, Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly, Cassell's Family Magazine, The Pall Mall Magazine, The American University Magazine, The Chautauquan, The Chap-Book, The Journal of Hygiene, The Nickell Magazine, Music, The Art Amateur, The Progress of the World, The Catholic World, Donahoe's Magazine, The Homiletic Review, The Treasury, The Preacher's Magazine, The Abbot Courant, The Phrenological Journal, and The American Kitchen Magazine. We have also the bound volume for the quarter of Littell's Living Age, in which we get much of the cream of the English reviews and magazines in a form to make them easily and permanently available.

NOTES.

—— An Arabic translation of Lew Wallace's Ben Hur, the Critic says, was the last work done by the late Dr. Van Dyck of Syria.

—— A sign of reaction in the matter of the cheapening of the magazines is the raising of the price of the Chap-Book from five to ten cents a copy.

—— The posters for the February magazines are unusually effective, especially the full length portrait of Lincoln in a tall hat, which is issued by McClure's.

—— Gilbert Parker, whose novel is nearing its conclusion in the pages of the Atlantic, is another member of the Canadian contingent in the ranks of our literature.

—— Cecil Rhodes seems to have succeeded in attaching his name to the dream of a South African commonwealth. "Rhodesia" has at least advanced as far in the direction of literature as the songs of the London music halls.

—— Of W. Clark Russell, whose stories of shipwreck and the sea are familiar to all novel readers, the London correspondent of Music says, in a recent letter, that he is such a martyr to rheumatism that he practically lives in an easy-chair.

—— The publisher of McClure's Magazine announces that he has on hand more than sixty different portraits of Lincoln, most of which are unknown to the people of the United States, while many of them have not been reproduced in any form.

—— The world of literature will take much interest in the new international magazine, Cosmopolis, which contains articles in English, French and German and admits of no translations. It will naturally appeal to a comparatively small circle, but may do much to enlarge the sympathy and good understanding of the three nations.

—— It is announced that Milwaukee is about to have a convention of poets and authors, admission to be granted not only to those who have written, but also to those "who feel that they can write." Let us hope that Milwaukee has for its convention a public hall of the largest capacity and a managing committee of more than editorial patience.

—— The papers are full of descriptions of the beautiful house which the late Lord Frederick Leighton built for himself and which he had enriched with priceless art treasures of his collection and creation. It is stated, we are not sure upon what authority, that it was his intention to leave it as an official residence for his successors in the presidency of the Royal Academy.

—— The editor of Scribner's evidently has no fear of Ruskin when he says, in criticising a picture now on exhibition in New York, "To the present writer it seems that the epithet most descriptive of Turner's genius, here as elsewhere, is 'theatrical,' or, better, 'operatic.' He should have painted drop curtains and would have done so magnificently, but his pictures are true neither to nature nor to the higher canons of art."

—— An interesting book of reminiscences has recently been published in England by Henry Russell, whose songs were popular fifty years ago, when A Life on the Ocean Wave, Cheer Boys, Cheer, and There's a Good Time Coming were heard everywhere. The book gives an interesting picture of the musical infancy of America. Mr. Russell, in addition to his concerts here and in England, confesses that he has composed the music for nearly 800 songs.

—— The librarian of Congress reports that under his charge the library has grown from 70,000 volumes in 1864 to 725,000 in 1895. Much the largest proportional increase comes by the regular working of the copyright law, but, since all the important books are copyrighted, this is only saying that the best books of the generation are included in the collection. The new library building, with its noble architectural features, will have as worthy a collection to house.

PASSING COMMENT.

Had the account of the Minnesota quarter-centennial come from any one but the pastor his participation in it would have had greater recognition as well as the courage and energy which he is displaying in his new field.

We could look for an early appearance of the Year-Book if other States would adopt New Hampshire's rule.

We doubt not that the two Massachusetts churches have welcomed their newly settled pastors with a warmth equal to the intensity of the regret with which their former flocks parted with them.

A new Colorado edifice is dedicated none too soon, for within short radius of it on all sides there are, by actual count, hundreds of persons who are non-church-goers. A pleasant feature of the building enterprise was the children's contributions of pennies and "two bricks," which are placed conspicuously in the wall.

Pastoral Changes in Massachusetts.

A LAWRENCE VACANCY SUPPLIED.

A general expression of regret was heard from the members of Union Church, Boston, on Jan. 12, when the assistant pastor, Rev. F. H. Page, resigned to accept a call to Lawrence, Mass., as pastor of Trinity Church. This action closed a term of service among an appreciative and loving people, which was marked in several ways as remarkable. The chief results of Mr. Page's efforts here were along pastoral and administrative lines, and the entire harmony existing throughout between the pastor, Dr. Nehemiah Boynton, and his co-laborer was the occasion of extensive comment. The training which Mr. Page has received in this one of Boston's most useful parishes has been such as to fit him admirably for leadership in his new field.

Mr. Page was about thirty-three years old when, in 1893, after graduation from Andover Seminary, he began pastoral work in Boston and was ordained and recognized as assistant pastor. In the same city, previous to his seminary course, he had had about ten years of experience in journalism with several of the leading papers, subsequent to a brief period of preparation in journalistic work with the local newspaper of Haverhill, his native city. Thus initiated, he steadily advanced in his profession, but his early inclinations toward the ministry became stronger than ever about this time, and with full conviction he resolved to enter upon a new career.

The call from Trinity Church did not come as to a man seeking new environments, but as the choice of a church whose pulpit was vacant and which had heard but one possible candidate. The membership is a strong body, formed more than ten years ago by the union of the Central and Eliot Churches. The spirit of the members and community cannot be better shown than by the fact that after the death of the former pastor, Rev. W. A. Keese, Sept. 1, 1895, the pulpit was supplied gratuitously for three months by neighboring ministers and the professors at Andover, so that Mr. Keese's widow might receive the full amount of his salary until the end of the year. The excellent condition of the church and its force of 400 members offer to its chosen leader a large opening and excellent prospects.

At the installing exercises, Feb. 5, the council was unusual in size and in the warm interest and harmony manifest. The candidate's paper was well received and was entirely satisfactory. The sermon, full of strong words of encouragement, was by Dr. G. A. Gordon and the prayer by Rev. C. H. Oliphant. In his charge Dr. Nehemiah Boynton referred tenderly to the fraternal relations which had existed between himself and Mr. Page.

A NEW LEADER AMONG WORCESTER CHURCHES.

Rev. Alexander Lewis, who on Thursday of last week was installed as pastor of the Pilgrim Church, Worcester, Mass., was born in Hudson, Wis., in 1864. His early education was received in the public schools of his native town, and on graduating from the high school he entered the preparatory department of Carleton College in Northfield, Minn. Not until the close of his first year at Carleton did Mr. Lewis make a public profession of religion, but to this day he reflects with gratitude upon the influences thrown about him by that institution and her consecrated teachers. Entering the Freshman Class in 1883 he pursued the four years' course, in the meantime taking an active part in the Y. M. C. A. and other special work.

In the fall of 1887 he entered the Boston University School of Theology, where he remained two years, during which he was a member of Park Street Church. Believing that a preacher gathers his material largely from men, Mr. Lewis divided his course, taking his third year at Union Seminary, New York city. While there he was pastoral helper at Pilgrim Church, over which Dr. S. H. Virgin has presided now for nearly a quarter of a century. So satisfactorily did he fill the place that after graduation he was called to the assistant pastorate, where he remained for another year.

This training prepared him for the work of the New England Church of Brooklyn, to which he was called in May, 1891. Through a series of misfortunes this church had run down until its membership was less than 150, with a Sunday school of about the same enrollment. Mr. Lewis left the church with a membership of 368 and a Sunday school of 450. The Y. P. S. C. E. numbers over 100 and is called one of the most active in the city. In December, 1893, the house of worship was destroyed by fire, a catastrophe which seemed at first more than the church could stand, but through the united effort of pastor and people a modern, convenient and attractive building was erected and occupied in less than a year.

From the first Mr. Lewis entered actively into the work of the denomination, holding for two years the position of secretary and treasurer of the Manhattan Conference, and at the time of his removal from Brooklyn he was a member of the board of trustees of the Congregational Church Building Society. In connection with his work in Brooklyn he also attended a course of special study at the University of New York in philosophy and the history of religions, receiving in view of his work the degrees of M. S. and Ph. D. Last November Mr. Lewis was called to his present pastorate to succeed Rev. C. M. Southgate, now of Auburndale. He began his work here Jan. 1.

His statement before the installing council, Feb. 6, was full, and covered his doctrinal views and practical ideas of Christian work. In a word, his position may be defined as mildly conservative in theology, evangelistic in spirit, progressive and aggressive in practice. He expressed his dislike of the term "institutional" church, but believes in "institutions" for a progressive church and as many as it can supply with power. The sermon was preached by Dr. S. H. Virgin, and the prayer offered by Dr. Archibald McCullagh.

Mr. Lewis has the help of an efficient wife, who enters into all the life and work of the church. She is a graduate of Wellesley and is already a member of the Worcester Wellesley Club. With heart and soul in the work, with an efficient corps of workers and a united people, the new pastor and his wife look forward to a happy and prosperous term of service in Worcester.

JOTTINGS FROM RHODE ISLAND.

The month of January brought to Congregationalism and all it stands for in our State repeated losses in the removal by death of several of its representative men—ex-Lieutenant Darling of Pawtucket, John McAuslan of Providence and his partner, John E. Troup, who fell dead suddenly while preparing to attend the funeral of Mr. McAuslan. All these men had been eminently successful in business and were pillars of integrity in their several communities.

On the last Sunday in January a home missionary rally was held in most of the churches of Providence and the neighboring city of Pawtucket. Secretaries Kincaid and Choate from New York, Field Secretaries Wiard, Puddefoot and Shelton, with Mrs. Caswell and others, did good service, speaking, most of them, several times during the day with good promise of financial returns. On the Monday following, at the Beneficent Bible Room, a free parliament was held at which the secretaries of the national society made explanatory addresses to the ministers of the State, with interested laymen. With pain we learn of the serious illness of the venerable Dr. Laurie, for whom and his esteemed wife resolutions of tender sympathy were passed at the recent Ministerial Association of Rhode Island.

With one exception, every Congregational pulpit is filled, and perhaps never with better satisfaction. Some of them are already on record as leaders in movements toward Christian citizenship. The churches outside of Providence have been doing good, aggressive work in Newport, Pawtucket and Central Falls, as well as in Woonsocket and at other points. The December festival of the Congregational Club was successful, Rev. Mr. Porter from Auburndale and Dr. McCullagh of Worcester delivering admirable addresses, culminating in the passage of vigorous resolutions concerning the Armenian atrocities. A.

FROM NORTHERN MINNESOTA.

A quarter-century of Congregationalism in the north Northwest was celebrated last week in the twenty-fifth anniversary of Pilgrim Church, Duluth, the exercises having a wide interest in this region at the head of the great lakes. Organized under Dr. C. C. Salter as pastor, the church has not only grown to fair proportions, but has sent forth or inspired several other enterprises. Its offshoots in Duluth number three, while two churches in Superior reach their hands across the narrow waters which divide the two cities only in name. Several mission churches also have sprung up northward in the mining towns on the Iron Ranges.

All these joined to make the silver wedding of the Pilgrim mother a success. The former pastor, Rev. E. M. Noyes of Newton Center, came 1,500 miles to preach the sermon and to receive the hearty welcome of his first charge. The eleven years of his pastorate entitle him to be called the father of Congregationalism in this vicinity. It was during this time that Pilgrim Church grew to its present proportions and the denominational extension occurred. Dr. E. P. Ingersoll of St. Paul brought the greetings of the older churches of the State and preached a rousing Sunday evening discourse. On the historical day Deacon W. S. Woodbridge, who has been here from the first, and to whom the organization really owes its life at the beginning, reviewed the record of the past. On the same evening was presented a fine portrait of the first pastor, Dr. Salter, whose venerable face is full of geniality and love. He was present to recall old days. When he left the pastorate he organized Bethel Mission, Duluth, which grew rapidly and is the chief city mission enterprise and noted widely for its efficiency.

Perhaps the most delightful feature of the quarter-centennial was a supper on Tuesday night, when over 200 persons sat down together and after the supper listened to speeches from pastors of neighboring churches. The annual meeting of the church followed, and the reports showed a successful year, although one of much hardship on account of the deepening financial distress in the city and the fearful epidemic of typhoid fever which has recently swept over us. The church has been wonderfully uplifted by the anniversary services. Rev. C. H. Patton, the present pastor, began his work here last year.

The epidemic has been traced to the impure water supply furnished by a corporation which has long held the city in its grasp. A forced investigation by the citizens whose homes had been stricken developed revelations of such an incriminating nature as to cause intense excitement and personal violence was imminent for several days. The manager of the company was indicted for manslaughter and action was begun to annul the charter. The city furnished pure drinking water free in carts. The company has since sold out to parties favorable to the interests of the people. As a result of these measures the fever waned rapidly and now new cases are rare. Nevertheless, the city has decided to build its own water plant and an election will soon be held to place in office a mayor pledged to water reform.

Duluth is situated on one of the finest sheets of fresh water in the world and there should be no trouble in securing a pure supply. The new pumping station will be placed seven miles down the lake where the shore is steep and rocky, and as an additional precaution a great filter system is also urged. The health of the people will be secured at any cost, and the Zenith City may be said to have redeemed herself already.

While affliction has filled many homes during the epidemic and pervaded much of the city life, gayety has not been lacking in certain quarters. The children are happy even when the parents are sad, and there is no place like Duluth for little folks. The winter sports for boys and girls of rugged fiber easily surpass those of other places. On the hills is superb coasting, and the whole city rings with the merry shouts of children on their sleds, toboggans and double runners. Some of the boys slide on the Norwegian "skis"—narrow staves about ten feet long with a loop for the feet. They steer with wonderful accuracy by means of a pole held behind, and the speed attained looks alarming to the uninitiated.

Snowshoe parties are popular when the snow is deep, but they have not had much advantage this year. Skating, of course, is without end. Rinks abound in various parts of the city and the ice on the harbor is always ready for those who want a long course and do not mind a little roughness. The open weather has thus far prevented the lake from freezing permanently, but any day this may happen and then the iceboats will be seen skimming from shore to shore with the speed of railroad trains and vastly more poetry of motion. It would seem as if every schoolroom in the city, and there are many of them, has had its sleigh ride, if we can judge from the almost incessant tooting of horns and the shouts of red-cheeked youngsters on Saturday afternoons.

The great sport for adults is curling. The grand Scotch game has been adopted enthusiastically in this region. Those who have played all the out-of-door sports say this recreation beats everything. Ministers, doctors, lawyers and business men, young and old, vie with each other in enthusiasm for this healthy and exciting game. The Northwestern Annual Bonspiel of Curling Clubs has just been held here. The crack rinks of the Northwest were present and contested for prizes during ten days. Their plaid colored jackets, with toques or huge fur caps, gave them a unique appearance on the streets and drew many to witness the contests at the club house. Scotchmen naturally predominated, and frequently the broad, hearty accent was heard when the game grew hot. Brooms would fly with a rapidity which astonished the best housekeepers when the great forty-pound stones went too slowly down the ices for the satisfaction of the "skip." The prize this year went to the Canadian boys from Winnipeg, and great was the chagrin of all the American rinks. But the sport will be the more keen next season. The game has not a single bad feature, and is certainly a blessing to many a man with brain tired from professional strain or business anxiety. P.

Chicago.

Prof. H. M. Scott is delivering an elective course on the Roman World in the Time of Christ.——The faculty and two other representatives of the seminary have pledged $560 towards the debt of the American Board.——Mr. Wilbur Messer, secretary of the Y. M. C. A., addressed the students last Thursday on the National and Local Work of the Association in Relation to Churches and Ministers.

Pacific.

The members of the faculty find delightful fellowship with the professors of the Presbyterian school at San Anselmo. Last year the latter invited the former to dine with them; this year the compliment is returned at the Occidental Hotel, San Francisco. The evening was fair, the number large and the occasion greatly enjoyed. Both institutions are now well equipped and the increased attendance in each is encouraging. Graduates are doing efficient service all along the coast, some also in the East and some in foreign lands.

CLUBS.

VT.—The club of western Vermont held its annual meeting at Rutland, Feb. 4. The subject was The Ethical Element in Politics. This subject is the fitting close of the year's discussions, all of which have been related to morals as allied with social and political problems. Rev. C. R. Seymour is the newly elected president and Mr. H. E. Bentley, secretary.

NEW ENGLAND.

Massachusetts.

SALEM.—A meeting of the citizens in behalf of the suffering Armenians was held with the Tabernacle Church last week. Addresses were given by Rev. Mr. Santikian of Harpoot and others. A generous collection was taken and a committee appointed to solicit further contributions.

MALDEN.— Forestdale Chapel. The work begun here four years ago, with eighteen persons present at the first service, has extended so that recently the Sunday school numbered 108. From time to time conversions have stimulated encouragement, and the work now appears full of promise. Rev. C. G. Hill is conducting the enterprise.

ANDOVER.—Dr. Grenfell of the Deep Sea Mission spoke at the West Church in the morning and addressed a union meeting in the South Church in the evening. In the latter his effective presentation of the "deep sea" work in European Labrador was made still more vivid by the exhibition of views taken with his own camera.

WAKEFIELD.— First. The annual meeting was held Jan. 3. Reports from the pastor, Rev. A. P. Davis, and from the various officers and societies were encouraging. Thirty-four persons have joined the church during the year, and prosperity has been felt continually.

LOWELL.—First. Following the invitation of the Lawrence churches asking this church to submit its differences with the society to a council, the Congregational pastors in Lowell have sent a similar request. Meanwhile there have been two ministers in the pulpit for two Sundays past, Rev. G. F. Kenngott and the supply provided by the lessees. The two have amicably divided the services. Legal notices have been served on Mr. Kenngott forbidding him to enter the pulpit or act as pastor on any part of the leased premises, and to such notice the deacons of the church have replied in a formal protest against the interference with the church's worship.——Highland. On account of its debt incurred in building, this church has for some years depended on congregational singing, but at a recent meeting it was voted to appropriate $600 for music, and a choir will shortly be secured.

DRACUT.—First. Considerable religious interest is manifested and the pastor, Rev. E. L. Baker, has been assisted in a series of special services by Lowell pastors.——Central. Rev. Hugh Montgomery, the noted temperance agitator, has been supplying the pulpit during the absence of Rev. W. A. Lamb in California.

WELLFLEET.—The increase of spiritual interest is encouraging. The revival is beginning in the church and every meeting has a deeper tone of earnestness. The pastor, Rev. Albert Donnell, is urging on the work by sending to his parishioners a sympathetic pastoral letter, with cards to sign pledging special prayer.

HAVERHILL.— Union. A Home Missionary collection was taken last Sunday in a novel manner. Since the free pew system is in use the regular offering for home expenses cannot be omitted, and to avoid two collections the members of the missionary committee stood at the foot of the aisles, with baskets, and received a good offering.

WAREHAM.—Rev. J. H. Yeoman has become pastor here. Since his coming there has been an increased attendance at the services He is giving a course of Sunday evening talks on Good Citizenship

AUBURN.—The ancient wooden edifice, 120 years old, was burned to the ground at noon, Feb. 4, and the front and roof of the chapel were badly damaged. None of the church furniture was saved. The building was situated on the hill and its steeple was a landmark for miles around. The first settlers of the village planned to build the meeting house in 1773, and the pews were taken by families in 1775, but the edifice was not completed till ten years later. It was nearly square. The first pastor was Rev. Isaac Bailey, his pastorate lasting thirty years. Rev. C. M. Pierce is the present pastor. The centennial of the church was celebrated in 1876. The basement of the meeting house has always been used as a town hall, and now no common meeting room remains for the citizens. The total valuation was estimated at over $10,000, partially covered by insurance. The cause of the fire was an accident.

LEICESTER.—During last year sixteen persons united with the church on confession and five by letter, making the present membership 212. The benevolent gifts were $1,257. The church building was painted and electric lights were put in.

WEST BROOKFIELD.—After an appeal for the Home Missionary Society recently a collection of $75 was taken.

WILLIAMSTOWN.—College. Last Thursday a council examined Mr. J. H. Denison as a candidate for ordination. He is a descendant of Ephraim Williams, the founder of the college, and of Mark Hopkins. His father, Rev. John Dennison, was pastor of the college church. The candidate has served previously as an assistant to Dr. Henry Hopkins of Kansas City and of Dr. C. H. Parkhurst of New York. At the services President Carter gave an address in behalf of the college.

Maine.

BANGOR.—Central has a Mutual Aid Society which employs poor women without regard to anything but their need, paying for their work in supplies. Twenty-seven have been thus employed and more than 1,050 yards of cloth distributed. A half hour's Bible study precedes the work and the class seems much interested.

CARRITUNK AND THE FORKS.—Congregations are good, and Rev. T. B. Hatt has devoted his efforts especially to the children and young people. A five-minute talk before the sermon is much appreciated. The C. E. Society is active and helpful. At the latter place the children are supporting a little girl in India with money earned by their own efforts.

CUMBERLAND MILLS.—Warren. The reports show a total membership of 267, with twelve additions during the year. Benevolences amount to $1,083 and the total receipts were $3,014.

LITTLE DEER ISLE—Deacon J. E. Parker, who was instrumental in forming and ministering to this church, has died, but the meetings have continued through the winter. His loss is severely felt.

CRANBERRY ISLES —Through the indefatigable efforts of Rev. C. E. Harwood the meeting house, disused for eleven years, has been renovated and opened for worship, an opportunity for which was so much needed by that people.

PHILLIPS.—A series of interesting meetings is arranged by Rev. W. W. Ramsey on sociological topics. A speaker, usually a member of the Andover Band, presents the subject and is followed by a member of the Young People's Union.

New Hampshire.

NASHUA.—Pilgrim. The members of this congregation were aroused last week by rumors that the pastor, Dr. R. A. Beard, had been called elsewhere. Their fears were happily removed by a written communication from him last Sunday making a statement to the contrary. He has no desire to leave his promising work here. The summary of reports shows that there have been added to the church during last year thirty-six persons, fifteen on confession. The present membership is 413. The Sunday school numbers 377. The number of regular pew holders has increased by forty-five. The pew rentals and weekly offerings have more than provided for current expenses, $500 being left in the treasury. The benevolent contributions have been the largest in the history of the church, amounting in all to $1,087

EXETER.—Second. The pulpit of the new meeting house, to be erected the coming season, will be given by descendants of John Phillips, founder of Phillips Academy, to his memory as one of the founders of the parish. The communion table will be a gift from Mrs. W. A. Norton, a niece of Mr. Phillips's wife, in memory of Rev. Isaac Hurd, D. D, pastor from 1817-56. Dartmouth and Princeton Colleges and the president of Bowdoin College have pledged corner stones suitably inscribed. Dr. Bancroft of Phillips Andover Academy and Dr. McKenzie of Lawrenceville have pledged stones for the base of the tower, and it is assured that Phillips Exeter Academy will do the same. Other memorials are pledged by William G. Brooks of Boston, brother of the late Phillips Brooks, and George Blagden of New York.

ORFORDVILLE.—The new church edifice to take the place of one damaged by fire beyond repair a year ago has been completed, and was dedicated with appropriate services Feb. 4. The new pastor, Rev. O. G. McIntire, is gaining a strong hold on the affections of his people.

WHITEFIELD.—A series of union revival meetings of nearly two weeks' duration, under the lead of Rev. Ralph Gillam, formerly assistant of Rev. B. Fay Mills, and Charles Estey, singer, resulted in great good, over 200 persons signifying a purpose to begin the Christian life.

CANDIA.—By the will of Mrs. Nancy Parker the church receives $2,000, and, after private bequests, the residue, inventoried at $9,000, is to be divided in equal shares with the New Hampshire Home Missionary Society, the American Missionary Association and the Woman's Board.

CHARLESTOWN.—Under the lead of the new pastor, Rev. E. T. Blake, assisted by the missionary workers, Misses Milton and Howard, a series of gospel meetings are being held with deepening interest and indications favorable to an extended work in the community.

PLYMOUTH.—The annual report gives a present church membership of 138, thirteen having been added during the year, three on confession. The Sunday school enrolls 272. The total benevolences were $490 and home expenses were $3,945.

RAYMOND.—At the annual roll-call seventy-five persons out of a membership of 120 responded. A supper was served and a sociable was enjoyed. At a union service in the evening many of the Methodists were present.

TROY.—Union meetings beginning with the Week of Prayer were continued three weeks, resulting in a good degree of spiritual quickening and a few conversions.

HANOVER.—The Day of Prayer was observed by Dartmouth with an address to the students by Rev. J. M. Dutton, who also occupied the college pulpit on the previous and following Sundays.

The church in Bristol receives $100 by the will of the late Mrs. Lovina Fellows.

The General Association in 1894 fixed upon Feb. 1 as a time limit after which returns from the churches of their statistics would not be used. At that date this year seven of the smaller churches had made no report. From those that have come in it appears that last year shows a net gain of 263 members, though the actual admissions were 340; a gain in Sunday school membership of 438; in the Y. P. S. C. E. of 1,800, and in benevolent contributions of $2,941. There is an apparent loss of families and in home expenses, but the latter is accounted for in the exceptional expense reported last year of building the First Church in Nashua. About $58,469 have been paid in legacies, within $1,000 of the entire contributions of the living.

Vermont.

ESSEX CENTER.—As a result of a special effort a new spirit is manifest here, most of the conversions being reported from the academy, in which there was probably never greater interest. All the churches are uniting.

BRATTLEBORO.—Center. The annual reports show total contributions to benevolences of $2,791, of which $342 were for foreign missions.

WEST BRATTLEBORO.—First. Eighteen new members were received last year on confession and seven by letter. The membership is now 179. Benevolences amounted to $1,419.

Rhode Island.

PROVIDENCE.—Central. The mortgage debt has been nearly all provided for, besides large contributions to regular and special appeals, such as $1,200 for the debt of the American Board, $1,100 for the H. M. S., of which $300 was for three names on the General Howard Roll of Honor, $260 was given for the Armenians through the missionary which this church supports in Turkey. Ten boxes for the West and South have been sent out by the home mission unions. This church is closely connected with a rescue mission enterprise in the city. —Pilgrim. The Men's Club contributed 300 handsome antique oak chairs for the vestry to replace the settees which are to be given to those churches in the State whose wants in that line have been made known.—Highland. Large and steady growth in the Sunday school is a marked feature of the church life.—Elmwood Temple. The first year's report of this reorganized church shows a present membership of 174, of which 121 were added during 1895 since Rev. S. J. Fleming began his pastorate. Necessary repairs, enlargements and improvements had added $600 to the mortgage debt, but by a special effort, Jan. 2, all incumbrances were provided for and the year opened free from debt. The Y. P. S. C. E. has fifty-five active members. The Sunday school, beginning with less than fifty, now numbers 336 scholars after a little more than a year. A new library of over 500 volumes is part of the equipment. The school contributes more than its own expenses.

WOOD RIVER JUNCTION.—This latest on the roll of Congregational churches in the State has raised $700 for the building fund for a meeting house.

EAST PROVIDENCE.—United has just welcomed its new pastor, Rev. Henry C. Crane.

Connecticut.

NEW HAVEN.—Nearly all the churches are continuing the services started by the Mills revival. Messrs. Biederwolf and Murray, Mr. Mills's assistants, are still here. Special union services are being held at Fair Haven, with the hope that Mr. Mills may be able to return there for a few days. —Grand Avenue. At the recent annual meeting thirty-eight additions were reported for the year. The present membership is 707. The current expenses were $4,400 and benevolences $750. Rev. Burdett Hart, pastor emeritus, has been here since his ordination in 1846. Rev. J. Lee Mitchell is pastor.—United. The Men's Club service last Sunday evening was addressed by Prof. George Harris of Andover on The Economic Factor in Social Regeneration.

MIDDLEBURY.—The 100th anniversary of the church occurred Feb. 10. Formal exercises in its recognition have been deferred until May, but on a recent Sunday the pastor, Rev. W. F. Avery, preached a historical sermon, describing especially the great revival of 1799.

MIDDLE STATES.

New York.

JAMESPORT.—Rev. Frederick Osten-Sacken has resigned his pastorate and accepted a call to Rockville Center. His two years' pastorate here has been successful, sixty converts being reported during the past year, thirty-two having joined the church. A new pipe organ, costing $800, has been purchased, and a W. C. T. U. has been organized. The pastor and his people have assisted in driving out a saloon keeper from the place, and another was prevented from getting a license. The Y. P. S. C. E. has been doubled and is doing excellent work, and a Junior C. E. Society has been started. On the Sunday of his farewell sermon the house was filled, and the young people presented him with a testimonial in appreciation of his services. The pastor departs to a young field organized a year ago. The people now worship in a hall, but a chapel is being built which can doubtless be occupied in a short time.

ANTWERP.—The Week of Prayer was observed with marked evidences of blessing. Then followed two weeks of special services conducted by the pastor, Rev. Duncan McGregor, which were largely attended. The results are gratifying. The church has been revived and quite a number of persons have professed conversion. The pastor is in his seventh year here.

CORNING.—This church, so much blessed in the past, has recently been enjoying a season of refreshing. Some 100 names are in the pastor's hands of those who feel they have been converted. There were some remarkable cases. The edifice was too small and much need was felt of the larger house soon to be built. Rev. N. E. Fuller, the pastor, was assisted by a friend.

WATERTOWN.—This church is prosperous under Rev. S. G. Heckman, and he is in frequent demand for services outside his parish.

New Jersey.

CHESTER.—This venerable church, now over 150 years old, is still decidedly the strongest in the community. It is about to lose its pastor, Rev. A. L. Shear, who has resigned after a brief but fruitful pastorate. During the year past, seventy-eight persons have joined the church, all but five on confession and forty-three adults have been baptized.

NEWARK.—Belleville Avenue. The past year has been prosperous with this church, notwithstanding the burden of debt it has to carry. The Sunday school and C. E. Society show an encouraging advance, while the church itself has succeeded in paying thirteen months' expenses in a year and finds itself in a position to increase the salary of its pastor, Rev. S. L. Loomis.

Pennsylvania.

ALLEGHENY.—First. At the recent annual meeting the reports showed collections for the past year to be $3,350, and the church is in better financial condition than for several years. Rev. A. H. Claflin is pastor.

BRADDOCK.—Rev. H. M. Bowden, pastor, has organized a fraternal league among the men, for mutual aid in sickness or need. During the last three months of last year the Sunday school attendance was seventy-two per cent. of the enrollment.

TAYLOR.—Welsh. The church has reopened its renovated edifice, which has been improved at considerable expense. New Sunday school rooms have been added and the main auditorium has been raised. Rev. Ivor Thomas is pastor.

SCRANTON.—Tabernacle paid $700 of its debt last year, and since Rev. D. P. Jones became pastor, nine years ago, it has paid $16,000 of its debt.

EBENSBURG.—The church has had one of the most prosperous years in its history, thirty-four new members having been added. Rev. R. S. Jones has been pastor for thirteen years.

KANE.—At the recent annual meeting six additions were reported for 1895. The present membership is 104. The collections were $1,978, of which $187 were for benevolences. The Sunday school numbers 125. Rev. C. A. Jones is pastor.

THE INTERIOR.

Ohio.

SANDUSKY.—The new edifice is now nearly finished and will be occupied in part in a few weeks. The work of the church will be extended considerably in institutional lines and will be supplemented by a reading-room, kindergarten, labor exchange and dispensary, besides gymnasium classes and entertainment courses. Additions last year numbered fifty-eight, making the present roll 334. The receipts were $4,459, the expenditures about the same. The building fund report includes $23,163 of receipts, of which there remains $1,139. The period of Rev. C. A. Vincent's pastorate since 1894 has been entirely successful.

JEFFERSON.—The annual meeting of the church and society was held Feb. 6. A severe storm and nearly impassable roads detained many, but a large and pleasant company sat down to supper and remained through the roll-call. Reports showed progress along several lines, notably in the C. E. Society and in the formation of the "covenant circle" of young women for missionary study and aid. By a necessary change of pastors during the year the church secured without delay the services of Rev. L. J. Luethi, who was recognized as pastor Dec. 3.

CINCINNATI.—Vine Street. Rev. Norman Plass has resigned the pastorate of this church, causing deep regret on both sides. The step was made necessary by the pastor's insufficient strength for the demands of the down-town work. Rev. H. L. Bige low has been supplying the pulpit for several weeks. —Rev. E. I. Jones, recently the successful pastor in Newark, has been chosen superintendent of the City Missionary Society.

LORAIN.—In Rev. C. J. Dole's three years' pastorate the church has been restored to a harmonious and healthy activity. When he began his work the membership was torn with factions and dissensions, but the growth toward better things has been steady and sure, financially and numerically. On his recent departure he was tendered a farewell reception and presented with a purse of $50.

BURTON.—The annual men's social, Feb. 5, surpassed all held previously and netted $275 to apply to the church debt, which is rapidly being liquidated.

CHAGRIN FALLS.—A lot has been donated and $1,800 raised for a new parsonage, which is to be built at once. The church is well united in the new pastor, Rev. W. H. Blose, and he is drawing large congregations.

CLEVELAND.—At the February Cleveland Ministers' Meeting a strong, earnest paper was given by Rev. L. L. Taylor on Current Criticism of the Christian Ministry and What We May Learn from It. The discussion which followed was prolonged and of unusual interest.

Illinois.

LEE CENTER.—The pastor, Rev. J. M. Markley, was rejoiced on a recent Sabbath at the reception of thirty one new members, all but three on confession. Others will soon follow. This makes a total of eighty-four additions during Mr. Markley's pastorate of a little over two years. The past year has been one of prosperity in all lines of work, the benevolences show a gratifying increase, the attendance has been large, often crowding the house. A Young Men's Sunday Evening Club has done good work during the year.

BUNKER HILL.—This church, Rev. A. F. Hertel, pastor, held its annual meeting Jan. 16 The year was prosperous in all departments. The benevolences were the largest for any year in the history of the church, amounting to over $450. Home expenditures were $2,200. The Boys' Brigade and Literature Club, under the auspices of the church, are doing excellent work. A handsome $1,200 pipe organ was a recent gift of the Ladies' Social Society.

Indiana.

MICHIGAN CITY.—First. The sixty-first year opens with promise. Large congregations are the rule morning and evening and earnest work is done in every department. Last year the meeting house was thoroughly repaired through the kindness of Mrs. C. E. Haskell. The Young Men's Sunday Evening Club, formed soon after the coming of the present pastor, Rev. W. C. Gordon, is doing more effective work than ever. At the midweek service The Life of Christ and The Apostolic Church have been studied with great profit. Since August, 1893, seventy-one members have been added to the church. At the last communion eleven adults were received into membership, the majority being men of high moral character and holding positions of trust and honor in the city, and being over forty years of age. They were received on confession. A free kindergarten was established a year ago, which is now undenominational.

INDIANAPOLIS.—Rev. O. C. Helming, while at home in this city recovering from illness, has supplied for several times a new Congregational enterprise at Broad Ripple, a northern suburb of the city. He now goes to Atchison, Kan. Rev. S. W. Pollard of Pilgrim Church will, for the present, look after the new enterprise.

ELKHART.—Rev. F. E. Knopf, in the seventh year of his pastorate, is greeted with unusually large congregations. All departments of the church are in excellent working order. Mr. Knopf serves also in an acting professorship of the Mennonite College at this place.

WASHINGTON.—Meetings have been continued for four weeks by the pastor, Rev. Rocliffe Mackintosh. The membership has been quickened and others are entering upon the Christian life. The B. & O. shops run only six hours a day and the men are pinched financially.

ALEXANDRIA.—Superintendent Curtis was here Feb. 2, and services were conducted in a hall. A prayer meeting and Sunday school have been organized.

Michigan.

SAGINAW.—A foreign missionary rally, in charge of the corporate members of the American Board, was held Feb. 4, addressed by President Angell of the University of Michigan and others. A large collection was taken for the debt.

THE WEST.

Missouri.

KANSAS CITY.—Clyde. This church, Rev. J. L. Sewall, pastor, has by vote petitioned the Board of Education in the city to take steps for preparing a manual of Bible selections for use in the schools.

Iowa.

TRAER.—A fruitful series of revival meetings recently closed. The pastor, Rev. O. O. Smith, was assisted by his brother, Rev. F. G. Smith of Abingdon, Ill., in a two weeks' campaign, during which about 100 persons professed conversion. Twenty of these were welcomed to fellowship Jan. 19, forty-five Jan. 26 and twenty-two Feb. 2. All but five of this large number were received on confession. There is now scarcely a family in the church of which a single member is left out of Christ. The work reached all ages, from children to men of threescore and ten. At the last meeting two men seventy years old grasped each other's hands and came forward together. A new building is greatly needed, as the membership now exceeds by fifty the seating capacity of the present edifice.

CHARLES CITY.—Union revival services, under the direction of Evangelist Williams, have recently closed with about 200 professed conversions. Of these the Congregational church will receive a good share. Rev. C. C. Otis is a hard and earnest worker, and, as pastor of this church, is leading on to permanent good results. He uses a stereopticon frequently at his evening service and secures large congregations. For four years the current expenses had been allowed to run behind until there was a debt of $700. On the morning of Jan. 26 the pastor appealed for money to meet the deficit, and it was provided for in about twenty minutes. During the few months of the present pastorate there have been about seventy additions to the membership.

CRESTON.—After a faithful pastorate of nearly nine years, Rev. A. J. Van Wagner has severed his relations with this church to go to Carthage, Mo. He preached his farewell sermon the morning of Feb. 2 to a large congregation. In the evening a citizens' meeting was held under the direction of the trustees and the house was crowded. Many persons testified to the work of the retiring pastor. Tuesday evening the church tendered Mr. and Mrs. Van Wagner a reception. Their home was crowded until a late hour by friends, many of whom, though not members, had received sympathy and help from the pastor in times of need.

NASHUA.—Dr. and Mrs. H. C. Scotford were heartily welcomed to their new work by a public reception tendered them by more than 200 members of the church and congregation. The church has recently held its annual meeting. Eighty-five members united during the last year and the benevolent contributions were about $168. Union services were held with the other churches during the Week of Prayer, and plans have been made to renew them in March with an evangelist. Seven members have recently joined the church.

GRINNELL.—A plan has matured for utilizing second-hand periodicals. Tables are placed in the vestibules and the people are requested to bring each Sunday such papers as they are willing to spare. The distribution is in charge of the good literature committee of the C. E. Society. Some of the magazines are used in town and a box has also been shipped to the lumber regions of Wisconsin.

FONTANELLE.—A ten days' series of meetings conducted by Evangelist H. J. Petron of Albert Lea, Minn., has given the church an impetus and will increase its numbers by ten or more, mostly adults. On a recent evening the pastor, Rev. C. B. Taylor, and his wife were treated to a pound social by their parishioners. A Junior Endeavor Society of twenty members has been organized.

LAKEVIEW.—Encouraging reports were presented at the annual meeting. The present membership is seventy, an increase of fifteen. All debts were paid and a small balance remained to begin the year. The benevolences amounted to $95. Rev. R. L. McCord, a former pastor, and his wife, with Secretary Douglas, attended this meeting.

LARCHWOOD.—Rev. William Jones closed his labors Jan. 29. At a farewell reception the people presented him with a complete set of Dr. Guthrie's works as a token of appreciation. During his pastorate the prayer meeting attendance has increased from seven to forty-four, and a debt of $700 has been reduced to $100.

SALEM.—A great awakening is reported, resulting from a series of union revival meetings conducted by Evangelist Hartsough. In the first four days 136 cards were signed. The Congregational edifice seats 428, but it will not accommodate the congregations, so special meetings are held for various classes.

POSTVILLE.—The Young People's Societies of the three churches of the city have organized a union executive committee for the purpose of working together in lines of mutual interest. The Junior Society is flourishing, the attendance being thirty-five.

ROCKWELL.—The new parsonage is highly satisfactory and the lecture-room provides needed accommodation for special occasions and is a great convenience. These improvements, recently completed, cost about $3,850.

IOWA CITY.—Rev. J. T. Marvin, who is visiting here, assisted at the communion service Feb. 2, when twelve members were received, five on confession. This church will raise $50 or more for the debt of the American Board.

REINBECK.—The pastor, Rev. H. E. Warner, presented the matter of the church debt, Dec. 29, and the people responded with an offering of $353. The church rejoices in one of the largest and best regulated Sunday schools in the State.

PLEASANT GROVE.—The people have purchased new hymn-books for church and Sunday school. The church is considerably weakened by deaths and removals from other causes.

CHEROKEE.—Reports at the annual meeting show forty-four accessions to the church, benevolences amounting to $1,874 and $2,100 expended in the local work of the church.

A new house of worship was dedicated at Eagle Grove, Feb. 9, President Gates of Iowa College preaching the sermon.——At Burdette the evening service is generally conducted by the C. E. Society.——A series of union meetings at Mt. Pleasant, conducted by Evangelist Hartsough, resulted in eighty-six professed conversions.——Rev. G. L. Shull, pastor of the Baxter church, is being assisted by Evangelist Packard in a series of revival services.——The pastor at Osage, Rev. W. W. Gist, assisted by Rev. F. G. Wilcox of Mason City, has been holding a series of special meetings.

Minnesota.

MINNEAPOLIS.—Fremont Avenue The pastor, Rev. James McAllister, has been instrumental in procuring evidence resulting in the closing of a gambling establishment. His church published a series of resolutions, commending his course.——Fifth Avenue. The pulpit is being supplied by different ministers until a pastor shall be secured. Over $300 has been pledged to pay a floating debt.——Thirty-Eighth Street Mission. A company of believers of various denominations has been organized, which, without any affiliation with Congregationalists, has secured Rev. A. P. Lyon to preach. A building has been erected.——Mayflower is supplied by Rev. T. H. Lewis of New Brighton and, with the aid of a gift from the C. C. B. S., has freed its property of all encumbrance.

WINTHROP.—Revival meetings continue, it being found impracticable to close them as soon as intended. Large congregations, a deepening of the spiritual life, the expression of a desire to become Christians on the part of sixty persons, with many hopeful conversions, a considerable number being heads of families, are reported. At Gibbon, an out-station where a society has been formed which may result in a church, meetings have been commenced as an overflow from the central organization. Much credit belongs to the faithful pastor, Rev. C. A. Ruddock, through whose instrumentality a parsonage has just been built.

MOORHEAD.—Since the coming of Rev. C. E. Harris, Jr., of New Bedford, Mass., to preach for three months, congregations and Sunday school have increased and a desire has been expressed to make the arrangement permanent. This church, organized two or three years since, has been self-supporting, has a good attendance from the Normal School and a fine opportunity for usefulness.

WATERVILLE.—The Sunday school has outgrown its apartment and the basement has been fitted up to accommodate the overflow, making a warm, cheerful room. This will be devoted to the primary class and the C. E. meetings. Arrangements are being made for a reading-room. Much enthusiasm has developed in this church, which recently, under Rev. W. A. Warren, declared self-support.

ALEXANDRIA.—This church is planning, through the counsel of its pastor, Rev. G. E. Soper, to organize work in the adjacent country. Rev. J. H. Morley was present Feb. 2, and presented the cause of home missions. An offering was made and individuals pledged enough money to put a missionary at work in the surrounding region, which is extensive and destitute.

PILLSBURY AND SWANVILLE.—These pastorless churches have been supplied by neighboring ministers. An evangelist has been secured and some religious interest has developed. On account of financial stringency the churches have been unable until now to raise the salary of a pastor.

DETROIT.—Union evangelistic meetings have been held here for four weeks with outside aid. The attendance was good, a few conversions resulted, with some increase of spiritual life. Several children will unite with the church, but the business men have been untouched.

LAKELAND.—Rev. T. H. Lewis of New Brighton has been assisting in revival meetings here with one or two conversions. The church is weak, having suffered from removals, but a large number of persons who are not identified with any church need to be reached.

SPRING VALLEY.—A three weeks' course of special meetings has just closed, in which Rev. P. M. Harman, the pastor, was the evangelist, preaching afternoons and evenings. They were largely attended by Christians as well as outsiders, and a large number professed conversion.

MORRISTOWN.—Revival meetings have been held with several conversions, six persons uniting with the church and others expressing a purpose to join later. The work has been substantial, the whole community being affected. Some wandering Christians have been reclaimed.

FOSSTON AND MCINTOSH.—These pastorless churches have been visited by Evangelist C. B. Fellows with some conversions at the latter point. Foreign nationalities, few religious people and lack of interest make this one of the hardest and most needy fields.

EXCELSIOR.—The church is being supplied by different ministers for three months, with the expectation of calling a pastor in the spring. Financial depression makes the salary small but the church is one of the pleasantest in the State.

WEST DORA.—Revival meetings have been held by Rev. E. P. Crane for three weeks, with nearly a score of conversions. A parsonage has been secured and the church hopes in time to have a resident pastor.

PELICAN RAPIDS.—The reorganization of a C. E. Society, the distribution of household goods among the destitute and the payment of a portion of the loan to the Church Building Society are reported.

FAIRMONT.—The payment of the debt on the parsonage, the securing of a new pastor, increased contributions for the support of preaching and a hopeful spirit are reported.

SAUK RAPIDS.—Improvements in the town and the establishment of a manufacturing industry enable the church to secure a pastor, and the outlook is more hopeful than for a score of years.

RANDALL.—The church has secured a lot and is planning to build a meeting house. Work has been opened at two or three out-stations destitute of religious services.

MARSHALL.—This strong church has had a prosperous year, $2,289 being raised for church purposes, of which $301 was for benevolences. The roll of membership has been carefully revised.

The parsonage of the Swedish Church at Rush City has been burned, but the loss was fully covered by insurance.

Nebraska.

CRETE.—The communion service Feb. 2 was one of tender interest. Following the Day of Prayer for Colleges some of the young people gave themselves to Christ, and others who attended service at Burks, an out-station maintained by the church, wished to unite with the church. Eighteen persons joined at this time, twelve on confession. The membership has so increased that the communion service is held in the afternoon without a sermon and the evening preaching service is omitted.

RIVERTON.—Following the Billings meetings twenty-eight persons joined the church, all on confession. Of these five men were heads of families, and two boys were from the Junior Society. Sixteen were baptized. Seven others had united before the evangelistic meetings began, five on confession, making thirty-five received since the beginning of the year. By the addition of others who are to unite soon the membership will be doubled. Rev. Samuel Williams is pastor.

CORTLAND.—An interesting service occurred Jan. 5, when fifteen persons were received into fellowship, twelve on confession. Four young people of one family were baptized, which brings the entire household within the fold of Christ. This is the result of the usual ministry of the gospel without reference to special efforts. During twenty-seven months the membership has increased from sixty-five to 101. Rev. F. G. McHenry is pastor.

OMAHA.—Plymouth received seven members Feb.

2, all of whom were men and all were baptized. The pastor, Rev. H. S. MacAyeal, gave one of the lectures in the Weeping Water Academy course. ——Saratoga. The pastor, Rev. E. L. Ely, has been elected superintendent of the Sunday school, which has reached a membership of ninety-eight. He has also received a bicycle for home missionary use.

INDIANOLA. — This church has lately secured a parsonage with the help of the C. C. B. S. The pastor, Rev. A. S. Houston, followed the Week of Prayer with special services, and eighteen persons expressed hope in Christ. At the communion service Feb. 2 thirteen of these united with the church, eleven on confession.

STOCKVILLE. — Rev. C. W. Preston of Curtis preached Feb. 2 to this pastorless church and Mrs. Preston conducted the service in the home church. She has given her address on the Boston C. E. Convention before several societies in the vicinity, arousing great interest.

IRVINGTON.—Nine persons were received Feb. 2, seven on confession, bringing the membership up to ninety-eight. At Bennington, Rev. B. O. Snow's other church, two united on the same day, both on confession.

South Dakota.

FORT PIERRE.—Congregational mission work was begun in this frontier town as early as 1872. In 1889 it received new life through the reorganization of the Sunday school by Superintendent Gray, then in charge of Congregational Sunday school work in this State, and the appointment by the H. M. S. of a regular pastor. The money for founding this school was generously contributed from her savings by the sainted Nancy Marsh of Providence, R. I., whose abundant prayers have blessed the church even more richly than her substance. A council convened, Jan. 28, to ordain Mrs. Henrietta C. Lyman, wife of Rev. W. A. Lyman, pastor at Pierre on the opposite side of the river. Mrs. Lyman during the past year has efficiently conducted the work here with such successful results that the church desired her ordination and continuous services. The exercises were of more than ordinary interest. Among those who took part was Mr. Stephen Yellowhawk, pastor of the Bad River (Indian) church, who offered the opening prayer in the Dakota language. After the ordination five persons were received into membership, four children were baptized by the pastor-elect and the Lord's Supper was observed. Missionary Tomlin closed a two weeks' series of meetings Jan. 27.

HOWARD AND VILAS.—Work on this field, under Rev. Z. H. Smith, is hopeful, though the church has lost heavily by removals during the year. The C. E. Societies have doubled in membership and a Bible Study Club, of twenty members, will meet Wednesday evenings.

TYNDALL.—Superintendent Thrall spent Feb. 2 here. The church is growing and has already taken steps toward building a commodious edifice. The pastor, Rev. A. H. Mulnix, is at present in Maine, whither he was called by the sickness of his father.

HIGHMORE.—The services here, held by Rev. B. H. Burtt of Huron, were of much benefit and it was regretted that he could not remain longer.

Miss Henry is conducting a series of meetings at Meckling.——Rev. John Sattler is holding special meetings among the German churches of Nebraska. ——General Missionary Tomlin is conducting evangelistic services at Waubay.

Colorado.

DENVER —Boulevard. This church, at its organization in 1882, had eleven members, who held their first meetings in a tent. Within a year a small brick edifice was built, and five years later it was necessary to double the capacity of the building. The Sunday school increased so rapidly that in a few years larger quarters were again needed and a small store was rented for six months, when the school moved into the new City Hall. In thirteen years the church has grown to 325 members, and the Sunday school from twenty-five to nearly 700, ranking in point of numbers first of its own denomination in the State, and fourth among all. This phenomenal growth as a graded school is largely due to the executive ability of Mr. J. W. Jackson, who has been superintendent from its beginning. The Y. P. S. C. E. numbers eighty and the Junior C. E. fifty-three. A live missionary society and an efficient Ladies' Aid are also connected with the church. The first Sunday Evening Club of the State was organized here in 1893. The first steps were taken Jan. 1, 1895, toward the erection of the present meeting house, to be large enough for all the departments of an institutional church. It was dedicated Jan. 26, 1896, the fifteen Congregational churches in the city being represented. The first floor contains the audience-room, which, with the galleries, seats 600 persons, the lecture-room and ladies' parlor seating 300, all of which can be thrown together by folding doors. On the same floor is the pastor's room. The basement contains three large rooms with folding doors for the Sunday school. The kitchen and other rooms are also on this floor. The kindergarten room is used by the Y. P. S. C. E. as well as for a reading-room with a circulating library, which is highly appreciated, as it is the only one of the kind in the vicinity. The building is in the Romanesque style, faced with red pressed brick and stone trimmings. The front entrance is handsomely ornamented with carved stone and the windows are stained glass, nine being for memorials. Steam heat and electric lighting are used. The audience-room, one of the handsomest church interiors in Denver, is of pleasing proportions and tastefully decorated. The building cost $20,000 exclusive of the site, furniture and organ. The architect, Mr. F. E. Kidder, formerly of Boston, designed the five Congregational edifices that have been built in Colorado during the last two years. The pastor, Rev. C. H. Pettibone, has been indefatigable in his efforts for the new building. His Eastern friends contributed generously and at the dedication service a floating debt of $1,000 was canceled.

LAFAYETTE.—A blessed work of grace has resulted in the quickening of many and over twenty conversions. Eighteen members were received Feb. 2, fourteen adults and four children being baptized. Rev. J. F. Smith is pastor, and Evangelist A. E. Arrington has rendered valuable assistance during the past few weeks.

GRAND JUNCTION.—Mr. C. N. Crittenton, the millionaire evangelist, with his Florence Crittenton Rescue Car, after his campaign in Utah held a helpful series of meetings here. The reported conversions number 175.

Utah.

SALT LAKE CITY.—The evangelist, C. N. Crittenton, left here Feb. 3 for Ogden, after a sojourn of about ten days. He accomplished an excellent work, about 300 adults, besides children, being converted. He is a man of great earnestness and singular devotion, and is kindly remembered here for his personal worth, as well as for the cause to which he is giving his life.

PACIFIC COAST.

California.

SAN FRANCISCO.—Park. Rev. J. B. Orr, who had a successful pastorate of two years at Benecia, has begun work here, and, though it is now overshadowed by the new Presbyterian enterprise near it, he is encouraged to look for larger things.

First. The committee of the Bay Association, appointed in response to the request of Dr. C. O. Brown to examine charges made against him in the case of Mrs. Davidson, whom he is prosecuting for blackmail, finds it inexpedient to pursue its investigation while the trial before the court is pending. The church itself, assisted at its own request by a council, is the proper ecclesiastical body to make the investigation before any action by the association. But the committee ask a suspension of judgment while the case is before the court, stating that Dr. Brown has shown himself eager to assist in the most thorough investigation and that they have continued confidence in his integrity. He has invited Professor Lloyd of Pacific Seminary to occupy the pulpit temporarily.

ALAMEDA.—The third anniversary of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip was recently observed and greatly enjoyed. Neighboring clergymen made addresses on The Divine Life of Men as manifested in the individual, the home, the church, the state. About 100 were present, the happiest man being the pastor, Rev. W. W. Scudder, who, during his nearly eleven years of service, has won all hearts. Alameda is a growing suburb, and the church cannot do otherwise than advance.

WATSONVILLE.—The Chinese mission, now two years old, was recently visited by Dr. Pond, superintendent of Chinese work. Baptizing ten Chinese, the largest number to whom he has ever administered this sacrament at one time, he organized them, with the teacher and helper, into the Bethany Church.

SONOMA.—The hymn-books given by the Young Men's Bible Class have on the back a printed label setting forth the importance of a thorough knowledge of the Bible and inviting young men to join in studying it at 10 A. M. every Sunday.

COTTONWOOD.—The midweek prayer meeting is attended largely by young people, most of them not yet Christians. Many of the church members live too far away to attend. A C. E. Society of thirty members has been organized.

Rev. E. S. Williams, who is well acquainted with the stations and missionaries in Armenia, is arousing much sympathy for the persecuted and raising considerable money by stereopticon lectures. A pleasant feature is that the various churches of a community unite in the service.—— Rev. Walter Frear, agent of the American Board, is putting forth strenuous efforts to raise toward the debt the $1,000 apportioned to California.——The Turlock church has canceled its debt.

Washington.

SEATTLE.—Plymouth. The congregation which crowded the audience-room, Feb. 2, was with difficulty restrained from cheering at the close of an address by the pastor, Rev. W. H. G. Temple, in which he dealt vigorously with methods and measures pertaining to the revision of the city charter, on which the people are to vote at the coming election.

MCMILLIN.—A neat little meeting house was dedicated Jan. 29 at a cost of $640. At the afternoon service Mrs. Lydia T. Bailey gave a helpful address. The sermon in the evening was by Rev. L. H. Hallock, D.D., of Tacoma. The pastor, Rev. O. L. Fowler, has worked hard for this enterprise and deserves great credit for its success.

COLFAX.—Encouraging reports were presented at the annual meeting. This church has suffered much from removals but is courageously pushing forward. The benevolences were over $130 and the home expenses more than $1,400. Rev. H. P. James is pastor.

RITZVILLE.—Rev. J. W. H. Lockwood is having good success in interesting the people of neighboring communities in Christian work. Rev. T. W. Walters is helping him in special meetings.

PLEASANT PRAIRIE. — This church, which has worshiped in the Methodist edifice, now finds itself driven into the schoolhouse, as the Methodist people have decided to occupy their house alone.

YELM.—The pastor, Rev. H. E. Gregory, has held a series of special meetings which strengthened the church and extended its influence, people coming six or seven miles to attend.

KENNEWICK.—Interesting services, with good results, are being conducted by Rev. Messrs. Samuel Greene and E. J. Singer, both of the C. S. S. and P. S.

The revival in Springdale, so well started during Rev. T. W. Walters's meetings, is continuing under the labors of the pastor, Rev. H. M. Mobbs.——Mrs. Lydia Tichenor Bailey is having large audiences at Snohomish, where she is conducting special services in which all the churches unite.——Rev. L. Adams Smith of Christopher is helping Rev. D. H. Bicknell of Kirkland in special meetings.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

Iowa Endeavorers are earnestly supporting a petition for a law to keep young prisoners from being thrown into close association with older convicts.

A New Zealand society has as an honorary member a physician, who contributes to the relief work of the society by giving his services and medicine to those in need.

The forming of a new society of twelve members on the first Sunday of January was the way in which an Endeavorer of Clifton, Tex., began to fulfill his New Year's resolution to organize more societies this year.

A society in Launceston, Tasmania, has divided its neighborhood into twenty-five districts and appointed two persons to each district to distribute tracts and to give to the church information as to newcomers or any other matters of interest.

Partly as a result of the formation of a society a year ago in the Masonic Widows' and Orphans' Home at Louisville, Ky., there are now nearly one hundred Christians in the institution, while there were very few when the society was organized.

The postal authorities of Victoria, Australia, lately issued postal cards on which were printed advertisements of beer and tobacco. A protest was first made at a Christian Endeavor convention, and the movement ended in the rebuke of the authorities and the withdrawal of the cards.

For use in European countries, the topics for the prayer meetings and the list of daily readings have been translated into French, German, Dutch, Danish, Hungarian, Polish, Italian and Russian, and inquiries regarding them have been made in Norway, Sweden, Spain, Austria and Greece.

An organizing committee of ten members is found useful by the Jackson County Union of Texas in starting new societies, the ten members representing different branches of a society; and when the committee goes to establish a new society it conducts a model prayer meeting to illustrate the Christian Endeavor methods.

Connecticut, which had the honor of being the home of the first local union and the first State union, has organized the first Veteran Association of Christian Endeavorers, made up of past and present State officers and presidents of Junior unions, while others may be added by vote of the members. Annual meetings are held in connection with the State convention, and at these gatherings the secretary presents information about the members selected from letters that each furnishes him at a given time.

OTHER CHRISTIAN WORK.

Rt. Rev. Henry C. Riley, late Bishop of the Valley of Mexico, has been suspended from the office of bishop by the Protestant Episcopal Church.

CHRISTIAN INFLUENCE AT CAMBRIDGE.

A large number of Harvard students attend the Sunday morning service at the First Church, Cambridge, regularly, and remain during the Bible class, conducted by Francis Gaylord Cook, Esq. In closing a series of lessons Mr. Cook has arranged to have three valuable lectures delivered by university professors. Last Sunday, in spite of the severe storm, about one hundred persons listened to a lecture of great interest on The Bible and the Reformation, by Prof. E. Emerton. Next Sunday Prof. J. H. Thayer, one of the American revisers, will speak on The Revised Version, and Feb. 23 Prof. G. L. Kittredge on The Authorized Version. Through this class Mr. Cook has done a great work for Harvard students.

At the meeting on the Day of Prayer for Colleges three Harvard students spoke of the religious life at Harvard, describing the college Y. M. C. A. and the volunteer Christian work done each week by groups of Harvard students in Boston, as well as of a recent significant religious movement called the United Societies.

The vesper services held at five o'clock on Thursday afternoons during the winter are so popular that Appleton Chapel is filled with students and their friends. The new Harvard Hymn Book is much appreciated.

This is the fiftieth year of Cambridge under its city charter, and for forty years the university has been represented on the school board by some of its professors.

HOME MISSIONARY FUND.

I have been wondering whether I should be favored this year with the presence of the dear old Congregationalist in my home, as I have changed my location. This change has not improved my financial circumstances but it has my opportunities for doing the Master's work. It is needless to describe the field—a town where vice and sin held carnival until the introduction of religious influences. The Congregational church of which I am pastor is the only English church in the town, which numbers 1,200 people and thirteen saloons. Working in communities of this kind you can, if you have ever been a home missionary, realize the blessing of having such a paper as The Congregationalist coming weekly into your home, but if you have not it is an impossibility to realize what an inspiration it is to the virtually exiled pastor from all intellectual inspiration.

We regret to say that the fund thus far is much smaller than last year and quite insufficient to meet the large demands upon it. We shall ourselves do all that is possible to keep upon the list the names now there, but we cannot carry the burden alone. We invite further generous contributions.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

Paramount in importance in the business world during the past week has been the success attending the Government bond issue. Financiers were prepared for a two or three hundred million subscription, but not for the overwhelming subscription of over a half billion. But it has shown in vivid colors the determination of the American people to sustain the national credit and also their perfect confidence in the future prosperity of the country.

The merchant, manufacturer and capitalist feel much elated at the showing made by subscribers to the bonds and uniformly declare that the result will be a great revival in industrial activity. And, in truth, the atmosphere in financial and business circles has perceptibly cleared. This increase of confidence has reflected itself in higher prices for securities at the stock exchanges and for various staple products.

The volume of trade has not yet felt the stimulus so visible in general confidence, but authorities declare that the tendency towards improvement is plainly evident. The settlement or completion of the bond sale must naturally release the vast amount of money hoarded and withdrawn for bond subscription purposes and easier money rates will do much to stimulate business activity.

The stock market has been higher and maintains the rise from day to day in a remarkable manner, considering the heavy realizing which took place after the success of the bond issue was announced. The advance in prices has included well-nigh the entire list. Special features were the rapid advance in the stock of the American Sugar Refining Company and the serious decline in the Boston market of the stock of the Butte & Boston Mining Company.

WILL arrest at once any bleeding of the gums—Pond's Extract Dentifrice.

A CASE OF PROGRESS.—With the growth of modern business methods it is possible to secure today many pieces of furniture which have heretofore been only available as ordered work. A short time ago if a business firm desired a cashier's bookkeeping desk it could only be had by placing an order in advance and paying the high cost necessitated by building a single desk to order. Today the business man can go to the great warerooms of Paine Furniture Company, on Canal Street, and see every type and description of bookkeepers', cashiers', shippers', messengers', clerks' and proprietors' desks, beside all varieties of desks for home uses. He may take his choice of any wood, size or style, at about half the cost of a few years ago.

Bubbles or Medals.

"Best sarsaparillas." When you think of it how contradictory that term is. For there can be only one best in anything—one best sarsaparilla, as there is one highest mountain, one longest river, one deepest ocean. And that best sarsaparilla is ——?.... There's the rub! You can measure mountain height and ocean depth, but how test sarsaparilla? You could if you were chemists. But then do you need to test it? The World's Fair Committee tested it,—and thoroughly. They went behind the label on the bottle. What did this sarsaparilla test result in? Every make of sarsaparilla shut out of the Fair except Ayer's. So it was that Ayer's was the only sarsaparilla admitted to the World's Fair. The committee found it the best. They had no room for anything that was not the best. And as the best, Ayer's Sarsaparilla received the medal and awards due its merits. Remember the word "best" is a bubble any breath can blow; but there are pins to prick such bubbles. Those others are blowing more "best sarsaparilla" bubbles since the World's Fair pricked the old ones. True, but Ayer's Sarsaparilla has the medal. The pin that scratches the medal proves it gold. The pin that pricks the bubble proves it wind. We point to medals, not bubbles, when we say: The best sarsaparilla is Ayer's.

THE AMERICAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION has been at work seventy-one years for the retired rural districts. Its union methods specially commend it to communities of sparse populations divided in religious sentiments. Its missionaries visit families, distribute religious literature, hold evangelistic meetings and organize Sunday Schools. Probably no evangelizing agency has larger results for the amount expended. 11,000,000 children are yet out of Sunday School. Will you help to save them? Send to Rev. Addison P. Foster, D. Do not take any substitute when you ask for the one true blood purifier, Hood's Sarsaparilla. Insist upon Hood's and only Hood's.

AN unusual opportunity is afforded any society that is thinking of building or reseating a church about 40 x 70. The Newton Methodist Episcopal Church has fifty-six pews, chestnut, black walnut trimmed, thirteen Gothic arch top stained glass windows, organ, interior (chestnut) finish, which they will sell at a great bargain for immediate removal. Address A. S. Weed, publisher Zion's Herald, Boston.

RHEUMATISM HAS VANISHED.—"I was greatly troubled with dyspepsia, rheumatism, insomnia and various other affections consequent of a run-down condition of the system. I tried various remedies, but nothing seemed to help me. I saw Hood's Sarsaparilla advertised in the papers and took it. It gave me refreshing sleep and I very soon began feeling better in every way. It has given me a good appetite, purified my blood, cleared my complexion, and my rheumatism is a thing of the past. I would not be without Hood's Sarsaparilla. I have recommended it to my friends and many of them have taken it by my advice." Mrs. D. A. Kimball, 25 Madison Street, Somerville, Mass.

WOMAN'S BOARD PRAYER MEETING.

CONGREGATIONAL HOUSE, BOSTON, FEB. 7.

The name Scudder, so long associated with mission work in India and Japan, sounded eminently appropriate when the leader was introduced as Mrs. Doremus Scudder, recently of Japan and now of Woburn. Her Scripture selection was 2 Cor. 12: 1–10, where Paul glories in his experiences of infirmities, reproaches, necessities, persecutions and distresses for Christ's sake—an experience in which some modern saints have occasion to sympathize, as Dr. Barnum of Harpoot, who is "ready" for whatever comes; Mrs. Montgomery of Adana, who counts it the joy and crown of her whole life that she is permitted to be in her chosen work in this time of trial; Dr. Sheffield of Tungcho, who in the midst of terrible physical suffering has had wonderful visions of the grace of God.

Mrs. Thompson referred to Dr. Hamlin's anxiety for his daughter, Mrs. Lee, and her family in Marash, and to their experience at the time of the massacre when death seemed to stare them in the face. Mr. and Mrs. Lee and their two children committed themselves to God, even the two children taking it calmly —and why? Because, as their dear grandfather says, "Their angels do always behold the face of my father which is in heaven."

Mrs. Scudder introduced Miss Adelaide Doughaday, a fellow-worker in Japan, who spoke of the continued need of outside Christian help in that country where so small a proportion are Christians, even though rapid strides have been made in civilization. She gave a brief account of her work in Tottori with Mr. and Mrs. Rowland, relating an incident of a priest's announcing at one time that they would celebrate the funeral of Christianity. He talked four evenings, and then a lawyer, not a Christian, came in and interrupted him with wise questioning. The meeting was broken up in great confusion, and the cause which was to be hindered was promoted.

Miss Ellen M. Stone noted points of similarity in missionary work in different countries and gave encouraging words from Bulgaria. A good example of a prayer meeting was one held during the Week of Prayer, where the women prayed all around, then the children present took it up and all prayed, and then the women prayed all around again. The Bible women are giving most efficient service, and the Samokov school for girls is a great power among the people. "But what shall we do with this tremendous cut?"

Mrs. Codwise repeated the beautiful little poem, My Lady, and missionary interests in Christian Endeavor Societies were especially mentioned. As usual the hour seemed all too short for the words which were waiting to be spoken, letters to be read and prayers to be offered, while the crowded rooms represented interested workers from near and far.

LOYALTY TO OUR CHURCH.

Christian Endeavorers of different denominations are invited at their prayer meetings next week to answer the following questions. We suggest some answers which might be given by Congregationalists:

1. Who founded our denomination? Jesus Christ and the Apostles. The primitive churches were Congregational in their organization and government. Congregationalism finds some of its principles first set forth in modern times in the writings of Robert Browne, more fully proclaimed and illustrated by John Robinson and his Pilgrim associates.

2. What are its fundamental principles?

(a) The acceptance of the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments inspired by the Holy Spirit, as containing all things necessary to salvation, and as being the rule and ultimate standard of Christian faith.

(b) Discipleship of Jesus Christ, the divine Lord and Saviour and the teacher of the world.

(c) The Church of Christ, which is his body, whose great mission it is to preach his gospel to the world.

(d) Liberty of conscience in the interpretation of the Scriptures and in the administration of the church.

The peculiar principles of Congregationalism are the autonomy of the local church and the fellowship of believers on a basis of entire equality. Its motto is, "One is your Master and all ye are brethren."

3. Who have given up their lives for its faith? The three latest martyrs for Congregationalism were John Greenwood, Henry Barrowe and John Penry, who were hanged in London in 1593.

4. What is one of the most striking scenes in its history? The landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth, 1620.

5. What great books have been written by men of our denomination? The early literature of New England was mainly produced by Congregationalists. Among its illustrious authors in America are John Cotton, Thomas Hooker, Cotton Mather, Jonathan Edwards; in later years, Leonard Bacon, Horace Bushnell, Henry Ward Beecher; among living writers, George P. Fisher, Harriet Beecher Stowe, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps.

6. What is the greatest hymn written by one of our denomination? Choose from the hymns of Watts and Doddridge. Dr. Dwight's I Love Thy Kingdom Lord, Dr. Palmer's My Faith Looks Up to Thee, and Dr. Gladden's O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee, are great and precious hymns.

7. What are the greatest missionary triumphs of our denomination? The Sandwich Islands, India, Turkey and Japan suggest thrilling records of the triumphs of missions of the American Board.

8. What is the greatest need of our denomination today? The gift of the Holy Spirit, raising up consecrated leaders and moving all the members to more devoted labors and more generous gifts. The greatest immediate need is the payment of the debts of our benevolent societies.

9. What can our Christian Endeavor Society do to become more familiar with the workings of our denomination? Form clubs to study Congregational history. In some places such organizations have taken the appropriate name of Scrooby Clubs. Read Congregationalists in America and the Story of the Pilgrims. Take The Congregationalist and keep in touch with the work and growth of the denomination. Study and aid the work of our missionary societies.

10. What are some of the chief excellences of our denomination? The necessary self-development of the individual; the fellowship of our churches, together with local self-sufficiency in government; our willingness to recognize and fellowship all Christian churches; love for education and missionary zeal.

11. Why is loyalty to our denomination a condition of loyalty to all God's church? Because our first responsibility is to maintain the prosperity of that branch of God's church into which he has led us, and with which we have entered into covenant.

DR. GRENFELL IN BOSTON.

Dr. Jacob Chamberlain, the veteran missionary from India, offered prayer at the Ministers' Meeting, Monday, and Rev. E. H. Byington, D. D., read a paper on The Social and Family Life of the Pilgrims and Puritans.

Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, having spent the Sabbath in the vicinity of Boston, was called out for a few words about his unique work. Dr. Grenfell is a young Englishman of interesting history—an Oxford student and athlete, a London surgeon who was converted under the influence of Dwight L. Moody in that city and consecrated his life to caring for the physical and spiritual wants of sailors. For several years he worked in the North Sea, at first with one mission vessel, afterward with several—every one having inscribed on its starboard and port bows the legends: Preach the Gospel and Heal the Sick. The grog-ships, which had been the terrible foe of the deep sea sailors, have at last, by international compact, been driven from the high seas, the gunboats of any of the nations having authority to seize any such floating saloon.

For four years Dr. Grenfell has spent his summers cruising along the wild coast of Labrador, carrying on the same double work among the fishermen of ship and shore, healing those that have need of healing and holding simple, religious services in whatever harbor his mission steamer was anchored. The doctor alluded pleasantly to the fact that of all the 1,900 cases of medical or surgical treatment the past season that of Pomiuk, the Eskimo "Corner" boy from the World's Fair, seemed to be the best known in the United States! It is expected that Dr. Grenfell will speak at Dr. McKenzie's church in Cambridge next Sunday evening.

ADDITIONAL RETURNS FROM THE DAY OF PRAYER FOR COLLEGES.

At Colorado the early morning prayer meeting, conducted by President Slocum and attended by about fifty, was marked by a spirit of deep earnestness and was participated in by at least two-thirds of those present. Half-hour meetings under the auspices of the Y. M. and Y. W. C. A.'s followed, and were in turn followed by the service in the chapel, where a straightforward and helpful address was given by Rev. Allan Tanner of Pueblo, whose father was so long president of Illinois College. A union meeting of the Christian Associations in the evening was led by the presidents of the organizations.

At Wyoming Collegiate Institute regular classes and exercises were dispensed with, and the day was devoted to the one purpose for which it is designed. In the morning and afternoon addresses were given to the students and numerous citizens who were present on significant topics and gave encouragement for the future. The interest steadily increasing brought out a large congregation in the evening to the students' meeting, in which pastors, instructors, students, citizens and others participated. It was a good day, which augured well for the student body.

It was a good day in Weeping Water Academy. The services were held with impressive and able discourses, the interest was deep and the Spirit present. It was good to listen to the testimony of the students, all but five of whom have a hope in Christ.

Fargo College observed the day with special services of great interest. Invited guests were present to give addresses, and meetings were held morning, afternoon and evening and were well attended. The earnest words spoken left an impression not to be forgotten. There are indications that Fargo is to be an important educational center for the future and that the people of the Red River Valley and North Dakota are determined to give their children the best educational advantages. The college, with its 100 students now in attendance, never had better prospects.

As usual the day was observed with great profit in Ripon College, Wisconsin. Some of the teachers, whose memory goes back to the beginning, might have been somewhat disappointed because the scenes of some former times were not repeated. There was not a large number of conversions, but most of the students are already professing Christians. The entire body in attendance rose to their feet in testimony to this fact. The reverent stillness of the meetings, the eagerness with which the words of the speakers were received and the deep heartiness of the prayers and testimonies were sufficient evidence that the impression made was deep and lasting. Ripon does not forget its mission as a Christian college.

to every woman—wash day and house cleaning time with their grim attendants; "aching back," "low spirits," "tired to death," "worn out," "out of sorts." Why don't you get rid of these things? Use Pearline. There are directions on each package that will show you the latest, safest, quickest, and best ways of washing.

The wonderful success of Pearline (used and talked of by millions of women) —that alone ought to move you to try it. And then a trial means continued use. 472

COTTOLENE COOKS

Should remember to use only two-thirds as much Cottolene as they formerly used of lard or butter. With two-thirds the quantity they will get better results at less cost than it is possible to get with lard or butter. When Cottolene is used for frying articles that are to be immersed, a bit of bread should be dropped into it to ascertain if it is at the right heat. When the bread browns in half a minute the Cottolene is ready. Never let Cottolene get hot enough to smoke.

THREE IMPORTANT POINTS: The frying pan should be cold when the Cottolene is put in. Cottolene heats to the cooking point sooner than lard. It never sputters when hot.

The Cottolene trade-marks are "Cottolene" and a steer's head in cotton-plant wreath.

Many People Complain of Being Out of Order.

By No Means Sick, But They Don't Feel Just Right.

Are Weak, Nervous, Tire Easily and Work is an Effort.

There are numberless people who do not call themselves sick, and yet who feel weak, nervous, languid or tired; they have lost their vim, power of endurance and ambition to work. They feel miserable, not because they are actually sick, but because they are not well.

People complain that they are weak, nervous, tired and exhausted; that they have a poor or variable appetite, no strength, no nerve; they become irritable, cross, blue and discouraged. In some cases there are pains and aches in various parts of the body, and there is often indigestion, dyspepsia, belching of wind, dull, cloudy head and general dispirited feeling. Sleepless, restless, wakeful nights follow. The brain tires easily and there may be a tendency to drowsiness during the day. Neglect of these symptoms results in excessive nervous prostration or paralysis, with numbness, trembling, cold feet and legs, prickling sensation and weakness and weariness of the limbs.

MISS BERTHA A. ELMER.

Look to the symptoms in time, nervous sufferers, to avert the dread results. Do as did Miss Bertha A. Elmer of Etna, N. H., who says:—

"About two years ago last fall I was obliged to leave off work on account of ill health. The doctor told me I had overworked. I suffered from severe headaches and grew so poor and pale that people told me if my eyes were closed they would believe me dead.

"My nerves seemed all unstrung. I suffered in this way all winter and there was nothing that seemed to help me. At last my mother persuaded me to try Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. I took one bottle and that helped me, and I decided to try another. I took three bottles in all, after which I was as well or even better than I had ever been before.

"Please publish this testimonial if it would be likely to help others, for I feel sure Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy saved my life."

Remember that this marvelous medicine, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, will make you strong and well; that it is the discovery of the successful specialist in nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., who can always be consulted without charge, personally or by letter, in regard to the action of the medicine. Try it; you will not regret it.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

REV. LUTHER H. PLATT.

Mr. Platt was born near Mendon, Ill., but most of his life was spent in Kansas, where he filled several pastorates and was especially useful in developing home missionary interests. His father's farm was a station on the Underground Railway and the thrilling experiences connected with efforts to help the fugitive slaves awakened a fearlessness in reforms which characterized his whole life. He served in the Civil War and in 1869 began work at Eureka, Kan., under the C. H. M. S. and labored efficiently for many years. He died at Alton, Kan., Jan. 18, at the age of 60. He leaves a wife and two sons, one of whom, Rev. Dwight H. Platt, is a pastor at large under the C. H. M. S. in Kansas and the other is a student in Washburn College.

MONS. H. ALFRED ANDRE,

Who died suddenly Jan. 23, was a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor, a regent of the Bank of France and one of the ablest financiers of Paris. Having been brought up by a noble Christian mother whom he deeply loved, and having been converted early in life, he gave much of his time and largely of his means to religious and philanthropic work. He was the recognized leader in all the Protestant movements in France, was president of the great missionary society of the Protestant State Church and was connected directly or indirectly with every Protestant agency in the republic. It was said that he gave annually to 500 religious and benevolent societies. His elegant home on Rue Boetie was a resort of pastors, missionaries and their families, and was the center of Christian fellowship and good will. He had a beautiful summer home in the mountains of Switzerland, and during the summer it was his custom to gather the peasants of the neighborhood and hold religious services with them. He was president of the national committee of the Y. M. C. Associations of France and a leader in the Paris Y. M. C. A., to which he gave $70,000 toward the erection of their present elegant building. He was deputized by the president of the French republic to confer upon Mr. James Stokes of New York the decoration as a knight of the Legion of Honor, in recognition of his gift of $100,000 to this same building. But for the generosity of Mr. André and Mr. Stokes this building would not have been possible. Mr. André was so prominent as a leader in all Protestant movements that it is difficult to see how many of them will be able to carry on their work without his supervision and generous assistance. He was a thoroughly spiritually-minded, earnest, Christian man and a genial, cultured gentleman.

CHARLES B. RUGGLES.

This Christian brother died in Cincinnati, O., Jan. 31, aged 62 years. He was born in Boylston, Mass., graduated from Williston Seminary and Amherst College. He spent two years in Bangor Theological Seminary, went to Springfield, O., in 1865, where he was principal of the schools. He entered the service of the great book concerns, first of Scribner's, afterwards of Appleton's. For several years past he was manager of a teachers' agency. His life in Ohio was spent in Springfield, Cleveland and Cincinnati, in which places he was prominently identified with Congregational churches, filling the office of Sunday school superintendent for a number of years and being a deacon nearly all of his life in Ohio. Mrs. Ruggles survives him.

DEACON S. C. WELD.

The Congregational church at South Hadley Falls feels keenly the loss of Deacon S C. Weld, whose death occurred Jan. 30. For many years he had been closely identified with all phases of the church's life, and in addition to his position as senior deacon he was for nearly thirty years the efficient clerk and treasurer, and for more than twenty-five years had served as superintendent of the Sunday school. He was in hearty sympathy with the work of the Christian Endeavor Society, and every movement having for its purpose the building up of Christ's kingdom found in him a loyal supporter. Resolutions in recognition of his devotion have been adopted by the church and the several societies connected with it.

STRANGE BUT TRUE.

A Clergyman's Narrative.

As there are many letters to write to inquiring friends in regard to my welfare, I will take this way to write to all at once. As many of you well know, my health has been rapidly failing for three years or more past. I have been growing weaker and weighing less, until from one hundred and forty-five pounds I have got down to one hundred seventeen and one-half pounds. My trouble is the dreadful lung disease. The best medical service in Fairhaven and New Bedford has given me up. They cannot reach my complaint, as I knew full well myself. The terrible disease fastened itself upon me afresh some nine weeks ago, prostrating me on a bed of sickness, and I felt that my days were numbered. With wife and the little ones we talked it over amid our prayers and tears; and unless God's hand should intervene, we must part. We were ready, and could say, Thy will, O Lord, be done. I rallied, however, from that, and with much trembling got to my pulpit again, but only to take cold, and then the terrible relapse. My suffering was intense, and I longed to go to sleep and awake in the glorious kingdom. I was so weak that my wife had to wash my hands and face, and bring me what little nourishment I took. I can never forget the kindness of my dear people, nor repay them, only the Lord can and will do that. They so kindly come in every day to see me and bring me something to tempt my poor appetite.

While in this condition, through prayer, I was divinely directed myself to a physician in the city of New York, whom I had never heard of before. I stated to him my case, and he wrote me back that he would give me relief and finally a permanent cure. I got the medicine at once, although at quite a cost for a poor Advent minister, and although I have been taking it only a few days I am now much better, and can walk up and down stairs with ease. His method is entirely new. He puts the medicine directly into the lungs, thus checking the disease at once. Please remember me in prayer, that I may grow stronger in body and spirit, and soon be able to proclaim the unsearchable riches of Christ. Your brother in Him,

O. L. Waters, Pastor,
Fairhaven, Mass.

Rev. Mr. Waters reports his further progress as follows, January 13: "Am still improving. Last night I slept without waking, which I have not done before for many months. I am in all respects a different man."

January 22: "I attended services in my church last Sunday, which is the first time since December 1. Can now walk out pleasant days. My lungs feel as though they had been washed out and the diseased tubes cleaned off."

This testimony is quite voluntary on the clergyman's part, being neither asked nor sought for.

Note.—The physician referred to by the pastor is Dr. Robert Hunter, 117 West 45th Street, New York, from whom all particulars of the treatment can be obtained.

EDUCATION.

— Columbia University, N. Y., hereafter, not Columbia College.

— The trustees of Ahtanum Academy, Washington, have at last secured the $2,500 on which aid from the Education Society is conditioned. This will strengthen the school and greatly relieve those who have been carrying its financial burdens.

— Meetings have been held at Wilton German-English College, Iowa, since the Day of Prayer for Colleges, with satisfactory results among the German students. All but two of them are praying and all but eight or nine feel that they are converted. The work never looked more encouraging.

— The fire at Redfield College, Jan. 26, is supposed to have been caused by coals dropping from an open stove. The library and most of the valuables were saved. Many of the students, however, lost their clothing and belongings. The work of the college was hindered very little, however, as the meeting house, vacant store buildings and one room in the public school building were at once offered for recitation rooms. The upper rooms of a commodious business block have been fitted up for lodging rooms for the students. A large and enthusiastic citizens' meeting was held on Tuesday, when help was furnished the students who had met with losses, and several hundred dollars were subscribed toward the creation of another building. Friends also from different parts of the State sent in clothing and bedding. Though this is a great blow to the college the work will by no means stop. It is the great desire of the college to rebuild free from debt. On the Day of Prayer for Colleges Pres. H. K. Warren of Yankton gave the address.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Haverhill district, including the towns of Bradford, West Boxford, Georgetown, Groveland, Merrimac and West Newbury, with the city of Haverhill, hold their annual meeting this week Wednesday in the Portland Street Baptist Church.

Belmont, Newton, Waltham, Watertown and Weston schools, which number nearly forty, organized a district association at Watertown, Feb. 5, which they named Norumbega, after the familiar name by which that section was once commonly known.

Palmer district held its winter convention in North Brookfield, Feb. 6. Through a severe storm delegations came from nearly all of the sixteen towns and remained throughout the three sessions. Modern Discoveries in Archæology by Rev. A. R. Nichols, The Jewish Tabernacle, with a model, by Rev. F. E. Jenkins, and The Institutional Church by Rev. A. M. Osgood were the principal and helpful addresses.

The Indiana State secretary reports for the last half of 1895 thirty-seven regular county, four township conventions, and seven special single session meetings, requiring him to travel 5,201 miles and making 144 addresses. Seventy-eight out of ninety-two counties, or eighty-five per cent. have adopted the home department and have appointed one or two persons in each to have special supervision of the work. Twenty-five counties have decided in convention to make a complete canvass of the entire county on or before April 15. The State has recently been able to cancel its indebtedness of $659 which had been of long standing.

THE LORD'S PRUNING KNIFE.

[Phil. 4: 4.]

REJOICE! yea, rejoice in God alway!
Rejoice in him, I say again, rejoice!
In Him! For otherwhere is naught but grief,
Pain, losing, dying, partings worse than death;
Therefore, I, Paul, the pris'ner of the Lord,
(Remember this my chain!) I say to you,
I say again, rejoice. For what is pain,
But need of clinging closer to his hand?
The hand that smites that we may turn and cling!
And what is loss but his own smile let in
By sudden lopping of the tender twig,
Or stubborn branch, that kept it from the grape?
Yea! nearness, nearer than the flesh can know
Abides in gentle death.

Now, therefore, let
Your patience and your gentleness be gems
To make you ever lovely in his sight,
For lo! he cometh quickly. Look not, then,
Anxiously forth towards the dawning day;
Be like to little children, who, at eve,
Gather around a father well-beloved
And, amid many kisses, tell him all
The joys the day has brought them, and put up
Their innocent petitions, sure of this,
That, if he grant, his joy out-measures theirs,
Denying, he denies because he loves.
So, o'er your hearts, shall his strong Peace keep guard,
A calm, pure angel, with uplifted eyes,
And brow bright with the glory of his smile.

INCREASING indications come to us of a desire among our readers for that which ministers to their soul life and of a keen appreciation of material of this kind already provided, particularly in our column Closet and Altar. We have, therefore, this year arranged our program with a special and generous provision for this deep-seated yearning. Of such a character is the series which begins in this issue of the paper entitled The Christian Life. It will continue in weekly installments through the Lenten season and will take up these successive themes: Responsibility, Prayer, Bible Reading, Church Worship, Fellowship and Communion Service. The author, Rev. Floyd Tomkins, Jr., is the rector of one of the most prominent Episcopal churches of Providence, R. I., and stands in the communion of which he is so eminent a representative for the largest breadth and the warmest evangelical piety. He has been heard from time to time at interdenominational gatherings like Y. M. C. A. conventions conducting, in a number of instances, the devotional hours known as "retreats," and the quality of his leadership on these occasions has evinced a deep grasp of things unseen and a real power of apprehending Christianity in a vital and virile way. What he is writing for our paper is unmistakably in the sphere of personal religion. One who does not care for such themes will undoubtedly pass the articles by, but the great multitude of our readers who long for a closer walk with God will find them inspiring and rewarding. We seldom have begun a series of articles from which we anticipated so large results of the best sort.

Our Pilgrimage next summer offers an opportunity not likely soon to recur for American Congregational pastors to become acquainted with their brethren in England, and to come into touch with the religious and social life of those in the mother country in whom we are naturally most interested. The arrangements are so made that no time need be wasted and, while the trip is only for two months, a great deal can be learned and enjoyed in that short time at comparatively small expense. It would be to the advantage of many churches, especially of those whose pastors have served them for several years, to help their ministers to improve this opportunity. Many of these faithful leaders of our churches have not yet been abroad because they could not afford the money. The investment by a church in such an outing for its pastor would bring in large returns in richer sermons and more comprehensive views of Christian work. It is evident that the limit of membership in the party may soon be reached. But we especially desire that as many ministers as possible should avail themselves of the privileges of the Pilgrimage, which has been planned with a great deal of thought and labor.

There are many who confidently expect that from the investigations of modern psychologists vital religion is to receive an indorsement all the more convincing to some because secured by the processes termed scientific. To all such the words spoken by Pres. G. Stanley Hall of Clark University to Boston Unitarians last week will have peculiar interest, and by others, who are quite satisfied with the validity of their religious convictions without any corroboration from modern psychology or science, they should not be deemed unimportant, for they herald the coming of an ally that cannot be despised. Said President Hall, whose theme was Modern Methods in the Study of the Soul:

> We are coming to realize from this modern psychology that the heart—the emotional nature—is more fundamental to the soul than anything else. The test of a civilization is the soundness of the heart. The study of the emotions points to the existence of something we may as well call God. Perhaps not much of a God, you say, but certainly a sanifying thought in these days of unrest. We get, too, a new idea of Christ. The old antagonism of science and religion is dead. The idea of a divine Man is coming home to biological students.

St. Paul was voicing a profound truth when he wrote to the Romans, "For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness."

THE TRIUMPHS OF PEACE.

War is never honorable except when it is waged in behalf of righteousness, nor then except as a last resort. Righteous principles, established and maintained in and between nations without war, are the manliest and bravest achievements possible. Between countries which have the same Christian standards of righteousness war ought to be impossible.

We believe that these are settled convictions of the great majority of the people in Great Britain and the United States, marking the advance of Christian sentiment during the nineteenth century. The Venezuela controversy has given an opportunity to the people of both countries to express their convictions of the importance and wisdom of providing permanently for the arbitration of such differences between them as are properly subjects for arbitration. This is no new thing. It has been favorably considered in the British Parliament and in the American Congress in recent years. But now, for the first time, it has become a matter of great popular interest. In England public sentiment among all classes favors the appointment of a tribunal, representing both nations, for the settlement of controversies between them. A memorial has been prepared in England asking for such a tribunal. Its authors have received assurances from the responsible advisers of the government that their action was cordially approved. The memorial bears the names of many who are eminent in church and state, and its list of signatures is rapidly growing. In the United States the desire for international arbitration is not less strong. Movements have started spontaneously in Chicago, New York and Philadelphia to give expression to public opinion on this subject. A conference of representative men is to be held in the last named city Feb. 22, our national holiday, in response to the English movement. Among the speakers announced are Dr. Lyman Abbott, Dr. Washington Gladden and Mr. S. B. Capen. Many meetings will be held this week which will show the strength of the sentiment in favor of the peaceful solution of all questions between the two nations according to the principles of righteousness which both nations acknowledge. This will be the theme of sermons in many pulpits next Sunday. The call for these meetings, of which we gave some account last week, also bears the names of many representative men.

The establishment of this principle of arbitration between Great Britain and the United States, if accomplished, will be one of the greatest triumphs of Christianity in the Christian era. Contrast the elevation of both nations in fraternal purpose to maintain just relations with the humiliation of one and the exhaustion of the resources of the other at the close of a long and bitter war. Think of the influence of this principle, once established, in maintaining fair and kindly feelings between individuals and communities as compared with the spirit of strife in each country which would be fostered by international conflict. Think of the ambition to help and upbuild one another's interests as compared to the spirit aroused to injure and destroy others. How much more the appeal of the gospel to individual souls will be enforced by Christian nations in mutual forbearance seeking to promote one another's welfare than would be the effect if ministers blended appeals to accept Christ as their Saviour and Lord with appeals to stir them to destroy his disciples who live under another flag? Is any theme more fitted than this at this time to inspire both patriotism and Christian devotion? The blessings of international arbitration ought to be proclaimed from all Christian pulpits in this and our mother country. The results of establishing it will be far more important now that the people have become deeply interested in it than would have been the provision for an international tribunal by the congresses of both nations a few years ago, as was then contemplated. This movement means an advance in Christian character and fellowship, a higher idea of the relations between man and man and of the responsibility of nations for the welfare of mankind, in which all the people may share.

We do not care to discuss at this time the methods by which international arbitration may be secured. These we may leave for the present to the consideration of statesmen who have at heart the welfare of both nations. When once the people show their determination to secure these triumphs of peace, their leaders, sharing their spirit, will obey their will. We do not desire any alliance with Great Britain which will involve us in the possibility of war to settle the relations of the countries of Europe to one another. We seek only that these two foremost nations may maintain peace between themselves with the united purpose to uphold the highest interests of both for the good of the whole world. If this century shall close with such a bloodless victory for righteousness the world will have advanced swiftly toward the millennium.

THE BOARD'S PERIL—THE CHURCHES' OPPORTUNITY.

It will be remembered that at the last annual meeting of the American Board in Brooklyn the question of the debt had most serious consideration. A gentleman present, of another denomination than ours, gave a magnificent challenge to the loyalty of our churches by pledging the sum of $25,000 toward the debt provided the whole should be raised before the first of March. In order to accomplish this object and not interfere with the regular receipts from the churches a special committee was appointed whose duty should be to secure the balance of the debt, namely $90,000. It was advised that this be accomplished through individual pledges rather than from church collections. The Board must depend upon the church collections for its regular income.

In planning their work the committee hoped that the district of the Interior, with Chicago as its center, would raise $25,000; the middle district, with New York as its center, $30,000, and the New England district $35,000. At present something more than $55,000 is pledged in addition to the original sum. We are face to face with this alternative: nearly $35,000 must be secured before the first of March, a date which is perilously close at hand, or, failing in this, all these generous pledges amounting to more than $80,000 must be lost.

It is evident to all that haste is necessary in order to meet this real crisis in the history of the Board. To lose these large pledges now would be little less than an irreparable disaster, from which every missionary, every mission and all our churches would suffer. For years it would be impossible to renew efforts to cancel this debt. The debt will be paid, of course, and paid by our Congregational constituency, aided by magnificent help from some beyond our order. Today is the best time in which to meet this obligation. The time has arrived for all who love the old American Board and the work it represents to come at once to its rescue. The gifts of sacrifice must be multiplied. It cannot be possible that thoughtful men and women will allow a failure. Our Congregational churches have too great courage to falter at this critical time. Meanwhile there is the greatest solicitude on the part of all the friends of the Board—and we share it fully—as to the outcome of this most deserving effort to clear the Board of its crushing burden. "Quick help is double help."

TO HELP THE POOR.

In a book on mission philanthropy, which is reviewed in another column, the author emphasizes two especially of the difficulties which stand in the way of successful help for the poor. In the broadest terms these are lack of knowledge and lack of love. The essential qualities of successful philanthropy are therefore, from this point of view, intelligence and tact.

To the church as well as the philanthropist the condition of those who herd together in the slums is pathological—a condition painful and unnatural. It does not follow, however, that sincere belief that this is true is a full equipment for philanthropic work. The human soul is the most complicated of all organisms and he who would deal rightly with it must understand it. The first prerequisite for work among the sick must be an understanding of the working of the powers, not only in health, but also under the influence of disease. The alienist must learn to look at life from the madman's slant. If abject and unambitious poverty is disease or madness, knowledge of the way of thinking of the hopeless poor, and imaginative sympathy with their opinion of life must precede success. The man or woman who plays with the problems of relief and education in the fashion of the noble lady whose experience on a certain occasion is so graphically set forth by Barrie in his story of Sentimental Tommy ought to consider that he is playing with human souls, and is about as likely to improve his playthings as if he were playing quoits with chronometers. Nor can the unimaginative people, whose one thought is to make their beneficiaries toe the line of their own private prejudice, hope to find a willing acquiescence in their plans. It is a fact too often overlooked that a very large proportion of the people of the slums deliberately prefer their life to any other which is open to them. The price of trouble and self-restraint is too great for them to pay for what we deem improvement. To give them money, clothing or food is to make them comfortable in the life which they have chosen, but not to wean them from it. The one hope is to awaken their ambition, and this it is utterly hopeless to expect from those who approach them in blank ignorance of their true state of mind.

The other quality rests upon knowledge but transcends it. Tact is consideration and the only consideration which is at once winning and effective is that which rests on love. We have always believed that a large share of the dislike of the very poor for the wealthier classes arises from the inconsiderate and impolite intrusions and interferences of would-be helpers. The man who has only a single room may dislike to have his door passed by strangers quite as much as the millionaire. If careless ease is his chief joy in life he may resent criticism as much as the society man would resent being called out of his club to be lectured upon the vice of luxurious living. God respects the free individuality of men while he calls them to repentance. If he forced them to repent it would be no repentance after all. This respect, which overrides all social distinctions to show consideration to the man himself, is more essential in dealing with those whom we think beneath us and whom we wish to help than in any other possible relation of life. Without it that confidence can never be gained without which there is no uplifting. And surely, if we are justified in believing that there is something of mental and moral unsoundness in the condition of those who are content to remain without effort in the slums, toward them most of all we are bound to show courtesy and consideration. Who would be boisterous or intrusive in the sickroom, even if he disapproved of the physician, or who would think that he could help the weak by showing open contempt for their opinions?

If these considerations seem to make the path of philanthropy difficult, at least the difficulties are those inherent in the work and if recognized they may be overcome. And in their overcoming, through knowledge and through love, there is prevention of wasted energy and extinction of hate and efficiency of effort—the divine economy of perfect work among the helpless of which our Lord himself is the great example.

THE OLD COVENANT AND THE NEW.

The old covenant between the Almighty and his earthly people was adapted to the childhood of Israel. It was a statement of their obligations in detail, accompanied by specific promises on God's part. They were to abstain from certain sins and to fulfill certain righteous practices in token of their desire for divine protection and blessing, and God was to guide, keep and prosper them in reward of their obedience. It is not to be supposed that the covenant had to them merely the appearance of a bargain, or that there were not among them many who appreciated its inward and spiritual significance. Yet characteristically it was a compact somewhat carefully particularized, and thus well suited to the undeveloped mental and spiritual condition of the children of Israel.

The new covenant, instituted by Jesus Christ, recognizes the possibility of better things. It pays small heed to details and emphasizes a few great underlying principles. It treats men as no longer immature children, needing minute directions, but as having attained to some power of self-control, of judgment, and of manly loyalty to truth. It puts force chiefly on the inward spirit rather than the outward conduct. It teaches us to learn even from our failures. It thus promotes a broader, deeper, more intelligent and more useful type of piety. Identifying us with Jesus as our personal Saviour, it inspires us, by the thought of his loving, redeeming sacrifice for each of us, to strive not for a painful and, in a sense, even a petty correctness of conduct, but for a large, free, noble consecration of convictions and motives. This attained, the atmosphere of our lives, as well as most of their particular actions, may be trusted to be righteous.

Into the new covenant we enter only through Jesus Christ. It is a covenant unspeakably solemn, because sealed in his blood, and infinitely precious, because it is the proof and manifestation of his love. It is equally binding with the former covenant. Indeed, upon every generous heart it is far more binding. It confides in us. It puts us upon honor. It appeals to all which is purest and noblest in us. It is worthy of him who has made it with us. And it never will be supplanted by another because it embodies eternal principles.

CURRENT HISTORY.

The National Legislature.

The popular branch, that which more directly represents the will of the people up to date, first in the committee of the whole and then by a formal vote in the House of Representatives, by a vote of 90 for to 215 against the Senate's free coinage of silver substitute for the House revenue bill, has given a severe blow to the free silver crusade and revealed the gratifying fact that the people have no use for any such financial legislation. Four of the free silver Republican senators from the West, uniting with the Democrats, have refused to take up the House Revenue Bill for discussion. Apparently Congress will adjourn without any substantial change either in our fiscal or revenue policy. Meanwhile public sentiment hostile to the Senate increases and finds expression in and out of Congress. Congressman McCall of Massachusetts last week spoke out most plainly on this aspect of our public life, saying boldly that a time has come to agitate for a change in the character of the Senate and that the problem is one demanding the most heroic and urgent treatment. Senators Lodge and Wolcott have stood by the Civil Service Commission and defended it—and the cause for which it stands—from aspersions. The House committee charged with the responsibility of admitting new States very wisely has decided to report unfavorably on Arizona's admission, and it is to be hoped that it will show like discretion in dealing with New Mexico.

Lincoln's Birthday.

In four States of the Union the 12th, Lincoln's birthday, was observed as a legal holiday, and everywhere throughout the nation men, if they did nothing else, gathered in the evening and paid tribute to the "saviour of his country." Contrast the case of Lincoln with that of Manning, the Anglican ecclesiastic and Roman cardinal, whose recent biographer, just because he has dared to tell the truth about him, is being castigated by those who wished no illusion dispelled, who preferred to have posterity deem Manning to have been what he should have been rather than what he was. Lincoln, on the other hand, the more his career is studied, the greater the accumulation of anecdote concerning him or the more relentless the search for spoken word and written document, the nobler, the gentler, the more masterful, patient and wise he is found to have been. Of the many speeches made last week in Lincoln's honor it is difficult to name the one most worthy of perusal and preservation. Gen. O. O. Howard, in an address given at Burlington, Vt., contributed valuable reminiscences. Mr. Chauncey Depew in New York said in his felicitous way much that was true. Mr. McKinley in Chicago rose to a high level. As dramatic and significant as any of the utterances were those given by Southerners, the old Confederate general, J. A. Walker of Virginia, now a Republican congressman from the Old Dominion, stirring Bostonians with his tribute of tardy but hearty admiration for "Honest Abe," and Booker T. Washington, born in slavery and now the foremost Negro of the nation, calling forth the enthusiastic applause of the best citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y., by his uncommon gifts as a speaker and apparent wisdom as a leader. Considered separately or together, as utterances of typical men of the New South, the sentiments of these men probably would have made Lincoln's heart gladder than any other words spoken last week could he have heard them. They tell of an era of toleration and better understanding that is dawning, of a reconstruction period in which ballots and bank accounts are to be more potent than bayonets and bludgeons.

Roentgen's X Rays.

American experimenters with the new discovery are finding out that Professor Roentgen knows more about the X rays than they do. None of them as yet have been able to secure such clear-cut records of the action of the rays—call them shadowgraphs or what you will—as he has furnished with his communications on the subject to his fellow-European scientists, and just at present most of the American investigators are bending their energies toward attaining similar perfection, so that during the past week there have not been as many interesting developments as we were able to record of the week before. Professor Trowbridge of Harvard has perfected a device for aiding surgeons in locating exactly the depth of penetration of a bullet after the X rays, acting upon a sensitive plate, have revealed the relative position of the bullet or opaque foreign substance. Mr. Edison, in experimenting with metals, testing their suitability for apparatus which he is contriving to aid him in further investigation is said to have stumbled upon the fact that the action of the rays upon aluminum is such as to give it a temper equal to that of steel. At the great Carnegie armor producing plant in Pennsylvania they are preparing to test thoroughly the value of the new method of revealing the structural quality of armor—its degree of perfection or imperfection.

Has the North Pole Been Discovered?

In July, 1893, Dr. F. Nansen set sail from Norway for the North Pole in a vessel which in English would be called The Forward, a vessel specially built and equipped by the Norwegian Government and as well fitted for its prospective service as any ever constructed. Dr. Nansen's theory was that if driftwood from Siberia found its way in open water across the polar region to Greenland, then a vessel could, and with this theory as a working principle he sailed away, entered the Kara Sea, skirted the Siberian coast to the New Siberian Islands, and was last seen on Aug. 3, 1893, at Chaborowa, on the Strait of Jugor, Siberia. Dr. Nansen's record as an Arctic explorer before this venture had been such as to warrant the faith in him shown by the Norwegian Government and the Royal Geographical Society of England in advancing funds and his theory had the merit of plausibility and originality, so that it was not entirely surprising to have the report come last week from Irkutsk, Siberia, that a Siberian trader had brought the news from the mouth of the Lena that Nansen has found the North Pole and land as well. Later in the week a similar report came from the British consul at Archangel, but whether based on more reliable data or to be attributed to the story from the same trader cannot be determined now. The leading authorities in Great Britain and the better known of the Arctic explorers in this country, including Borchgrevink, a friend of Nansen and famous as the investigator of Antarctic regions, who is in this country lecturing now, do not credit the reports.

Great Britain and the United States.

The formal announcement of the queen's speech said:

> The Government of the United States of America have expressed a wish to co-operate in the termination of the differences which have existed for many years between my Government and the republic of Venezuela upon the question of the boundary between that country and the colony of British Guiana. I have expressed my sympathy with the desire to come to an equitable arrangement and trust that further negotiations will lead to a satisfactory settlement.

This, while not especially informing, was valuable as revealing, perhaps, the spirit of the queen, who still shapes foreign policy in times of special stress. But would Lord Salisbury and Mr. Balfour, under fire of the Liberals in Parliament, show the same conciliatory spirit and give information confirming the hope of the best people of Great Britain, irrespective of party, that the quarrel was to end? That was the question to which Lord Salisbury made answer thus:

> Considering the position of Venezuela in the Caribbean Sea, it was no more unnatural that the United States should take an interest in it than that we should feel an interest in Holland and Belgium and, from that point of view, I trust the negotiations will continue.
> I have had an increasing belief during the past few weeks that we shall, perhaps not till after long negotiations, find some satisfactory settlement and all danger or rupture of relations between the two nations be entirely removed. At the same time I do not wish the House to think that we have arrived at any agreement. I think we are rightly relying upon the question of arbitration. America attaches more unrestricted value to that mode of adjusting controversies than has hitherto been done here, but I believe that means may be found by a combination of negotiations with arbitration to bring the matters, which are not difficult, to a settlement.

And Mr. Balfour thus:

> There has never been the slightest intention on the part of this country to violate the substance or essence of the Monroe Doctrine. . . . I should rejoice if out of this evil should spring some general system of arbitration. If that were the issue I should feel that all misunderstandings and evils done had been more than removed and that a permanent guaranty of good will between the English-speaking nations on the two sides of the Atlantic had been attained for all time.

Supplemented by the information that Great Britain had gladly consented to give the Venezuelan Commission an advance copy of the document which Sir Frederick Pollock has been preparing for Parliament as the British case in the controversy with Venezuela, these statements of the responsible leaders of the ministry went far toward assuring the friends of peace and civilization that all would be well in time. Nor should the splendid speeches of the Liberal leaders, Vernon Harcourt and Lord Rosebery, be overlooked or underestimated, the speech of the former being exceptionally unequivocal in its adherence to the ideal of a perpetual peace between the two great English speaking peoples, and most frank in its recognition of the reasonableness of the Monroe Doctrine and our policy throughout the affair. It is thought now that Great Britain is about to receive from Venezuela advances which will restore diplomatic intercourse and in due time a thorough understanding.

Great Britain and the Transvaal.

It is difficult to write with confidence concerning the exact attitude of Mr. Chamberlain toward the Transvaal republic, the British South African Company and the future of British authority and territory in South Africa. His latest utterances would seem to indicate that he has accepted Cecil Rhodes's interpretation of events and his policy, and is determined to compel the Transvaal to grant the reforms demanded by the Uitlanders, to overlook the gross outrage of Dr. Jameson's act, and is prepared to proceed by force if necessary to annex the Transvaal to the territory already British. The highly moral tone of a fortnight ago, when he reprobated Jameson's raid and brought the South African Company officials up with a round turn, has changed to one of stern condemnation of President Kruger and the Boers for their refusal to grant reforms, while his dispatch to Sir Hercules Robinson announcing the British policy was so impolitic and so threatening that President Kruger naturally protested both at its content and spirit. Hence it is by no means certain now that President Kruger will visit Great Britain, and the situation in South Africa is more strained than at any time since Jameson's defeat. A statement of a responsible German cabinet official last week indicates that Germany persists in the intention to shape, when she can, the foreign policy of the Transvaal. President Kruger reasserts his intention to enact or withhold domestic legislation independently of any pressure from without, and Mr. Chamberlain reasserts Great Britain's unwillingness to permit any other European Power to interfere in the Transvaal's affairs. Whether the Liberals and their Unionist allies in the British Parliament can force the ministry to thoroughly probe the Jameson raid and the British South African Company's affairs to the bottom remains to be seen, but that is their plan now and dramatic scenes are ahead.

The Situation in Armenia.

The work of forced proselyting goes on apace. The letters from the missionaries that are coming in now are as full of discouragement as any ever received. There are great areas of despoiled territory where not the slightest work of relief has followed the massacres. Cholera has made its appearance, as was to be expected where poverty reigns and multitudes of men are herded together without shelter and the necessities of decent living. Rev. George Knapp of Bitlis has been granted an escort to Constantinople, there to be tried by the United States minister, charged with sedition by Turkey. There is no probability of his guilt, but once in Constantinople, away from his friends and those who could substantiate his denials of the charges against him, the trial will drag on its weary length; in time it will be dropped by Turkey if he will consent to be cut off from his field of work, and the first victim of the new Russo-Turkish policy will have fallen. If successful in this case charges will be trumped up against other missionaries and the work of undermining and destroying the work of American missionaries and citizens will go on unless our Department of State is made to feel that it must act more resolutely. We have Russia to parry and thrust with now. She has no desire to see Armenia become another Bulgaria. She wishes no flourishing colleges or Protestant churches in the domain that sooner or later she intends to seize. The British blue-book, published last week, shows that from the first Russia has withstood any concerted action in Turkey. She tolerated if she did not incite the Armenian massacres. Great Britain has not dared to protest effectually, although under obligations to do so, Lord Salisbury to the contrary notwithstanding. Lord Rosebery, in his speech at the opening of the British Parliament, challenged Lord Salisbury's interpretation of the Berlin Treaty, and Mr. Gladstone is said to be so indignant at the betrayal of Armenia by Great Britain that he is tempted to re-enter Parliament and stand forth as the champion of wronged humanity. He also deprecates the signs of forthcoming British bad faith with the Boers, and he may become so aroused as to defy fate, sally forth as the rebuker of national sins, and give to the world one of the sublimest spectacles ever witnessed of a king of men setting forth in his old age to succor the weak and recall a nation to paths of honor and unhesitating action.

Russia Versus Japan in Korea.

Marquis Ito, premier of Japan, was recently asked in Parliament whether the government was determined to adhere to its policy of maintaining Korean independence in defiance of all difficulties and of the possible influence of any Power or Powers. He replied that there were limits beyond which it might be unwise for Japan to go; that it was absolutely necessary to shape the empire's policy in accordance with current events. Marquis Ito since then has had to face some new developments the news of which has just come to us, and it will be interesting to see whether Japan considers it wise to defy Russia now or submit a while longer until better equipped for the inevitable contest.

The revolution of October, in which the queen of Korea was assassinated, was decidedly favorable to the Japanese interests, but Russian plotting and subsequent events have quite prepared the world for the latest news telling of a recent counter revolution, the murder of the prime minister, the flight of the king to the Russian legation, the calling of a conference of diplomats at the Russian legation to consider the situation, and the dispatching of British, French and American marines from Yokohama. While Japanese statesmen have been wrangling in Parliament over the disposition of the Chinese indemnity, Russia has been doing that which makes it imperative for Japan to act decisively if she has ambitions other than insular.

NOTES.

President Cleveland will arbitrate between Brazil and Italy, and Great Britain has consented to submit the question of the ownership of the island of Trinidad to arbitrators to be selected by herself and Brazil. The dove of peace finds land here and there whereon to rest its feet.

The new United States ambassador to Germany, Mr. Edward F. Uhl of Michigan, goes from the Department of State to serve as a diplomat at a foreign court equipped with a technical knowledge which we hope will prove so useful that his case will establish a precedent. Credit also should be given to Secretary Olney and President Cleveland for their recognition of personal worth and the principles of Civil Service reform by the appointments and promotions in the Department of State that followed naturally after Mr. Uhl's elevation.

Our Department of State has been convinced that Mr. Waller, formerly United States consul in Madagascar, was justly arrested, tried and sentenced by French officials there for giving to the Hovas valuable information concerning the French military plans. France has courteously consented to release Mr. Waller from longer imprisonment, and he has been advised by the Department of State to accept such commutation of sentence and cease pressing any claims for damages.

IN BRIEF.

The graphic character sketch of The Armenian Patriarch in this issue gives deserved prominence to one whose character and influence are little understood.

Witticisms respecting the new process of photography abound. "No British vestryman will be safe," says the London Chronicle, "for the X rays penetrate wood."

The Western Reserve University receives $50,000 for its college for women from Mr. S. V. Harkness of New York. The gift is for the establishment of a chair of Biblical Literature. Large gifts for the endowment of colleges for women are rare as yet, but such examples as this ought to stimulate larger giving for a work whose importance is secondary to none.

There will be a sizable vacancy in Boston and vicinity if Mr. Beach accepts his flattering call to Minneapolis. Twelve years of unflagging labor have made him seemingly indispensable to many lives and many good causes. This is the second time that the Plymouth Church has looked to Cambridge for leadership, and were it not for our high regard for its people and our desire for its best welfare we should not even try to exhibit a meek and forgiving spirit.

Queen Victoria's opinion is evidently still decisive in many points of English social life, as is shown by paragraphs which are going the rounds of the papers to the effect that the principal reason why Sir John Millais is not chosen as president of the Royal Academy in what would seem the natural succession to Lord Leighton is that he long ago married the divorced wife of John Ruskin. It is well, in view of other influences, that there is a rallying point for this feeling left in England.

An opera entitled The Scarlet Letter, based on Hawthorne's great work of fiction, written by George Parson Lathrop and set to music by Walter Damrosch, was rendered for the first time anywhere in Boston, Feb. 10. A full dress rehearsal was given Sunday morning, Feb. 9, at which we are told "the leaders in the musical, literary and society circles of the city" were present. This is a straw which shows how the tide is running, and it is, we grieve to say, not running the right way.

It is no doubt a tribute to the character of our Lord that so many of the heroes of the hour are compared to him by their partisans, but it is certainly in the worst possible taste. A well-known Western politician, after Senator Tillman's disgraceful speech in the Senate, wrote to him: "Keep your whip in your hand. It is the same one twice used in the temple scene in Jerusalem." We wonder that the dullest mind does not see far enough to avoid such an emphasis of contrast in speaking of his friend.

A new Episcopal paper is to be started in Boston next month, to be called The Church. Episcopalians will then be able to choose for their denominational paper either The Church, The Living Church, The Churchman or The Church Standard. That word "church" the Episcopalian dearly loves and would fain persuade himself that he monopolizes. For all that, Congregationalists, Presbyterians, Methodists and other bodies of believers in Christ would extend to him the hand of Christian fellowship if he would accept it.

"It is the dead, emotionless, frozen, pitiless hate of the Puritan the Negro encounters in Boston," says the Memphis Commercial Appeal. The actual facts are bad enough, we confess, but why drag the Puritan forth from his grave? He was quite as respectable, quite as Christlike, quite as deserving of respect as the Cavaliers who settled Virginia and the South, as Mr. Lowell demonstrated in one of the Bigelow Papers. The Boston of today is Irish, German, French, Italian, Russian, Armenian, as well as English, and the sins of the children are those of will and environment as well of heredity.

The Presbytery of Brooklyn has formally dissolved "The Tabernacle," as Dr. Talmage's church used to be called. For years it stood at the head of the list of Presbyterian churches in numbers, with a membership of more than 3,000. Like Jonah's gourd it disappeared in a night after Dr. Talmage left it. The presbytery could not have any real funeral for it, for, like the Colorado man who was kicked by a mule, there were no remains. Dr. Talmage, who for twenty-five years preached brilliantly a genuine gospel in Brooklyn, has sowed beside all waters and done good service of its kind, but church building is not his forte.

Rev. Wolcott Calkins, D. D.'s, retirement from the pastorate has not meant departure from the sphere of pulpit and platform influence. He is in frequent demand as a supply in leading churches, and of late he has shown a peculiar fitness for conducting evangelistic services in colleges. From Ann Arbor comes an enthusiastic report of his recent ten days' work at the University of Michigan under the auspices of the Students' Christian Association. His scholarly, tactful and forcible presentation of Christianity reached the heart of both the thoughtful and the thoughtless element in the student community, and the seed sown is bearing gratifying fruit. Dr. Calkins has also spoken recently at Cornell. Our colleges need just such arousement as he and Mr. Sayford give.

While the most sanguine hopes of its projectors have not been altogether realized in the responses to the Pastors' Fund started several weeks ago for the relief of the American Board treasury, there is a gratifying measure of interest in it as shown by the number of names already printed as contributors to this special movement. The sums already received amount to $2,000 or more, and while the earlier subscriptions were $50 each this standard is by no means a fixed one and offerings as small as five or ten dollars are gratefully received. Thus far, in comparison with the number of resident clergymen, Rhode Island is the banner State. Local committees in New York and Chicago are pushing forward the undertaking, which had its inception in the Boston Ministers' Meeting.

Seldom has an article reprinted from our columns been so widely and warmly welcomed as Mrs. C. L. Goodell's A Month with Jesus, which an admiring reader of it, herself an invalid, an entire stranger to Mrs. Goodell, has published in leaflet form. Many persons in different parts of the country, learning through The Congregationalist that copies could be obtained from her, have already availed themselves of her generosity, and the letters which every mail is bringing to her indicate how responsive earnest Christians in all walks of life are to that which brings them nearer to Christ. The edition has already reached 5,000, and we are glad to suggest again that any one desiring copies of this leaflet which is being so abundantly blessed of God send a two-cent stamp to Mrs. S. M. Scott-Slauson, Piqua, O.

A letter from Portland, Me., to a New York journal states as a fact, which, if true, is creditable alike to the church and Mr. Reed, that years ago the people of the State Street Congregational Church in that city discovered the potentialities existing in a youth named Thomas B. Reed, and furnished him with the funds necessary to pay his way through Bowdoin College, the understanding being that he would enter the Congregational ministry. But, failing to receive the "call" from on high, Mr. Reed chose another profession, and, desiring to have the approval of his own conscience, he in due time repaid to the State Street Church, with funds earned in teaching school, all that its generous members had advanced for his education. This story, even were it not true, would be worth telling for the moral it points. In former days churches were wont to select worthy youths, educate them and watch over their future careers with solicitude and pride. Sometimes, but not usually, men, who owed their education to assistance given as the State Street Church is said to have given its aid, did not show the same sense of honor with which Mr. Reed is credited.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM NEW YORK.

Our Politics.

Our politics are in a bad way. With an eye to nominations for the next presidency active men of both parties have been sturdily working for "harmony." But it wouldn't come. On the contrary, quite the reverse. All because of the "bosses" on both sides. The Republican boss and his "machine," in collusion with Tammany, have been found to have stuffed the rolls of nominally Republican voters with names, not only of the enemy but of non-residents and even of the dead. The Grecian horse once in the city, his living contents were to be used—and the bogus names fraudulently voted on—for the boss's personal ends at election time. The exposure so roused the righteous wrath of honest men that a revolt from the machine, the greatest in numbers and weightiest in character ever known here, seems inevitable. A general committee, that was to be of 500 but already numbers more than 800, is openly organizing the rebellion.

Meanwhile Tammany, elate with premature joy at the sure prospect of a victory to be gained over a divided foe, and that in its own loved way, by fraud, prepared a royal feast, at forty dollars the plate, in honor of King Croker. To him was to be given—presumably at his own expense—a "loving cup," costing $2,000, as a pledge of his subjects' loyalty and closest harmony. But, alas for the best laid schemes of mice and men! Into the midst of the feast, and in face of the loving cup itself, stalked the demon of discord. Verbal revolvers, daggers and bowie knives gleamed in the whisky-scented air, and the end is not yet.

Lincoln's Birthday.

Contrasting with such a debasing state of things, how timely come the associations of Lincoln's birthday. The stars and stripes were liberally displayed; schools, courts, public offices, banks, etc., were closed; military and civic societies and clubs met and heard addresses commemorative of the martyred hero—notably the Republican Club, with Depew, Foraker, Seth Low, Mr. Hirsch of Chicago and Rev. W. E. Park of Gloversville as speakers. Gen. Wager Swayne gave reminiscences of Lincoln before the Quill Club. The colored people met in Cooper Union and heard Booker Washington, Professor Greener and R. M. Pattersen. The Union League Club, Brooklyn, listened to Governors Greenhalge of Massachusetts and Lippitt of Rhode Island, Judge Howland, Rev. H. M. Gallaher and Mr. Washington. John H. Littlefield, an intimate associate of Lincoln, gave reminiscences before the Pratt Institute. Editor McKelway spoke at the "camp-fire" of the Fifty-sixth Regiment. Col. C. B. Morton addressed the Brooklyn Unity Club. Jersey City, Newark, Plainfield, Rutherford and other New Jersey cities loyally observed the day.

But it needs no set speeches—awakened memory is enough—to call up before any one who was often privileged, in the days that tried men's souls, to see the burdened president, his tall form bowed under the weight of responsibility, his face seamed with anxious care, and those sad, black, weary eyes heavy with sorrow for the dead, with sympathy for the wounded and dying and, as it seemed later, with foresight of his coming martyrdom. No one who ever looked into those eyes can ever forget them. To none who ever heard that great soul utter itself in heart throbs will those ever memorable words at Gettysburg seem other than natural and spontaneous. Nothing less than annihilation could ever blot from memory the voice and features of Lincoln—the man raised up of God for his country's salvation.

The Broadway Tabernacle's midweek meeting, occurring on the first anniversary of the funeral of Dr. Taylor (Feb. 12), the prayers and addresses naturally took tone from that event. Dr. Stimson and several lay members of the church gave utterance to sentiments appropriate to the occasion, which, though wholly informal, showed the tender and loving place held by that great and good man in the esteem of his successor in the pulpit and in the hearts of the people who for more than a score of years were fed by his ministry. It is comforting to feel that he is not dead; he has only changed his place.

O, the loved, the unforgotten,
From our hearts they perish not.

Things in Brooklyn.

It has been a busy time in the more advanced schools, with the half-yearly examinations, promotions, prizes, diplomas, special lectures and entertainments. This class of schools, kept independent of politics, give high-toned Brooklynites just occasion for pride and to their children opportunities for culture seldom equaled.

In one of the public schools there was a contest for offered prizes between twelve girls, who, unassisted, made and submitted specimens of bread, and six who made pound cake. The prize committee "allowed" that the loaves both of bread and cake were almost "as good as mother used to make."

Dr. Lyman Abbott last Sunday solidly discoursed of the Relations of Capital and Labor in the Light of Christ's Law of Service.

The Law Enforcement Society sent a heavy committee to talk to Mayor Wurster about the excise violations, common all over Brooklyn, and why they were allowed —they wanted to know, you know. He is going to see about it.

Dr. M. B. Buell came from Boston last week and set the Methodist Ministers' Meeting all in a roar with his witty and sarcastic setting forth of the way in which sundry of his brethren deal with "the higher critics" and their work. He intimated that too many in their assaults upon the adversary fare much as he did, when younger, in a woodchuck hunt—the result of which was that he stoned his faithful canine to death, but let the woodchuck triumph.

Some of Brooklyn's "very best" are vigorously moving for a great free library to equal, if not surpass, the coming combination (Astor, Lenox and Tilden) on this side. Their success is only a question of time.

"Father Halidey" has been employing his leisure, in conjunction with Dr. D. S. Gregory, in compiling a book on revivals, which they call The Church in America and Its Baptisms of Fire. Its 750 pages are filled with a vast mass of facts concerning revivals in America from the earliest times to the present.

And on This Side.

The entire corps of our scientists, specially the electrical experts and photographers, are absorbed day and night in experiments in connection with the new "Roentgen X rays." Met in the street they appear to be well-nigh beside themselves, their bulging eyes seem trying to look through iron with a startled expectation that something wonderful will turn up shortly. And nearly every morning the papers show that in one direction or another the expection has been realized. Nobody dares guess what will come next.

The Provident Loan Society reports a year of altogether satisfactory prosperity. It has loaned $600,000 and earned more than six per cent. over all expenses and losses. It is to establish one branch directly and no doubt many more will follow, until a deathblow is given to the thieves' dens called pawn shops.

All attempts to keep Commander and Mrs. Ballington Booth on this side of the Atlantic prove to be futile, as was to have been anticipated, though greatly to the disappointment of the army's outside friends. These feel that no other pair can possibly do the work this couple have done and are doing. But so long as this work is carried on by an army, and not by a church, military command and implicit obedience are inevitable. The exigency has naturally raised in some minds the question whether, after all, the general's invention is really an improvement on the Saviour's institution.

HUNTINGTON.

FROM THE INTERIOR.

An Interesting Sunday.

Sunday morning Professor King of Oberlin, present in the city to attend the meeting of the Oberlin graduates, preached a very suggestive sermon on the personal Christ to Dr. Noble's congregation. In the evening the Sunday school had a service at which all the living superintendents of the school save one were present. Three of them are physicians, Hollister, Haskell and Lyman, and eminent in their profession. Professor Rockwood, now in service, is a teacher in the High School. Of the others Saw, Dorr and Tewksbury are business men. One only, and he one of the most efficient, now in service in the South Church Sunday school, is a lawyer and at the same time president of the Metropolitan Elevated Railroad. None of these busy men have declined to preside over the interests of a school enrolling at least 1,000 pupils because they needed Sunday as a day of rest. While members of the school had part in the service, and each superintendent spoke briefly, Mr. Jenkins made the principal address of the evening and was listened to with great pleasure by old neighbors and friends who have not yet ceased to mourn that he has removed from them to the South Side.

Sunday evening Dr. Hillis of the Central Church arranged a farewell service for Dr. J. H. Barrows, who preaches for the last time in his own pulpit next Sunday morning, and who, as he himself has said, has been saying farewell in various places for the last six or seven weeks. In the afternoon he gave the sixth and closing Haskell lecture on Comparative Religions at the university, every seat in Central Music Hall being taken and hundreds were turned away. Drs. Hillis and Gunsaulus presided jointly. Both made appreciative but not fulsome addresses. Other speakers were Dr. F. M. Bristol, who spoke for the Methodists, Professor Henderson of the university, Dr. Delano, a Baptist, W. J. Onahan, Esq., who as a Roman Catholic expressed his respect and admiration for Dr. Barrows, Mr. Higinbotham, the president of the World's Fair organization, Dr. T. C. Hall of the Fourth Presbyterian Church, and Bishop Fallows, Reformed Episcopalian, a fellow-trustee of the United Society of Christian Endeavor.

Dr. Barrows was peculiarly happy in his response. As all who had preceded him had expressed the hope that he would return to us in a few months, it was gratifying to hear from his own lips that nothing would give him greater happiness than the privilege of continuing to reside in this city. The meeting was a rare testimony to a man who has deserved well of the city, who has spent his time and strength freely for whatever would further its interests or those of mankind. Naturally references to his service for the Parliament of Religions were prominent in all that was said. It is for his work here that much of his reputation is due. Yet this is the least of the services which for fourteen years he has rendered the city and the State. It is as a faithful minister of a great church, as the founder of mission schools and churches, as a leader and helper in the benevolent enterprises of his denomination, in whatever would elevate morals or contribute to the prosperity and good name of the city that Dr. Barrows deserves most honor. For this more quiet work those who know him best honor him most. But all alike rejoice that he is to have the privilege, after a needed rest in Germany and a period of special study, of presenting the gospel to thousands of cultured people in India. We believe that out of this mission may come a new departure in the method of missions, that both those who serve the Master abroad and those that serve him at home will feel themselves drawn more closely together.

Woman's Day in Chicago.

This same Sunday might be so termed with great fitness. Mrs. Ormiston Chant was with us, and with her usual fire and eloquence addressed three congregations. In the morning Centenary Methodist Church, West Side, was filled to overflowing with an audience ready to receive every word she might utter. In the afternoon she was equally warmly welcomed at Unity Church (Unitarian), North Side, and in the evening at St. Paul's Church (Universalist), South Side. Her addresses were thoroughly Christian. She exhibited in them all her sympathy with America and her appreciation of its best characteristics, but she did not close her eyes to the dangers from which we are suffering.

She recognizes the sociability of American homes, the comfort which they furnish their inmates, the fineness of their architecture as compared with English homes of the same grade, the facilities which we enjoy in travel, the energy and value of our churches. But she thinks that the late comers who are so numerous should be required to take back seats in our churches, and be labeled as tardy till they reform. Nor does she believe in the employment of a few persons to do the singing for a great congregation.

We have had another distinguished light among us during the week, Miss A. M. Beecher, a cousin of the famous preacher and, like him, gifted in speech. She addressed a few ladies in Mrs. Armour's parlors. She dwelt on the necessity of a woman's recognizing her sphere as a domestic sphere, but held that in this sphere she is to allow herself neither to be a slave nor a machine nor a pampered idol. As a mother she is to be true to her race in being true to the children God has given her.

By request the subject of the Keeley treatment of inebriates was discussed at the Ministers' Meeting. In order that the facts might be before us Rev. Mr. Wright, pastor at Dwight, where the main institute is situated, was asked to give us his convictions as to the results of this method of dealing with drunkards. Although not unaware of the criticisms which have been made upon it, or of the relapses into old habits which have occurred, his testimony was entirely favorable. That given by Rev. G. H. Bird of South Chicago, who for years has been sending men to Dwight and watching over them on their return, was even more convincing than that of Mr. Wright. A good many of the brethren, in spite of these testimonies, felt that Dr. Keeley ought not to use his methods for private advantage, that he should make his remedies known to the public, that he should place more emphasis on the moral element in the cure and less on the so-called medicinal. Others thought that the inebriate should be at once brought to Christ. The general feeling was that the Keeley cure is valuable and that, while its use is to be commended, we ought not to neglect the opportunity which is afforded us, after the cure has taken place, to bring its subject to Christ.

Lincoln's Birthday.

Feb. 12 was observed with increasing enthusiasm in Chicago. The chief attraction of the anniversary was the address by ex Governor McKinley of Ohio. It was worthy the man who delivered it and the hero whose virtues it commemorated. The Lincoln Council, a good many lodges and not a few societies celebrated the day both in speech and song. In many of the schools pains were taken to inform the pupils something about the man whose name we in Illinois specially honor.

The Armenian Patriarch.

By an American Resident in Constantinople.

There is one man in Constantinople, not often mentioned in the public press, who is playing a mighty part in the life and death struggle between the Armenians and the Porte — Mattheos Ismirlian, patriarch of all Armenians in Turkey. If one crosses the Golden Horn into old Stamboul, and, passing through the ancient Hippodrome, descends towards the Marmora, he will find himself in the quarter known as Kum-Kapu and in the immediate vicinity of the Armenian patriarchate. The building is old and has nothing impressive in its outward appearance. If a visitor be provided with proper letters of introduction, he will be conducted with little formality into the presence of a man a trifle above medium hight, thin, of dark complexion and clothed in the usual black gown. The face is strong, resolute, not handsome, scarcely sympathetic. It is an Armenian face with large features, the lower part massive, the nose large. A flowing beard, now turning gray, falls over the chest and nearly conceals the outline of the mouth. The lips are full, but not sensual, and close firmly together, indicating well the resolute character of the man. The eyes are large, dark, heavily lidded and are arched over by heavy brows. The countenance altogether conveys the impression of melancholy and force.

The Armenian people are happy—if indeed the term happy can be applied in any restricted sense to this unfortunate race—that the mantle of authority in this critical hour rests upon the shoulders of this man. Tennyson prayed:

Ah, God, for a man with heart, head, hand,
Like some of the simple great ones gone
Forever and ever by,
One still, strong man in a blatant land,
Whatever they call him, what care I?
Aristocrat, democrat, autocrat—one
Who can rule and dare not lie.

In Mattheos Ismirlian Tennyson's prayer has been granted word for word. If the present conflict results in the enfranchisement of the Armenians from the rule of their oppressors, Patriarch Mattheos will be recognized and remembered among the saviours of his people; if it fails, he will go down with his nation, sacrificed either to the revenge of the Turks or to the malice of disappointed revolutionists.

Mattheos Ismirlian is still a young man. He was born in 1845 in Kum-Kapu, the Armenian quarter of Constantinople, and there in the patriarch's church he was christened with the name of Simeon. He is of humble family, as is true of all the Armenian clergy. His grandfather was a tailor from Smyrna, and the name Ismirlian, or "the man from Smyrna," was assumed when the family came to Constantinople. Simeon's boyhood was passed in Kum-Kapu in attendance on the Armenian grammar schools. From early youth the religious temper of his mind was apparent, and when he was nineteen years old he was made deacon of the Armenian church in the little village of Ortakeuy on the Bosporus.

The Armenian, like the Greek, clergy is divided into two classes—the parish priests, who are married and can never rise above this position, and the celibate clergy, to whom the highest offices in the church are open. To a young man entering the church the alternative always presents itself—married life with the career of parish priest, or celibacy with the possibility of promotion. With young Ismirlian there was no hesitation. He entered the celibate clergy in 1869; when twenty-four years of age he was ordained as arch-priest and received the name of Mattheos. The next five years were busy but not especially eventful. He was elected successively secretary to the patriarch, member of the assembly and member of the synod. During these years no man in Constantinople was so indefatigable as preacher and teacher; no amount of official work was allowed to interfere with what he has always held to be the two prime duties of the servant of the church — preaching and teaching. His preaching, as well as his public speaking, was remarkable for its simplicity, directness and intensity. No man who ever heard an address from his lips doubted the depth of conviction that lay behind every word. Naturally this kind of preaching, unfortunately far removed from what the people are wont to hear, produced a profound impression, and the preacher's reputation grew rapidly. At the same time he was becoming recognized at the patriarchate as a man of unusual soundness of judgment and purity of motive.

MATTHEOS ISMIRLIAN.
The Armenian Patriarch.

The reward of his services came in 1876, when he was ordained as bishop by the Catholicos George IV., at Etchmiadzin. From that time his promotion from one position of authority to another was rapid. In 1886 he was made leader or director of the parish of Egypt, under the authority of the patriarch of Constantinople. The improvements that he instituted were numerous; the parish was cleared of debt, the churches and official buildings were refurnished and repaired and assemblies were organized. The efficiency of his service in that country brought him the decoration of a golden cross from King Menelik of Abyssinia and the second class of the Medjidieh from the sultan; and, what was much more cherished, the devotion of all the Armenians of Egypt. Failing health finally compelled him in 1891 to return to Constantinople. The following year brought Ismirlian a remarkable proof of the love of the nation. The death of the catholicos of Etchmiadzin necessitated a new election by the national assembly. Naturally the office of catholicos, the highest in the gift of the Armenian church, is coveted by all men of ability, and the candidates who flatter themselves with hopes of election strain every nerve to secure the prize. Bishop Mattheos, though prominent in all the councils of the church, refused to make any effort to secure his election, and even declined to declare himself a candidate. Nevertheless, on the first vote of the assembly, he was among the four receiving the greatest number of votes, and, on a subsequent ballot, his name was one of two sent to the tsar for appointment to the office of catholicos, for, by the constitution, the final appointment is made by the czar from two names sent to him by the assembly.

Although Ismirlian's name was rejected by the czar, it was felt from that time that he would be the next patriarch. The sentiment was justified when the great political and religious assembly of the Armenian people was summoned to meet in Constantinople in December, 1894, for the election of a new patriarch. From the first there was but one voice among the delegates. The question of intense interest was, "Will the sultan confirm the election of a man of such known resoluteness and patriotism?" Great was the exultation among the deputies of the assembly when it was signified from the palace that the choice of Bishop Mattheos Ismirlian would be approved. Accordingly, in December, 1894, the election was completed and was immediately confirmed by the sultan.

Since that time Patriarch Mattheos has been in a very real sense the champion of his people, bearing their griefs and carrying their sorrows as few have done even in an office that has been filled by men of conspicuous consecration. If the hearts of all Christendom have been stirred by the stories of suffering that have come from Armenia, how much more have these stories wrung the heart of a man who feels that he has been called to be the leader and the father of this people! By every legal means in his power he has fought for the deliverance of his nation, despising death and the threats of imprisonment. About a month after his installation as patriarch he sent to Riza Pasha, the minister of justice, a letter requesting power to appoint new bishops in those places where, as in Moosh, the bishops had been in prison for periods of from one to three years. The minister immediately dispatched a note in reply, saying that the statements about Moosh were false and demanding their withdrawal. The patriarch replied, "The statements are true and the truth I cannot withhold." The minister made no further reply; he had found a man who could not be bullied.

The government of the sultan naturally regards the patriarch as its arch-enemy. The Turks demand a man who shall be subservient to them. They have found in Mattheos Ismirlian a man of indomitable courage who cannot be bribed, flattered or deceived. His first audience with the sultan, on Jan. 11, filled Constantinople with amazement. Instead of offering to his Majesty the usual honeyed flattery of the Eastern court, this plain priest of a conquered people stood before the ruler, thanked him for the confirmation of his election and then said: "As far as my conscience permits me I will obey you, but at the same time I must look to the welfare of my people." Not a word of hypocrisy, not a syllable of flattery, not an intimation of prayers for the life and health of the sovereign! The sultan in a rage ordered him to be sent away and omitted the customary decoration.

One other communication between these two men is worth recording. About one month after the last interview the sultan again sent for the patriarch and offered him, as a decoration, the first class of the Osmaniyeh, the highest decoration that can be given to a civilian subject of the empire. "Your Majesty," was the reply, "what have I to do with such things? I am a simple priest. I live on bread and olives, as do my people. I have no place in my house for such gorgeous things. I pray you do not ask me to accept it." And so the royal bribe was rejected.

Personal courage, rising from a deep conviction of duty to his office, is a notable characteristic. In a city where no freedom of speech exists, he has made remarks in public that would have caused his death or removal at any other time. At the installation service in the great church, in the presence of his people, he mounted the pulpit, holding in his hand the constitution granted by Abdul-Aziz. Turning to the people, he said: "Before God, and in presence of this meeting, I swear to remain faithful to my government and my nation, and to watch over the just and explicit fulfillment of this constitution. My understanding of the word faithful is this: faithfulness involves, on the side of the government, protection of life and property. Without this 'faithfulness' on the side of the subject is hypocrisy." The boldness of these words becomes apparent when we realize that the word "constitution" is absolutely prohibited in Turkey, and if heard in the mouth of an Armenian means imprisonment and perhaps death; and with the memory of the Sassoun outrages fresh in every mind, his definition of "faithfulness" sounded like high treason.

The difficulties of his position are, it is sad to say, daily growing greater. On the one hand stands the government, seeking by every means to destroy him and his power; on the other stand the Huntschagists, rabid revolutionists, who hope to free Armenia by the knife. The patriarch, yearning with all his soul for the deliverance of his people, nevertheless sees, as every wise man must, the futility of the Huntschagist plans, and refuses to lend an ear to their counsels. Hence they declare that he has betrayed the cause, and they call for his life. Rarely has man been placed in harder position; never, I believe, has he borne his lot with more unflinching heroism, in simple consecration to duty. Every true friend of Armenia prays that this man's life may be spared to see a happier day for his race, and to be the patriarch, the father and ruler of a restored nation.

As a result of reading Mr. Capen's little pamphlet, Denominational Loyalty, a subscriber writes that having just joined a church of another denomination she should be loyal thereto and subscribe for its representative organ. As a warning to others against falling into error, we suggest that they prove loyalty to their denomination by remaining in it, thereby precluding any further mistake.

CERTAIN HISTORIC CREEDS.

II. THE NICENE CREED.

BY PROF. WILLISTON WALKER, D.D.

The Apostles' Creed, in its brief early Roman form, is the oldest of the symbols of Christendom, but it is not so generally accepted as the confession of Nicæa. It has never attained to any such authority in the churches of the Orient as it has enjoyed in the Latin and the Protestant communions. But the Nicene Creed has been reckoned for fifteen hundred years by the Eastern and Western Churches alike as a corner stone of faith, and its authority is scarcely less distinctly asserted by the Anglicans and the Lutherans. By the Roman emperor Justinian it was declared to be as authoritative as the Scriptures themselves, and a similar feeling gives this creed the most exalted place in the ritual of the Greek Church to this day, and led the Roman Catholic Council of Trent to describe it as a foundation against which the gates of hell shall never prevail and in which all Christians necessarily agree.

Yet this widely accepted and profoundly venerated creed acquired its distinctive form in the greatest of early theological contests; unlike the Apostles' Creed it was largely the product of battle, and it bears forever the memorials of the severest doctrinal struggle through which the early church passed—that regarding the relation of our Lord to the divine Father.

Each successive age of the history of the church has some question which seems of primary importance. The Reformation epoch battled over the method of salvation, the nature of Christ's presence in the sacrament, and the exclusive authority of the Scriptures. Our own time does not wholly ignore these problems, but its interest in them is largely historic, since their important results have been incorporated into the life and faith of the church; and it turns its chief attention rather to questions of criticism and inspiration and of the broader application of the gospel to the needs of the world. In the church of the fourth century the focal point of discussion was the person of Christ; and naturally so, for, as the question, "Dost thou believe on the Son of God?" is the fundamental query addressed to men by the gospel, so the answering inquiry, "Who is he, Lord, that I might believe on him?" is the primary question of personal faith and the starting point of theologic investigation. But the attempt of the early church to answer this query led it far onward into the profundities of dogmatic speculation.

The fathers of the first three centuries recognized clearly the divinity as well as the humanity of our Lord. But they had not thought out the problem of his relations to God the Father, and hence we find a great variety of shades of opinion on this theme from an identification which declared that the Father was incarnate and suffered, or that the Trinity is simply three different forms of revelation of the one God, to a separation and subordination that represented the Son as of a different essence from the Father, and inferior to him as an object of worship. But nowhere had these divergencies of view come so sharply into conflict as in the learned Greek-Egyptian city of Alexandria in the opening years of the fourth century. There, not far from the year 319, we find the principal church in charge of a scholarly, ascetic pastor of middle age, Arius, who, in his desire to avoid seeming to divide the Godhead, advanced the theory that the Son, though divine, was not eternal, but was a created being, the maker of the world indeed, but standing part way between man and the infinite and incomprehensible Father. Christ was before all time, he was almost equal with the Father, but "once he was not." This view had the very serious difficulty that it immeasurably increased the distance between the eternal Father and man by placing an intermediate being between; while it deprived the Son of that full divinity which alone could make him the complete revealer of the Father, or the adequate Redeemer of mankind. It no less gravely erred in denying Christ's perfect humanity. Arius's bishop, after some wavering, excommunicated him in 321; but the real opponent of his theory was a young secretary of the bishop, of diminutive stature and unimpressive appearance, but of high intellectual ability and intrepid firmness, Athanasius. In the view of Athanasius and of his bishop, Christ and the Father are one in essence, the substance of the Son being one with that of the Father by an eternal generation.

These seemingly abstruse but vastly momentous speculations soon divided the city of Alexandria. Artisans quarreled over them as they went to their daily work, merchants as they trafficked in the market. Both parties appealed to the bishops of other churches, and both gained a following. The Alexandrian dispute soon involved a large part of eastern Christendom in its acrimonious debates.

Such a controversy could not but excite the attention of the Emperor Constantine, who had accepted the Christian faith in 312, though he was to delay his baptism and full admission to the church till just before his death, twenty-five years later. To his political mind the quarrel seemed to be a needless dispute "respecting things of no importance and of no use," and he wrote to Alexandria urging both parties to make peace. But instead of decreasing, the controversy waxed more fierce. It was then that the emperor conceived the great thought of a general council of Christendom which should give issue to the dispute. He therefore invited all bishops, each accompanied and served by two presbyters and three slaves, to come at public expense to the centrally located Bythinian city of Nicæa to meet him in the late spring or early summer of 325. The body which gathered in obedience to these summons was perhaps the most remarkable in the history of Christendom, and has been regarded for fifteen hundred years with a veneration which attaches to no other council of the church. Yet this veneration was not due to its numbers. It embraced not more than 318 bishops out of the 1,800 then in the empire, and it included no member from Britain and only seven from the Latin-speaking West. Nor was this later respect due to the distinguished abilities of its attendants, for though there were present such lights of the age as Hosius of Cordova and the church historian, Eusebius of Cæsarea, and confessors like Paphnutius and Potammon, who bore in their bodies the evidences of their faithfulness under persecution, the great majority of the council were in no way prominent. But the gathering of this body signalized in the clearest way the new position of political importance which the church had attained; it was the inauguration of a new era. And its work was at the same time the crystallization of the results of previous debates regarding the relations of the Son and the Father into the one formal statement which, as a result of the decision of this council, ultimately became the accepted view of the church universal. To the thinking of a great portion of the church from that day to this it was under the special guidance of the Holy Spirit.

But the actual circumstances of the adoption of the Nicene decision show plainly enough that, whatever may have been the overruling of divine Providence, the council was not exempt from the usual political and partisan motives which sway all large bodies of men. Three parties appeared in it at first: the two relatively small opposing factions led by the Alexandrian bishop and his archdeacon Athanasius on the one side, and by a few episcopal friends of Arius and that presbyter himself on the other, and between them the mass of the membership, to whom the exact form which the question at issue had assumed was a novelty, but who generally inclined toward the Athanasian position, if a choice between it and that of Arius had to be made. Not the least influence was that of the unbaptized emperor, to whom the Greek Church still ascribes the title of "equal to the apostles," who took part in the discussions and negotiations in public and in private. It was, however, primarily the politician's instinct that Constantine followed, for his chief concern seems to have been that the council end in agreement.

After considerable excited argumentation, eighteen of the sympathizers with Arius presented a statement of their faith, only to have it rejected by the council as a whole. The next attempt came from the great middle party in the body when Eusebius of Cæsarea, with the approval of the emperor, offered for acceptance the creed of his own home church. This confession, largely Scriptural in language, was to serve as the basis of the symbol adopted by the council, but it was not in sharp enough antagonism to the Arian view to be acceptable to the Athanasian party. They desired a formula which no Arian could stretch into toleration of his own theory, and they found it in a letter of Eusebius of Nicomedia—the leading bishop of Arian sympathies—in which the phrase "of one substance" (homoousion), as expressing the relation of Christ to the Father, had been rejected as implying that he was an uncreated being. This word, though not to be found in Scripture, was already in theological use, and the Athanasian party now insisted that it be inserted in the creed presented by Eusebius of Cæsarea, and other expressions of that formula be modified in an anti-Arian sense. In this position, the Athanasians had the support of the emperor and his spiritual adviser, Hosius of Cordova, who saw here a way of agreement. Thus powerfully approved, the amended creed of Cæsarea was laid before the council and accepted by it in words as follows (the additions made by the Athanasian party being indicated by italics):

We believe in one God, the Father Almighty, Maker of all things visible and invisible; and in one Lord Jesus Christ, the Son [Eus. word] of God, begotten of the Father, only begotten that is of the substance of the Father, God of God, Light of Light, very God of very God, begotten not made, being of one substance with the Father, by whom all things were made, both things in heaven and things in earth, who for us men and for our salvation came down and was made flesh, and was made man, and suffered, and rose on the third day, and ascended into the heavens [Eus. to the Father], and is to come to judge the quick and the dead. And in the Holy Ghost. But those who say, "there was when he was not," and "before he was begotten he was not," and that, "he came into existence from what was not," or who profess that the Son of God is of a different "person" or "substance," or that he is created, or changeable, or variable, the Catholic Church anathematizes.

This assertion of faith in terms fully acceptable to the Athanasians was, undoubtedly, of the nature of a surprise to the greater part of the council, who, though without sympathy with Arius, would hardly have reached such sharp definition of expression had it not been for the energetic leadership of the Alexandrians. This reluctance was made evident by the semi-Arian reaction which followed the council, and which threatened for half a century permanently to modify its decision. Yet at its presentation this creed, under the stimulus of the emperor's support, received the signatures of all the episcopal members of the council save two, and was enforced with imperial edicts of banishment against its opponents.

But, curiously enough, as the form of the Apostles' Creed in general use is not its original pattern of words, so the Nicene Creed of the church universal differs very materially from the symbol adopted at Nicæa. That generally accepted creed, though evidently embracing the Nicene decision, differs from the Nicene symbol in several important particulars. It wholly omits the anathema at the conclusion. It enters a little more fully into detail respecting the earthly life of our Lord. It adds a considerable section on the divinity of the Holy Spirit, the result of the discussions of the half-century which followed the Nicene Council, making the conclusion read thus:

And in the Holy Ghost, the Lord and Giver of Life; who proceedeth from the Father; who with the Father and the Son together is worshiped and glorified; who spake by the Prophets. And one Holy Catholic and Apostolic Church. We acknowledge one baptism for the remission of sins; and we look for the resurrection of the dead, and the life of the world to come.

Indeed, so considerable are the divergences between the generally accepted form of this creed and the Nicene original that it would seem to be an adaptation of the local creed of Jerusalem to the Nicene principles made as early as 374, rather than a direct revision of the standard of Nicæa itself. Possibly approved by the second general council in 381, it received the formal commendation of the fourth council in 451, and won general acceptance by reason of its greater definiteness regarding the divinity of the Spirit and its less polemic tone.

Yet emendation has not stopped even here, and the Spanish Council of Toledo in 589 introduced an expression into the accepted form of the Nicene creed which gradually won favor in the Latin Church, while the Greek Church to this day bitterly opposes it. That council, eager to assert the full equality of the Son with the Father, caused the phrase descriptive of the Holy Spirit to read, "who proceedeth from the Father and the Son."

But, however much of human passion and weakness may have attended the formation of the Nicene creed, the Nicene faith can never be outdated. The feeling of Athanasius was right that nothing less than full participation in the substance of the Father was the divinity of Christ. There was indeed subordination on the part of the Son; but it was a subordination of office and relationship, not of nature. Nor can any assertion that the divinity of the Son of Man consisted in the perfection of his humanity, or in his complete obedience and entire fulfillment of the divine purpose, suffice at the present day to solve the problem. A divinity which lays hold on the full God-head at all points and from all eternity is the only adequate conception of the divinity of the God-man.

HERE AND THERE IN WASHINGTON.

BY H. A. B.

Multiplying Attractions.

One who visits the national capital only once in two or three years notes first the outward and material development of the city, its expansion east, west, north and south, new buildings and monuments and other external indications of growth. The changes are all in the direction of making Washington a richer and more delightful habitation for those whose lot is permanently cast there and an increasingly fascinating and rewarding place of resort, not merely for newly wedded couples, thirty or forty of whom are said to be an average daily installment, but for all kinds of visitors from every quarter of the world.

The transient population is indeed very cosmopolitan in its character, and in no city of this country is one so likely to meet on the main streets so large a variety of types. In the vicinity of certain hotels, frequented largely by Southerners, you see the broad, slouched hats and hear the peculiar drawl that distinguish men from the Cotton States. To say nothing of the array of diplomats from other nations whose gay and unusual attire attracts attention in many places, there are always at Washington during the session individuals or delegations from different sections of our own land who are there with a definite purpose. Every little while Boston, or some other New England city, sends a representative deputation of business men to lay before the proper committee certain projects in the carrying out of which national aid is invoked. No sooner do these well-dressed and favored representatives of New England commercial life pass out of view than, as likely as not, a squad of Indians comes into the range of one's sight, with moccasins for their foot gear and certain adornments of their person that suggest the chase and the war dance.

Protesting Indians.

I happened to be present at a hearing given a delegation of Chippewa Indians from Minnesota by Commissioner Browning in his private office. It was a suggestive transition to pass from one of Washington's handsome business streets, lined with shops displaying in their windows the tempting comforts and luxuries of modern civilization, into the midst of this group of men who, while they could hardly be called savages, stand for the few survivors of the aboriginal inhabitants of this country. They had come East at the Government's expense to lay before the commissioner certain grievances in reference to the sale and occupation of their land. I gathered that they were probably justified in their feelings of resentment, and that it was only another case of the white man's cupidity and indifference to sacred obligations. These dozen or more men, some of whom must have been well along to the threescore and ten mark, had evidently come East with a serene confidence in the Great Father of the nation, and through an interpreter—himself a half-breed and one of their own number—expressed their views with definiteness and vigor. The commissioner heard them with the utmost politeness, and as he is a man of kindness and high purpose he will, no doubt, do everything in his power to send the red men back measurably satisfied with the result of their embassy.

Virile Christianity.

The annual halt in social festivities occasioned by the approach of Lent is near at hand, but up to the very moment when that merciful barrier interposes itself in the path of those who come to Washington chiefly for the display of their fine gowns, and the kind of pleasure which inheres in luncheons, dinners, teas, receptions, dances and charity balls, the pace which society people in their coming and going maintain grows daily more intense. Yet detailed accounts in the papers of grand dinners at the White House and at the homes of Cabinet officials and members of Congress, as well as of balls and elaborate public and private "functions," ought not to blind the observer to the amount of charitable, benevolent and distinctively Christian work that goes on within the bounds of the city. A Florence Crittenton Rescue Mission, for instance, has just been projected under the auspices of prominent men and women, and as respects church-going in general and the carrying on of aggressive Christian work Washington need not fear comparison with other cities. Indeed, the vigor with which preparations are being made for the International Christian Endeavor Convention next July indicates a good supply of earnest pastors and resourceful laymen, who together will leave nothing undone to make the great gathering a fit successor to the remarkable assemblages which it succeeds. Permission has been obtained to pitch tents on the "White Lot" near the Executive Mansion, and the largest auditoriums in the city will also be utilized.

A University Town.

The denominations are not slow to recognize the strategic importance of Washington as a center of educational and religious influences. The Baptists have had their Columbian University in the center of a fine residential section for a number of years, and the coming of Dr. Whitman to the presidential chair has quickened the institution in all its departments. The Methodists are on the eve of laying the corner stone of their new university several miles out of the city, and the new Catholic University is already in working order. Representing as it does the liberal wing of the church, it naturally is not warmly welcomed by the old Jesuit institution at Georgetown, which has had the right of way for so many years, but the new school is being managed with great wisdom and tact. The opening of certain classes to residents of the city, after the style of university extension movements, and the securing of Carroll D. Wright as a lecturer on economic topics indicates a disposition to cater to a wide constituency.

The chief educational representative of our own denomination, Howard University, with its 600 students and its efficient corps of teachers in the various departments, still stands for the uplifting of the blacks, and the denomination ought to be as proud of this school and its noble history and its present day influences as are other branches of the Christian Church of their present and prospective standing in the national capital from the point of view of education.

As a strategic move it is equally wise for the denominations to strive, as they seem to be doing, to build up one or more strong churches in Washington. When Garfield was president, as a result of a national agitation, the Christians established a church which has not ceased to be a worthy representative of that denomination, and one of the newest edifices in the city is that of the Swedenborgian church, which has also seen fit to concentrate its strength in one vigorous and well-located organization.

Enthusiastic Congregationalists.

The First Congregational Church, with its membership of about a thousand, its band of enthusiastic and admirably trained young people, its excellent plant, on which for repairs were spent last summer several thousands of dollars, is too conspicuous and influential to be overshadowed by any other church in the city. The spirit of comradeship is strong among the people, as shown by their tarrying in the vestibule and anterooms after the morning service. Dr. Newman, the pastor, has certainly welded together the diverse elements of his congregation, representing in their former church relations many sections of the country. He preaches without a scrap of notes and the strength and variety of his pulpit work insures him both morning and evening an audience that literally fills the house.

Just now Dr. Newman is giving a series of sermons on Congregationalism—simple, clear and illuminating discourses on what that polity stands for in distinction from the three other types of ecclesiastical polity and why it appeals with peculiar force to those who love freedom and immediate access to the source of spiritual power. Such ardent but well-considered advocacy of Congregationalism cannot offend any but the most narrow partisans and will do much to make clear the basal ideas of our system in a city in which it has been misunderstood and where it has had to struggle hard for a standing place. That now has been fully won, through the efforts of Dr. Newman, Dr. Rankin and their noble coadjutors.

On Capitol Hill.

In political circles the talk runs principally to the national finances, that great problem overshadowing in its gravity even the important complications with foreign nations that are now so much in evidence. On the street and in the lobbies of the hotels one overhears such significant phrases as "the gold basis," "the single standard," "the Sherman Act," "the contraction of the currency," and the most important debates in the houses as well as the most notable action of the year have had relation to this complex theme. To point out the way, in a manner that shall measurably satisfy the sharply conflicting opinions of men who represent communities altogether unlike in their traditions and present day attitude, seems thus far a superhuman undertaking.

It is interesting indeed to sit in the gallery of the House or Senate and study the men supposably there to crystallize public opinion into law. My impression of the House as a whole was that it is a group of men younger, better dressed, and on the whole better behaved than their predecessors. In the Senate one misses true statesmen like the scholarly and patriotic Edmunds and the high-minded and conscientious Dawes. But as long as John Sherman and the venerable Morrill of Vermont, and Massachusetts's senior senator, Mr. Hoar, are seen on the floor, one feels that the old guard has not altogether given place to the new type of men who seem to be now foisting themselves forward into senatorial chairs. It is not very far in space, to be sure, from the row where these noble veterans sit to the chairs of their colleagues who represent bossism, or the almighty dollar, or the wildest theories of finance and of the functions of the national Government. Certainly the heterogeneity of our American population is nowhere better reflected today than in the personnel of the United States Senate.

The magnificent structure nearing completion a few rods to the east of the Capitol and designed for the Congressional Library is by all odds the finest structure that has been added to the beautiful edifices of Washington since the Capitol itself. The new Corcoran Art Gallery and the Washington Post Office, both of which are nearing completion, are the only recent structures that deserve to be mentioned in the same breath, but in point of size they are to the library as pygmies to a giant. Its great octagonal rotunda, with its pillars of beautiful marble and its splendid decorations, conveys an impression of strength, symmetry and spaciousness which one associates with only Europe's stateliest cathedrals.

As one issues from this building, soon to be consecrated to literature which represents the higher life of man, and stands in front of it gazing at the great Capitol building across the way, the national consciousness which slumbers in every citizen of the republic awakes and asserts itself. It is a glorious country after all in which we live, and these noble buildings that embody concretely the national idea stir one to pride and to devotion. There may be, there doubtless are, incapacity and trickery in legislative halls, but one cannot but believe that patriotism is still regnant there, and every now and then an American citizen should ascend the Capitol hill and let his soul be moved by the suggestiveness of the scene. To this shrine he should come often enough to revive and strengthen his own faith in the government "of the people, for the people and by the people." And to it he should bring his children to learn, as nowhere else in this country they can learn, the meaning and the possibilities of American citizenship.

We have referred more than once to the experiment in New York of the company formed to loan money on personal property in competition with the pawnbrokers, and at a smaller rate of interest. We are glad to see that a dividend of six per cent. to stockholders, most of whom no doubt invested their money without hope of returns, has been declared and that the work of the society is to be enlarged by the raising of more capital.

The Christian Life.

I. Life.

By Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins, Jr.

What is life? What does it all mean, this rushing, pushing, nervous existence which seems at times so entrancing and at times so strange and hard? "What does my life mean?" How many of us have asked that question, and yet the clear, peace-giving answer has not come! There must be an answer. We cannot for a moment believe that it is a bit of chance that has placed us here, and a bit of chance that at last is to take us away again. Mill's pathetic epitaph, after all, is more of an unconscious assertion than a crying prayer: "What am I? Whence came I? Whither am I going?" The very asking makes positive the assurance:

> For I must be immortal,
> Not doomed to die, but surely called to live
> Here and hereafter by his loving will
> Who placed me where I am.

For the common desire and judgment go out to meet the message of Christ, and together, the human longing and the divine assurance, give us peace.

> Let me not cast in endless shade
> What is so wonderfully made, sings Tennyson in the Two Voices, and we echo the cry. Some being must have made me for nothing makes itself. If the cliff huts of Arizona claim builders, if the book I hold in my hand, though anonymous, proves an author, how much more does the fact that I am prove that I am from some creative hand. And this creator must be wise, for no foolish, unintelligent power could shape a man. Work is generally inferior to the workman who has wrought. What we do is less noble than our ideals. The maker must be greater than that which he makes. Hence, out of his wisdom this Being made me.

He must love me, for the maker loves that which he has made. The artist half caresses the canvas from which he cannot bear to turn away, even after the last touch of his brush. The author lingers over the last pages of his story, hesitating to send a part of his very self flying out amongst men. So Dickens speaks in that pathetic preface to David Copperfield. Even the schoolgirl holds affectionately her first essay, and the carpenter looks with something more than pride upon the first house he has built, and the sculptor loves his marble out of which has come, with almost mysterious force, the vision of his soul. If the father and the mother love the babe, then he who made us must love us.

And he must have made us for some definite purpose. Such a work as the human could not have been a throwing off of chance particles, useless to the Center whence they came, to live or die, prosper or fail as may be. If the watchmaker makes his watch to keep time, and the lens is skillfully cut to magnify, and the locomotive is fashioned to draw, and the painting is made to create emotion, can it be possible that the Creator of man had less purpose, not merely for the race but for the individual, in his work? Surely I am forced to answer the arising doubts with the assertion: The intelligent, loving being who made me must have made me for a purpose. My life must mean something; short or long, strong or weak, here or there, my personality has a character which I must discover and develop.

There is yet another step. I cannot believe for a moment that such a being as man is, with his mind reaching so high and including even the things beyond knowledge in its calculations, and his soul so full of lofty emotion, and his heart so pressed by the throbs of love—I cannot believe that he is only for these few days or years which we call life. What chance has he to fulfill the purpose of his creation? Even the picture lasts for centuries, and we stand before a Raphael or a Da Vinci and drink in that which for hundreds of years men could not appreciate at all. We read our Homer and delight in our Juvenal, works of men which have endured. Can the men themselves have been made to endure only for a breath, while their thoughts and their ideals continue? Should a book outlive the man who conceived its truth, or a cathedral the architect and the builder who gave it shape? Man must have been made for lasting years; and while his earth sojourn is the beginning of his life, and while he starts here in the formation of that character which is unlimited, before him is eternity, into which he enters more and more even now as he grasps the greatness of things, into the fullness of which he enters at last, eclipsed from our sight by the radiancy which surrounds him.

All this, of course, is pure reasoning; what the man must think for himself, if he thinks at all, calmly and frankly. But, as he takes the next step, he touches the spring which opens reason into the realm of revelation. Has this being, intelligent and loving, who has made me for a purpose and has given me immortality for the fulfillment of that purpose—has he never revealed himself to man? Has he never been himself where men could hear his voice and see his face and listen to his assurances that human hopes are not vain? "It must be," the man reasons, "it must be that the Maker will, in some way, show himself to that which he has made.

And then, before him, not on the pages of history only but on the earth as a great fact of human interest, stands Jesus Christ. There he is, once in all the ages, a being who proves his superhuman character not by his miracles only, or by his teachings, but by his life. He was sinless. He was perfect—even his enemies being judges—and, therefore, he was divine. From his lips flow the gracious words satisfying the thirst of man for knowledge. From his hands comes the healing touch for which the poor human body was aching. He shows what it is to live, and tells the purpose of living by himself granting a perfect example. He speaks of the unknown Maker and calls him the Father. He claims that this Father longs to have his children know him and, therefore, has sent his own son Jesus to reveal him. He urges the wisdom and the love of this Father, and his purpose in every man's birth. He declares the continuance of life beyond the mortal limit, and "opens the kingdom of heaven to all believers."

Not one longing which the intelligent man has known but this Jesus promises sure gratification. Not one aspiration but this dear Christ claims there is a reality to meet it. He makes plain the duties and the struggles. He declares the advance of knowledge under the unceasing care of God the Holy Spirit. He proves that death is nothing but an incident by calling back from its mystery three who had entered, and by rising himself by his own inherent power and coming out of his tomb and mingling forty days with his friends, yet apparently unseen by his enemies (for the heart which cares not for life cannot know life).

O, that blessed visitation of God to his earth, which must stand through all days as the signal redemption of earth and man alike! What a meaning it has, because it makes clear all the dark doubt of life and in the light of the Christ leads us to see light.

This, then, is life, as Jesus says, that we may know him who made us. Yes, this is the Christian life. You are not a Christian because you have "joined" the church. You are not a Christian because you are "trying to be good." Going to church, reading your Bible, "saying" your prayers, receiving the holy communion—these are not the parts or the proofs of true religion. They are helps, blessed helps, means of unceasing and much needed grace; but back of them and as the user of them must stand the man who has learned to know God, learned to know his Father and to love him.

There is the interpretation of your life and mine. I know it is all so strange at times. We are perplexed, tired, lifted into ecstasy only to react into dead despair. Things are not real, and do not, apparently, follow any rule. And into the midst of the struggle death comes, before any light has shone on the problem or any ease has come to the years, and laughs at our amazement. What shall we say? That we cannot know? That we must wait? That life is probation in which man's patience is tested? Surely it is a rest to find something deeper and surer. Not a hope only, not a faith only, not a system only; no; but a life, whose beginning we know, whose meaning we know, for we can read through all the contradictions and find the harmony, whose continuation we know because the Father has prepared for us many mansions.

And so, if I can look up all the while to God as my Father, and talk to him, and grow to understand him more and more, then I am in the truest sense a Christian, a follower of Christ. Out of this will flow loving words and deeds. From my face, which has been looking into my Father's face, will beam the reflected sunshine to make the world happier and weary hearts lighter. I will learn gentleness from his voice, bravery from his strength, wisdom from his truth. But my dearest and best part will be the daily communing which shall make me more and more like him, and bring my life nearer to the purpose for which he made it.

VICTOR AND VANQUISHED.

I.

Through the crowded streets returning, at the ending of the day,
Hastened one whom all saluted as he sped along his way;
In his eye a gleam of triumph, in his heart a joy sincere,
And the voice of shouting thousands still resounding in his ear.
Passed he 'neath a stately archway toward the goal of his desire,
Till he saw a woman's figure lolling idly by the fire.

"I have won," he cried, exultant; "I have saved a cause from wreck,
Crushed the rival that I dreaded, set my foot upon his neck!
Now at last the way is open, now at last men call me great,
I am leader of the leaders, I am master in the state!"

Languidly she turned to listen with a decorous pretense,
And her cold, patrician features mirrored forth indifference.
"Men are always scheming, striving for some petty end," said she.
Then, a little yawn suppressing, "What is all of this to me?"

II.

Through the shadows of the evening, as they quenched the sunset glow,
Came the other, faring homeward with dejected step and slow;
Wistful, peering through the darkness, till he saw, as oft before,
Where a woman stood impatient at the threshold of the door.

"I have lost!" he faltered, faintly. "All is over"—with a groan;
Then he paused and gazed expectant at the face beside his own.
Two soft eyes were turned upon him with a woman's tenderness,
Two white arms were flung about him with a passionate caress,
And a voice of thrilling music to his mutely uttered plea
Said, "If only you are with me, what is all the rest to me?"

III.

All night long the people's leader sat in silence and alone,
Dull of eye, with brain unthinking, for his heart was turned to stone;
While the hours passed all unheeded till the hush of night had ceased,
And the haggard light returning flecked the melancholy east.

But the other, the defeated, laughed a laugh of merriment,
And he thrust his cares behind him with an infinite content,
Recking not of place and power and the smiles of those above,
For his darkness was illumined by the radiance of love.

Each had grasped the gift of fortune, each had counted up the cost;
And the vanquished was the victor, and the winner he that lost.

Too often we think of economy as something belittling, practiced by those of small, selfish and grasping natures, or, by nobler souls, from stern necessity. That any one should exercise economy from a belief in it as the true and natural method of life is usually incomprehensible. Yet no close observer of the natural world and no careful student of the Bible can fail to discover that economy is a law of nature and of God. In the incident at Cana, Christ used what was at hand. The hungry multitudes in the desert must have marveled to see him take the meager portion which they had thought hardly worth mentioning and convert it into sustenance. And if he, who of all others had the right to be lavish and extravagant, was never wasteful, surely no person can feel justified in wasting where Christ would have saved. If he, in every emergency, could discover some resource which needed only power and wisdom to render it effective, ought we not to be more quick to see, more wise to improve the capabilities of good in the people and things about us?

OVERDOING IN KINDNESS.

BY MRS. M. E. SANGSTER.

"My dear," the other day said a lady to a young relative, who was insisting that a delicate mother should not wear herself out by undertaking some work on which the mother's heart was set, "you tire her a great deal more by your opposition than she would tire herself by doing as she wishes to." It was true, though it was hard for the loving daughter to understand why. Youth is eager, impetuous and strong of will, and often, in its very beautiful and unselfish impulsiveness, it wounds those it would help. One has to arrive at a certain place in life to comprehend that the largest kindness which may be done to any one is, in nine cases out of ten, just to let her alone. Especially in the dealings of the young with the old, of grown-up sons and daughters with the parents who stand a generation in front of them, there is need of caution, for even kindness may fail of its good intention if it be overdone.

Everybody has noticed and many have smiled at the quick sensitiveness of the aged where their acceptance of aid in things smaller or greater seems to imply a falling off of power. Probably the real reason why people as a rule object to growing old, and cling desperately to the retreating skirts of youth, is because, little by little, age does grow conscious of infirmity, age feels that it is pushed from its position in the activities of life and forced to stand aside. When age is still far away, a mere shadow in the distance, there are those who forecast the future and rebel against its limitations, and they are more than ordinarily ready to resist when their juniors lay, though softly and sweetly, stumbling-blocks in their way. It makes them a little difficult to get on with, and they are brusquer and more prickly than they would be but for the constant endeavor to hold their own, which has the effect of all struggle and toughens and hardens the one who conquers, so there is a little tarnish on the gold of victory.

Yet this is better than the too easy giving up, the relinquishing of privilege, the loss of standing ground which we sometimes see. I have known a mother at fifty, when she should have been in the splendor and prime of her years, abandon her appropriate chair of state in the family councils simply because her strong-willed children were too much for her. Their overzeal in kindness effaced her as inevitably as if they had treated her with rudeness or neglect. In the latter alternative, indeed, she would have had more scope for growth, for the wind and the sun and the dew of heaven are better for the rooted plant than is the breath of the hothouse. Few human beings are improved by constant living in a glass case, and when a human being ceases to grow and develop, he or she then, and not till then, becomes past usefulness and a cumberer of the ground. By what right, by what excuse do children ever thus impose an arresting kindness on their parents?

Generally speaking, to be very plain about it, children should not interfere too much with the mother's freedom of action. It is a stormy Sunday morning. "You surely are not going to church," says Jane; "in this weather," adds Elizabeth; and "the church will be as cold as a barn, and you will get your death of grippe or pneumonia," supplements Katharine, till among them they either persuade the poor lady to yield against her inclination, or so excite her by their well-meant resistance to it, that she is in no frame of mind to enjoy the sanctuary.

All the while it has never occurred to one of the girls that her mother knows her own preference, has sufficient common sense to take precautions against the weather and has a perfect right to choose her course and act with independence. I know instances where the affectionate despotism of daughters hinders their mothers from taking a share in church work for which they are eminently qualified, and absolutely ages and invalidates the elder women in lines where they would be most valued and most useful.

This is not a plea against considerate sweetness and gentle treatment on the part of children where old people are concerned; it is a small word by way of reminder to those who do not know or comprehend how too much zeal in sincere and well-meant kindness may be as deleterious as its opposite. Not always do age and youth see things alike. The point of view differs. Age, it must be admitted, is often capricious and unreasonable, but youth, which we all have had, is so great an advantage in itself that it should learn magnanimity and restrain its desire to rule. One of these days, these flying days, the youngest of us all will be old and will, it may be, remember and regret what can never be atoned for.

FOUR TYPES OF BACHELORHOOD.

BY A CONFIRMED CELIBATE.

I imagine that most of the contributors to the recent symposium on matrimony gave ostensible rather than real reasons for their single estate. The peculiarity of the bachelor's consciousness, so far as I have been able to fathom it, is a disposition to shunt the topic off on a side track whenever it comes up for discussion. My friend Morgan, for instance, who is going on forty, invariably curls his under lip and says, contemptuously, "O, marriage is a flat failure, anyway." If his charming hostess, who invites him to dinner the third Sunday in every month because she thinks he must get so tired of the club, undertakes to remonstrate with him, he enumerates all the conspicuous instances of alleged mésalliances from Shakespeare to William K. Vanderbilt, and I have known him, when hard pressed in the argument, to cite the garden debates and recriminations of our first parents. He takes a South Dakota paper in order to keep the run of the divorces which take place there, and he glories in pointing to the National Divorce Reform League as conclusive proof of his dictum. "For," says Morgan, "what would Dr. Dike and his friends want to reform the divorce business for, anyway, unless they thought there was a large and legitimate field for divorce in this country." Under the temporary sway of his own reasoning Morgan has been known to contribute two dollars to the league.

Now, as a matter of fact, Morgan knows better. He himself is the product of one of the happiest marriages this century has witnessed. His brothers and sisters have pleasant homes and lovely children, of whom Morgan himself is extremely fond. He is the only one of the fifteen members of his college society who has not wedded, and at the marriage of at least five of them he has officiated as best man or usher. It used to be said, until he got a little corpulent, that no man could keep the distance better when promenading up the aisle, and it is still true that no man enjoys a wedding better than he. I caught him the other noon coming out of St. George's just as the company that had gathered to witness a ceremony was streaming out into the warm sunshine. "Friends of yours, old man?" said I, inquisitively. "No," he replied, looking a bit shamefaced, "but I had a few minutes to spare and thought I'd just slip in and see the young things started."

The world would judge Morgan more kindly if it knew that, just as he was graduating from the law school, he proposed to a New Haven girl and was rejected. She subsequently went into college settlement work and after a while married a social reformer. They have a quiet evening at home together about once in eighteen months. Morgan accepted his fate manfully. Life still had and yet possesses many resources for him, but he hasn't had the courage to ask another girl since. He always was constitutionally averse to being around where he didn't seem to be wanted, and a single no chilled him to the marrow. This is the real reason why Morgan is still single.

Charrington, whom I meet in business relations whenever I go to a certain city, has never admitted it in so many words, but he encourages the impression that the true cause of his abstinence from marriage is that he never has seen the incarnation of his ideal. People say he is looking for a paragon. I must admit that Charrington is a bit critical. He lives well and he would like to see at the head of his table and of his household machinery a woman under whom the servants would do their work noiselessly and efficiently, whose sparkle and gift of repartee would fascinate the friends whom he likes to bring together in little dinner parties. He is rather musical, too, and knows a good thing in pictures, and he craves sympathy in these spheres. Moreover, as he is on the board of directors of a number of benevolent societies and is reasonably attached to his church, he thinks it rather important that his wife should be at least moderately pious. All the same, Charrington in his secret heart knows that there are plenty of girls in his own social circle who would fulfill all these requirements and who are far too good for him any way. Now and then we think he is exhibiting a hopeful weakness in a certain direction, but Charrington never launches out into the deep. He simply dabbles and putters. The real trouble with him is a constitutional weakness and timidity which easily shade off into selfishness. He would rather be lonely than run any possible risk of being bored.

Whenever I ask my friend Fowler why he does not wed he is apt to reply, "O, you know there are my sisters and mother." To be sure, Fowler has showed himself since his father's death a blameless son and brother, and as yet he is rather of a young bachelor, but when he runs to cover with this excuse I get a trifle impatient, and not long ago took him in hand something after this fashion:

"What do you want to talk nonsense for, Fowler? You know that your mother and sister have a comfortable competence and would be glad to see you happily married. The fact is that you like to roam from flower to flower. I sometimes think that some men are really designed on the Mormon pattern, and that your proper place of abode is not New York State but Utah. This free and easy touch-and-go style of life, unhampered by any close obligations, just suits you. You want nothing better. When I met you the other day you were mailing your acceptance of an invitation to dine with Julia's mamma. From the letter box you went straight to the florist to order some flowers sent Alice, and then hurried off to the steamer to see Helen sail, returning just in time to drive with Mary Jane. Before the day ended you found an opportunity to send a new book to a friend at Vassar and to indict an epistle to a Smith Senior. There is not only safety in numbers for you but an absolute guarantee against the dual life." Fowler took this chastising meekly, but when that wearisome query with which bachelors are somewhat familiar was put to him again the other day I heard him murmuring something about "family ties."

I know a minister who is a pastor in a quiet New England town. His people say that an earlier and unfulfilled, but still regnant, passion explains his single estate. She died, so the story goes, the month after they were engaged. Then the maiden ladies of the parish lower their voices a little and say in profoundly confidential tones: "You know there was something of the sort in the experience of the famous preacher, Dr. Silverton, and how beautifully the disappointment ennobled his after life." There is, I confess, not a little in the outward mien of the village dominie that gives color to this illusion. There is the suggestion of the confirmed celibate in his face and garb. He is decidedly mystical in the temper of his mind and his chief interests are certainly not of the earth earthy.

But when I sit down with him by his open fire and we get to talking confidentially, Harry, who is one of the best fellows in the world and in whose veins courses the full red blood of a rich human nature, tells me that, while the village yarn saves him from frequent embarrassing situations, as a matter of fact the notion of a former passion is pure rot, that he never met a girl who called forth the lover in him, that while he has the utmost respect and admiration for women he never saw one whom he wanted to marry. But as the fire burns low he owns up that he would like best of anything else in the world to be married, and any day now I expect to get his cards. There is a large boarding school for girls in the town where he preaches.

I started to tell the real and not the ostensible reasons for my own refraining from matrimony, but my description of the four men who mask their real attitude under plausible but specious pretexts has left me no space.

ODE FOR WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY.

FEB. 22, 1856.

Welcome to the day returning,
Dearer still as ages flow,
While the torch of Faith is burning
Long as Freedom's altars glow!
See the hero that it gave us,
Slumbering on a mother's breast;
For the arm he stretched to save us,
Be its morn forever blest!

Hear the tale of youthful glory,
While of Britain's rescued band,
Friend and foe repeat the story,
Spread his fame o'er sea and land;
Where the red cross, proudly streaming,
Flaps above the frigate's deck,
Where the golden lilies, gleaming,
Star the watchtowers of Quebec.

Look! the shadow on the dial
Marks the hem of deadlier strife;
Days of terror, years of trial
Scourge a nation into life.
Lo, the youth became her Leader!
All her baffled tyrants yield;
Through his arm the Lord hath freed her;
Crown him on the tented field.

Vain is empire's mad temptation;
Not for him an earthly crown!
He whose sword hath freed a nation
Strikes the offered scepter down.
See the throneless conqueror seated,
Ruler by a people's choice;
See the patriot's task completed;
Hear the father's dying voice.

By the name that you inherit,
By the sufferings you recall,
Cherish the fraternal spirit;
Love your country first of all!
Listen not to idle questions,
If its bands may be untied;
Doubt the patriot whose suggestions
Whisper that its props may slide.

Father! we whose ears have tingled,
With the words of doubt and shame,
We, whose sires their blood have mingled
In the battle's thunder-flame,
Gathering, while this holy morning
Lights the land from sea to sea,
Hear thy counsel, heed thy warning;
Trust us, while we honor thee!

FIVE DOGS.

A SHORT SERMON FOR SMALL BOYS.

BY MR. MARTIN.

I will tell you to begin with why I selected this subject for a sermon. A boy friend came to see me two or three days after the New Year's sermon on the Five Does was printed in The Congregationalist [Dec. 26]. He had not seen it before and taking up the paper read the title—the Five Dogs. Soon after a lady called, opened the paper and read the title in the same way. (Perhaps the printer made a mistake—should it have been Five Do's?) Then I saw that the subject they had mentioned would be a good one for another sermon—and here it is.

The text is, Beware of dogs. (You can find it in the Bible yourselves.) At the same time that Paul wrote these words in Rome a gentleman in the city of Pompeii, not far away, had on the floor of his vestibule a fine representation of a dog in mosaic and placed the same warning under it: Cave canem—which means, "Beware of the dog." (The boys in Pompeii understood it, for they could read Latin as well as you can English!) The city was, as you know, buried a few years later under the lava and ashes of Vesuvius, but after all these centuries it has been unburied, and there are the dog and the inscription under it to show that people in Bible times were afraid of dogs, just as we are now.

But Paul did not refer to real dogs. He was thinking of dog-like people. Human folks often show traits nowadays which belong to the lower animals. That is what the text says to boys—beware of acting like dogs. I will mention five dogs they ought to look out for.

1. The lazy dog. You have seen him. The Old Testament describes him—"sleeping, lying down, loving to slumber." Lying down in the sunshine all day long, of no use to anybody. You have heard a man called "a lazy dog." It is because he acts like one. He probably got into that habit when he was a boy. Don't you get into that habit! When there is so much that a boy can do for his own enjoyment and for the happiness of others, in play, in work, in study, I cannot understand why he should be willing to do nothing and be nothing. If you ever find yourself (except when you are sick) inclined to be idle and lazy, wake up, look out—beware of that dog!

2. The cross dog. You are acquainted with him also. You know him quite too well. He is always growling and snapping, even though you do not trouble him at all, and one learns to give him a wide berth. Whenever I see him I think of one of Captain Marryat's stories which I read when I was a boy, the title and the hero of which was "Snarly-yow"—a very cross dog. This may not be wrong for animals. Your grandparents used to recite a poem which had these lines—they will tell you the rest:

> Let dogs delight to bark and bite,
> For 'tis their nature to.

But it is not your nature, and you must not let it be your nature. Do not be like a surly dog in your family, always scowling and growling and grumbling, finding fault and making a fuss. Beware of Snarly-yow!

3. The cruel dog. Biting is worse than barking. A dog fight is a sad thing, even though begun in sport—the poor animals tearing each other till both are nearly dead. Travelers in the land of Pomiuk have seen the wolf-dogs of that coast fall upon some weaker dog of their own kind and cruelly fight him in the water or on the shore till he is drowned or killed. Isn't it awful? Yes, but not half as much so as for boys to do the same thing. I sometimes see two or three little fellows on the street throw another down and pound him or plague him till he cries with anger and pain. I have heard of college students combining to abuse some fellow whom they think it is their business to deal with. It may be amusement for them, but it certainly is not for the poor "freshman" who is the victim of their sport, and who sometimes, like the Labrador dog, dies in the process. Such "fun," whether carried on by small boys or big boys, is not manly or gentlemanly—it is cruel, brutal, shameful. I wonder if Paul was not thinking of this same comparison between dogs and men when he cautioned the people in Galatia—where the Turks and Armenians now live—not to "bite and devour one another"? Boys, play and have a good time at it, but beware of acting like savage wolf-dogs!

4. The conceited dog. I suppose there must be such a canine specimen, else the phrase would not be so common, applied to men and youth. What can be more disagreeable than to see boys who are fine-looking, intelligent and otherwise pretty good boys so conceited that it spoils all their good qualities? They think they know more than their parents or teachers, and sometimes show it by the way they treat them. Excuse me for mentioning this head, for as a matter of fact I do not think it applies to the grade of boys I am preaching this sermon to. But this trait so often attacks boys in the next grade older than you and hurts their appearance so much for a few years (they are usually ashamed enough of it afterwards) that I thought I would bid you beware of it beforehand. "Brag is a good dog, but"—

5. The selfish dog. You recognize this dog easily. He is very common. The Bible speaks of "greedy dogs." The Dutch proverb says that "a dog with a bone knows no friend." "The dog in the manger will neither eat himself nor let the horse eat." Beware of that kind of doggishness! It will surely make a boy—or a man—unworthy, unlovable, unhappy. Don't keep everything for yourself. Be kindly, friendly, helpful to the other boys—and everybody else. This dog, like a composite photograph I have just seen, combines in it all the other dogs. If you can conquer No. 5, you will have the other four mastered, too, for selfishness is at the bottom of laziness, crossness, cruelty and conceitedness.

If it were proper to interrupt the sermon—as people sometimes wish they could do—you would say, "But all dogs are not altogether bad." No, nor boys. But here are five things which are bad in dogs or boys. So when you are tempted to be lazy, cross, cruel, conceited or selfish, remember that those traits belong to the lower animals and bravely reply, "Is thy servant a dog, that he should do this thing?" Yes, dogs have good qualities, and you might make an excellent ending to the sermon by thinking up—and writing down—five good things about dogs, which it would be well for boys to imitate.

ABOUT PEOPLE.

Mr. John Burroughs, speaking of his love for nature as expressed in his books, says: "My aim has been not to tell that love to my reader, but to tell it to the trees and the birds and to let them tell him. I think we all like this indirect way the best."

That the "new woman" is rapidly developing in Japan is evidenced by the active part taken by Mme. Hatoyama in politics. When her husband, a leader of the progressionist party, ran for Parliament she took the stump and made speeches in his interest—a very extraordinary thing for a Japanese woman to do. She is now a teacher in the academy of which her husband is principal.

The eminent English publisher, Alexander Macmillan, who died recently, was one of the few persons who enjoyed an intimate friendship with Tennyson. The poet took pleasure in reading his verses to so appreciative a listener, and would recite them with his peculiar intonation, pausing once in a while to exclaim under his breath: "That is a fine line!" This peculiarity of the poet's was amusingly manifested at one time when Charles Sumner called upon him. "Have you read The Princess?" asked Tennyson. Sumner expressed himself as a great admirer of the poem. "Then read this passage to me," demanded the host. It was a delicate task and the rendering evidently did not please him, for presently he snatched the book from Sumner's hand and began reading himself in the singular sing-song tone which he affected.

Closet and Altar

Prayer moves the hand that moves the world.

It is in hours of meditation and communion that we learn the relative value of possessions. The rich young man wished to have the kingdom of God as a supplement to his other wealth, and went away sorrowful when Jesus showed him that God's kingdom could not be supplementary to anything. It is Christ's mercy which insists upon the true order of possessions. Think what it would mean to us in hours of prayer if we had only lands and stocks and money, and no interest or inheritance in the kingdom of our God.

Deep humility is a strong bulwark, and as we enter into it we find safety and true exaltation.—John Woolman.

Among the forms of insect life there is a little creature known to naturalists which can gather around itself a sufficiency of atmospheric air, and so clothed it descends into the bottom of the pool, and you may see the little diver moving about, dry and at his ease, protected by his crystal vesture though the water all around be stagnant and bitter. Prayer is such a protector. A transparent vesture, the world sees it not; a real defense, it keeps out the world. By means of it the believer can gather so much of heavenly atmosphere around him, and with it descend into the putrid depths of this contaminating world, that for a season no evil will touch him, and he knows when to ascend for a new supply.—Dr. James Hamilton.

Is the way long? Meseems not so,
No way is long where friends do go
In converse low and sweet and deep—
And all the way I have with me
My Lord's dear companie.

Is the way hard? But surely nay!
For "Lean on me," his voice doth say;
And scarce I know the path grows steep,
So wondrously it heartens me
My Lord's dear companie.

As a mother who expects her son from foreign parts would arrange his room to remind him of his boyhood, gathering into it the things he loved and the treasures he sent on before him, so will the Master reconstruct our life beyond doubt of kindly circumstances, that shall fit into our character and work with this difference that the scale shall be of heaven; and place us once more among those we loved and lost for a while with only this difference that we shall not then see through a glass darkly but face to face.—Ian Maclaren.

Spirit of All Good, it is our joy to believe that all things are ours if we are Christ's, for Christ is God's. May Christ dwell in us the hope of glory, the assurance of immortality, a fountain of present blessing and a pledge of all needful aid. Without Christ we can do nothing; he is the vine, we are the branches; he is the Shepherd, we are the flock; we live in him and without him we cannot live. Reveal thyself to us by the ministry of thy Holy Spirit. May we see him in all the aspects of his character until our growing wonder becomes lowliest worship and our amazed imagination falls down prostrate before the Son of God. Amen.

Mothers in Council.

A FEW NEW BOOKS.

We shall call attention in this department, from time to time, to recent publications, either in the form of books or magazine articles which bear, directly or indirectly, upon the problems of child culture.

Those in search of good poetry for quite young children will find Robert Louis Stevenson's A Child's Garden of Verses well adapted to interest them. In one household it has been read aloud to a boy of about seven until he can repeat nearly every poem in the book. One day, while out walking with his mother, he noticed a muddy stream flowing along by the sidewalk, and instantly he began reciting the four verses beginning, Dark brown is the river.

"There," exclaimed the mother to a friend who was with her, "see how much better it is to fill a child's memory with good poetry instead of mere jingles. How aptly William has applied these lines to what he saw." This simple incident also illustrates the advantage in personal supervision by the mother of her child's reading instead of leaving the selection to an ignorant nurse girl.

A gentleman who is deeply interested in young people writes: "My boy has just sent us a new attractive edition, with notes, of Irving's Tales of a Traveler. Longmans, Green & Co. are publishing a series of English classics, nine in all, of which this is one. Another is De Foe's Plague in London. All are edited by one person, a professor of literature, and they are just the thing for young people."

Two new books designed for the education and entertainment of young children will be of value to mothers and teachers. Sara E. Wiltse's Myths and Motherplays contains a number of simple stories adapted from the ancient nature myths concerning clouds, fire, flowers, the rainbow, the moon, etc., which are suited to the twelve months of the year. They appeal to a child's imagination and love of poetry, and are meant to be wholesome and instructive as well as entertaining. A recent translation of the Songs of Froebel's Mother Play, with new music arranged by Susan E. Blow, is also a noteworthy addition to the literature of child culture.

PASS IT ALONG.

One of our readers has solved the problem of what to do with a certain class of literature which is too helpful to be cast aside even though the owner has become familiar with its choice thoughts, and she offers this suggestion, which comes too late for the holidays but is just as good for any season:

Dear Christian friend, what have you done with that choice book of spiritual truths, Daily Help for Daily Needs, a friend gave you last year? What with that expensive calendar with beautiful colored illustrations and choice, helpful quotations for every day in the year? You have gained sweet council and choice gems of thought from them, but now there are others upon your table impatient to help you through the year 1896. I know you would gladly pass them along were it not for the date or, maybe, a few marks of use upon them. I would, therefore, help you by suggesting that you be one of the links of a chain which shall carry about these books as long as they have power to give gladness. Will you not write upon a fly-leaf of each book, Received by ——, from ——, Jan. 1, 1895. Grateful for the blessing this book has brought to me, I ask you, dear friend, to accept it from me, and at the beginning of the year 1897 ask a friend of yours to accept the same, each person as it passes along adding her name, and seeing that the chain is unbroken until the book shall have fulfilled its entire mission?

God does not give all things to all alike. Why? Perhaps that we who receive largely may finish the work. Surely that the joy of sharing it may be ours. Let us then be sharers in this work, and we can be the largest sharers by doing it without waste and in a gracious, loving manner.

I am blest
Only in what they share with me,
In what I share with all the rest.

H. M. R.

A TOUCHING TRIBUTE.

At a recent installation council the pastor elect gave a touching reminiscence as a part of his "narration of religious experience." In speaking of the training of his early home he said that his most precious remembrance of his childhood was that he always went to sleep hearing the voice of his mother praying aloud in an adjoining room for her children. Is it any wonder that he thanked God for such a mother, or that he became a Christian and a minister of Christ? Could there be a more effective sermon to mothers on the far-reaching and blessed influence they unconsciously exert over their children in the simple everyday life of the home?

A UNIQUE CLUB.

There is a Wives' and Mothers' Scientific Club connected with the First Church in Spring Valley, Minn., the object of which is to study wifehood and motherhood from a scientific standpoint. Only married women who belong to the church are eligible to membership. The pastor's wife asks those who read this department for a list of the best periodicals and books suitable for private use in the club, and also inquires what medical works would be of use to them. Naturally there are delicate topics of vital importance which it would be unwise to discuss in the columns of a family newspaper but concerning which mothers ought to be intelligent, and an organization of this character might serve a useful purpose in almost any community.

HOW WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY WAS MADE A HOLIDAY.

The first recorded celebration of Washington's birthday occurred in Richmond, Va., in 1782, but it was not until the middle of the present century that Feb. 22 was set apart as a legal holiday in Massachusetts. In favor of the public recognition and observance of the day the Mercantile Library Association exerted a powerful influence. Mr. C. G. Chase, the then chairman of the lecture committee, proposed that the association should celebrate Feb. 22, 1856, by appropriate exercises, and to further this plan he had conceived the idea of applying to the State legislature to make the day a holiday. Governor Gardner was waited upon by a committee from the association and was induced by the patriotic nature of their request to recommend that Feb. 22 be made a legal holiday.

The exercises for the celebration included an eloquent and masterly oration by Edward Everett and an ode by Oliver Wendell Holmes, which we print this week. A most distinguished audience of more than 3,000 persons gathered in the evening in Music Hall. Among those invited who could not be present was President Franklin Pierce who, however wrote an appreciative letter from which is taken this brief quotation: "If the people of every State and Territory of the confederation—fathers and mothers, sons and daughters—would assemble annually on the twenty-second of February in their respective cities and towns and hamlets and listen to the farewell address of the Father of his Country, it would, in my judgment, accomplish more in the way of awakening a deep sense of constitutional duty, of settling questions of moral obligation in relation thereto, of eradicating sectional prejudice, of dissipating errors of sentiment and opinion, and of insuring security and perpetuity to the blessings which we enjoy, than any other instrumentality which man's wisdom can devise."

Mr. Everett's oration lasted for two hours, during which time the orator never once referred to his manuscript or allowed the attention of his audience to flag. He refused any compensation for his services on this occasion, but the oration was afterwards repeated by him in various other cities and towns, where the sale of tickets realized the sum of $75,000 for the purchase of Mount Vernon.

To those living in a cold climate, and especially for nervous persons, the Canada Lancet recommends a bowl of hot broth, like oatmeal gruel or clam soup, before retiring. The stomach craves warmth on cold winter nights as much as any other part of the body. A glass of hot milk serves the purpose very well, but a light, well-cooked gruel is better. Malted milk, too, is excellent, and requires only the addition of boiling water by way of preparation.

The Conversation Corner.

WE usually print our amended copy of Trumbull's famous picture of Washington in the Corner nearest his birthday, but this time we have one of Washington's trees. It is not the historic elm in Cambridge, under which Pastor Beach made his eloquent address to the Christian Endeavor visitors last summer, but a tree in New Jersey captured by the camera of Miss K. of Springfield and kindly sent to the Corner. The letter which accompanied it said:

The photograph was taken in Basking Ridge, N. J., where we were visiting in July. The tree on the right is known as the "Washington Tree," because the Father of his Country, when conducting his army through the town, stopped and ate dinner beneath it and climbed into it to get a view of the surrounding country, probably to see if any enemy were in sight. In the same town, about half a mile from the tree, stands the house where General Lee was captured, as a result of his own carelessness and conceit.

Having once been led into error in referring to a "Webster Tree" in New Hampshire, I did not dare to call this an elm or an oak until I had made special inquiry, and now I have this letter:

BASKING RIDGE, N. J.

Mr. Martin: . . . It is a notable black walnut tree and very large. The roots and limbs are decaying very fast; it will not stand many years longer. It is said that Washington dined under that tree as he passed through Basking Ridge to Morristown. There is also a good spring of water very near the tree. It is more than likely that Washington drank water from that spring. We have a very large oak tree in our village, the largest in New Jersey. Yours very truly, MRS. C.

It is not very important to know that General Washington drank out of that spring or climbed that tree—although when I visit the place I shall certainly try to do both—but the picture will be helpful if it leads us to study that campaign in "the Jerseys" in the darkest days of the Revolution. You remember that Washington crossed the icy Delaware on Christmas night, 1776, and captured Trenton in the midst of a furious snowstorm. A few days later, when opposed and seemingly certain to be overwhelmed by the superior forces of Lord Cornwallis, as soon as daylight would allow it, his little army stealthily crept away in the darkness and reached Princeton, fought the famous battle there—Jan. 3, 1777—and pushed on northward. Cornwallis pursued, supposing him bound for Brunswick. Washington was not caught, for he executed another "flank movement," making a forced march to Morristown, which became his winter quarters—you may remember the Corner's visit there two or three years ago. That march, according to the map, would have led him through Basking Ridge—near Morristown—was not that the time when he sat under the tree?

Curiously enough, just at this point, the mail brings a letter from a lady Cornerer in Morristown:

There is a magnificent oak tree in Basking Ridge, said to be the largest in the State in hight and circumference. There is also a walnut tree there under which Washington is said to have eaten. According to Dr. Tuttle, the road taken by the army after the battle of Princeton was "through Pluckamin, Basking Ridge, etc." I have heard of Washington chopping trees, but never of his climbing them before. A venerable editor told this story yesterday. His sister owned a farm adjoining the premises occupied by Washington here, on which were some old cherry trees, the trunks of which appear to be well hacked. The story is that George got so in the habit of using his hatchet when a boy that he could never pass a cherry tree without having a hack at it! The old Lee house is still standing—Miss C. must have shown you the weather-vane on it when you visited the Headquarters here. L. N. M.

Of course we Cornerers understand the editor's nice little joke, but we proved in our Washington's Birthday number last year that the cherry-tree story was simply one of the fabrications of Parson Weems's Life of Washington. The mention of the "Lee house" will lead you to read over the painful story of Gen. Charles Lee's ambition and treachery to Washington.

It is a sudden transition from the great Washington to white cats, but here are four letters which will just about fill our column.

WEBSTER, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: I have this about the question raised in the last issue [Jan. 16], relative to white cats. At my father's farm years ago we had a perfectly white cat which was deaf. My brother snapped a pistol near her head and she did not wink an ear. I shall be interested to learn if it is universally true of white cats. MRS. B.

SOUTH BERWICK, ME.

Mr. Martin; Dear Sir: I number among my friends and acquaintances two snow-white cats, with not one colored hair upon either of them. They are large, full-grown cats, one of them having reached the venerable (cat) age of nine years. They are neither blind, deaf nor dumb—in short, enjoy and have always enjoyed all their faculties to perfection. Woe to the mouse who dares whisk a tail or nibble a nibble near them! MRS. L.

CONCORD, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: I am not a Cornerer, but would like to be one. I am twelve years old. I inclose a stamp for the certificate. In one of the Corner letters the question was asked, Are all white cats deaf and blind? We have a white Persian cat and it can see and hear perfectly well. LAWRENCE D.

CINCINNATI, O.

Mr. Martin: I have not written to the Corner for quite a long while. My cat and dove I spoke about in my last letter are both gone. The dove fell down our cistern and was drowned, and the cat went away. I will answer the question about the white cats. I think they are neither blind nor deaf. (I am quite sure of it.) I have a little black dog named Neg. I had a nice Christmas and got quite a good many things. One was a C. E. pin. Yours most truly, ANNE J.

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK.

Washington's Laughing. It is said that Washington almost never laughed. One exception, however, was testified to by a man who had in the Revolution been a messenger, and who brought to him a letter containing the news from Dr. Franklin in France that help was promised by that country. The General laughed heartily, waved his cocked hat, and said to the officers around him, "Boys! the day is ours!" An instance of a different character was that when present at the baptism of a child he was so surprised to hear its name given as George Washington Wood that he smiled. He surely would have had very many occasions for smiling if he had been present at all the christenings when his name was given to infant patriots!

Washington's Anger. The same wonderful self-control which was perhaps the strongest trait of his character kept him from anger as well as from laughter. The historic exception to this was at the disastrous battle of Monmouth, when he found General Lee retreating without cause. His indignation kindled into overpowering rage as he met the treacherous officer and poured upon him words of vehement rebuke. Even then he soon spoke to him in calmer mood, but afterwards ordered his arrest, the result being his dismissal from the service in disgrace.

Washington's Dignity. His hatred of everything mean had a remarkable illustration in his treatment of Aaron Burr, when at the Newburgh headquarters the latter stealthily approached the back of Washington's chair and looked over his shoulder as he was writing. His footstep was not heard but his shadow was seen in a mirror, and the General, looking up, confronted the embarrassed eye of the other. His only words were, "Mr. Burr!" but they were spoken with such dignity that the culprit, overawed, quailed before the look and beat a hasty retreat.

Fox's Eulogy of Washington. What Charles James Fox, the British statesman and orator, said of Washington in Parliament is worth remembering. "I mean no disrespect to our own royal family, but, when compared with General Washington, the princes and potentates of Europe appear mean and contemptible. . . . Without one suspicion of his integrity, without one stain upon his character, he has made himself the first man in the world."

First State Admitted into the Union. A paragraph is going the rounds of the papers that Tennessee, which is about to celebrate its centennial as a State, was the first one to be added to the original thirteen. It was admitted June 1, 1796. But Vermont was admitted March 4, 1791, and Kentucky June 1, 1792. Did General Washington ever visit either of these three States? What State was the next to be admitted?

What the Children Say in School. One of them in the physiology class was asked about the esophagus and replied promptly, "The sagarfus is fourteen feet long and is situated in the stomach."

In another class these definitions were given:

A suffix is a word with a prefix annexed.
Industrious means tryful.
Remarkable means to make remarks.

When another class was asked for sentences containing the word "toward," one bright member responded: "I tored my trousers." (It is not known to me, as in the other cases, in what school this response was given. It was repeated to me two days ago in the cars by a learned doctor of divinity, who said that it was told him many years ago by Dr. Dexter!)

ESSON FOR MARCH 1. Luke 9: 18–27.

JESUS THE MESSIAH.

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D.D.

Cæsarea Philippi was at the foot of Mount ermon, about an hour's ride north of Dan. this region are the sources of the Jordan. is a fertile country, with olive orchards, lendid oak trees, rich pastures and meadvs. Hither Jesus retired as he became more popular among the Jews and his ministry ew toward its close. The parallel passages Matthew and Luke, as well as the ninth apter of Luke, should be read.

This region was on the northern confines of e kingdom of Israel and here Jesus would id a safe retreat where he could pray alone, at is, apart from public view. His disciples are with him and, since he was at a great isis in his life when his ministry in Galilee as about to end, it was fitting that he should veal himself to them in the new light of his proaching crucifixion. This passage rerds three great lessons which Jesus taught s disciples: that he was the Messiah, that he as to fulfill his mission through suffering, id that none could be his disciples except rough self-denial.

1. The Christ confessed [vs. 18–21]. Every e to whom Christ is presented will see reans for accepting and for rejecting him. oth must be faced. The reasons against acpting Jesus as the Christ had lately been esented to the disciples with peculiar force. is popularity with the people had waned. any of his followers had left him [John 66]. John the Baptist had been imprisoned id killed and Jesus had not interfered to ve him. The leaders of the nation had manded of him some sign that he was the essiah, and he had apparently failed to meet eir challenge. The time had come when e disciples, in order to remain with Jesus, ust break strong ties and part with cherhed associations. This is the usual experice of those who set out to follow him.

The reasons for accepting Jesus as the hrist had also recently been prayerfully be re the disciples. His character had imessed the people as different from every her, though akin to their greatest prophets. e had displayed the powers which had been retold of the Messiah [Luke 7: 21, 22]. He id kindled in his disciples hopes and purses to realize nobler lives and had won eir affections by loving them. These reans had already had great weight with them. ow, for the first time, Peter speaking for em, they confessed him as the Christ, the ng expected Messiah, the fulfillment of all eir hopes. This hour, in the neighborhood Cæsarea Philippi, was the beginning of the hristian Church. It could not yet be manisted for the conditions of publicly declaring were not yet fulfilled [v. 21]. But the conssion would not have been made, even in ecret and to him alone, had the reasons ready mentioned for accepting Jesus as the hrist been the only motive. To that supreme ct of life each redeemed soul is lifted by a evelation from God made to himself alone. No man can say, 'Jesus is Lord,' but in the oly Spirit."

Two things in this event ought profoundly impress us—the power and attractiveness f the One who could lead the disciples, in he face of such difficulties, to make this onfession, and the bravery of the men who, till so imperfectly informed, against public pinion and their own preconceived judgment, could take such a position. This same onfession, made as a revelation through the oly Spirit, is our hope, and makes us members of Christ's Church.

2. The Christ misunderstood [vs. 21, 22]. he reasons why Jesus forbade his disciples announce that he was the Messiah are ade plain by the accounts in Matthew and ark. They did not yet understand him well enough to proclaim him. The people were looking for a king to conquer the Romans by force and ascend the vacant throne of David. The disciples were looking for the same thing. The revelation which had made known to them that Jesus was the Messiah had not changed their expectation of the Messiah's mission. But he now proceeded to teach them its true character. He told them that his path to the throne was through suffering, rejection by his nation, death on the cross by the hands of its rulers and resurrection. While he would not allow them to speak publicly their ideas of the Messiah, he spoke his "openly," that is, without disguise.

The disciples not only misapprehended Christ's teaching concerning his own mission, but Peter undertook to teach him a better way than the one he had chosen [Mark 8: 32, 33]. Again he was urged, as he had been urged by Satan in the wilderness, to avoid the cross and seize an earthly throne. This time it was by one whom he loved. But his reply was instant and emphatic: "Get thee behind me, Satan." The conclusion from his words is unmistakable, that no man can truly preach Christ who does not preach Christ crucified, and that those who profess to do it, rejecting his teaching that he died to ransom men, savor not the things that be of God, but the things that be of men.

3. The Christ followed. The final lesson of Jesus in this scene was taught not to the disciples only, but to the multitude. His way, whether approved by us or not, must be our way, if we would go with him. We, with our crosses, must go after him with his cross. Our cross is the surrender of all selfish aims, that we may secure the ends for which he died. If we make those ends our aims we shall succeed. There is no other success. What if a man should gain the whole world by selling himself? To have secured the world by paying for it the ability to enjoy it would leave us nothing of value What are pictures to men without eyesight? What is music to those without hearing?

Christ is distinguished from other men by the greatness and completeness with which he serves men, giving himself that he may save them when they are lost. But we can be saved only by giving ourselves, as he has done, for others. To be possessed, as he was, with a sense of the infinite possibilities of every man, and to give ourselves gladly to bring them to realize these possibilities is to be saved, to be like him. Simple as this truth is no one ever comprehended it except through the enlightenment of the Holy Spirit. Let the teacher, then, realize that to make his scholars know this truth is to save them, and that if they do not know it they will lose themselves or be cast away. Let him also realize that unless the Holy Spirit illumine their minds he cannot teach them this truth.

Jesus had refused the sign which the Pharisees sought from him, but he announced a sign which some of the people should witness before they died. The kingdom of God was to come in judgment by the destruction of the holy city. It was also to come in mercy through the power of the Holy Spirit, transforming lives into obedience to his will. The scenes at Pentecost, the destruction of Jerusalem, the greater signs of the power of his gospel continuing till now are facts of history. They are evidences to us that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God. Do we accept him as the fulfillment of what prophets promised, our Saviour and King?

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM.

FORTY-NINERS IN AFRICA.

BY REV. G. H. GUTTERSON.

On April 7, 1849, the barque Concordia cast off her moorings in Charlestown, and passed out beyond Boston Light on her voyage to Calcutta, via Capetown. She carried a cargo of ice. There were eight passengers on board, six of them missionaries whose names are now well known—Mr. and Mrs. Josiah Tyler, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Wilder, and Mr. and Mrs. Abraham. Among the band bound for Africa were graduates of Williams, Amherst and Mount Holyoke, East Windsor and Union Seminary—educated preachers and teachers. This was long before Livingstone had blazed the path of civilization and Christianity almost to the sources of the Nile. Henry M. Stanley was still a boy. No steamer had plowed the Southern waters. It took the Concordia sixty days without a stop to reach Capetown, and thirty-three days more were consumed in reaching Port Natal. Our friends suffered the tortures of Tantalus, for long before the voyage was accomplished the drinking water became almost unbearable. Yet the captain would not open the hatches for even a pound of ice to cool their tongues.

This party of scholars were of such a temper that, had a Zulu Grammar been available, they would have spent the long days, doubtless, in the study of that language. But as the Zulu had only just been reduced to writing no grammars were available. They had to content themselves with scientific researches and sweet counsel together as to their unknown future in that strange land to which they were going. In these days, when foreign missionaries are spoken of sometimes as men of limited mental caliber and small attainments, it is worth while to remember that these six learned to use with facility an exceedingly difficult language, one of them being noted for his linguistic attainments in it. Another was accustomed during his life in South Africa to lecture on astronomy before intelligent audiences in institutions of learning. Another became an author, although occupied with a great amount of general missionary work. There are Europeans residing today in South Africa who have been impelled through the intellectual stimulus received from one at least of this party to buy books and mathematical instruments for the prosecution of private study.

Moreover, these pioneers were able not only to write dictionaries and preach the gospel, but to lay the foundations of future commonwealths. One of them had to build his house, working largely with his own hands. Some of the lumber came from Norway. To get the rafters he had to travel forty miles into the Mangrove jungles, in the midst of lions, and snakes whose bite meant death within a few hours. He hunted in the plains for clay, taught the natives how to mix and mold it into brick and burn in a kiln which he had made himself. One of the party had not been trained to such hard manual labor, and perhaps it was not altogether congenial to him, but with heroic persistency and self-sacrifice he bent himself to this task also.

These men and women built churches and established schools. They obtained a knowledge of medicine and surgery to some extent in order that they might relieve suffering and save lives. One of them at least saw that the Zulus, coming out of the simplicity of almost primeval man into the ever increasing material and intellectual wants of a Christian civilization, would need instruction in the arts of life in order that they might supply these wants, hence he believed in plows and sugar-mills as well as in the Ten Commandments and the Zulu spelling-book. In many things these "Forty-niners" were ahead of their time and had a wiser outlook upon the future than even the churches which sent them out.

It is probable that in that same month of April many companies of Americans turned westward led on by the wild thirst for gold then newly discovered in California. No such impulse stirred the hearts of these passengers of the Concordia. They were indeed treasure seekers, but of a different sort, for they went to prospect for human souls. The late Rev. Josiah Tyler was the last but one of these missionary "Forty-niners." It does not take many words to tell the story of his life. After four decades of missionary service he was driven out of the tropics by an incurable malady; then followed six years in this land, which were by no means spent in idleness, for he was interested in the welfare of the colored man in the South, anxious to ameliorate the condition of the Southern highlanders, active and beloved in the church in St. Johnsbury, Vt., always zealous and well-informed regarding the progress of missions not only in Africa but around the earth. And so he filled up his part of more than two centuries of work which represent the sum total of the years spent by the Concordia Band in South Africa. Perhaps their united purpose and their achievement can be best illustrated by an incident which occurred early in Mr. Tyler's life.

It is related that when Mr. Tyler went to choose a site for his missionary home that Mr. Lindley, who was in Africa before him, accompanied him in order to give the benefit of his experience and judgment. Riding for hours over the rolling country they came at last to the brow of a hill overlooking a beautiful valley. They both dismounted, filled with wonder and joy at the scene before them. At length Mr. Lindley said, "Let us take possession of this valley in the name of the Lord of Hosts!" So they knelt and prayed for guidance and blessing upon their work. It was there that Mr. Tyler built his first home, and in that beautiful vale he lived and labored for more than twenty years.

When the two men looked into this valley there were no schoolhouses, no Christian homes, no voice of prayer with the morning sun, no hymn of praise at the going down thereof. When Josiah Tyler looked upon it for the last time there were not only the skilled artisan with his saw and chisel, the farmer with his improved methods, but the intelligent Zulu Christian in his home. There was no church spire in the landscape as Lindley and Tyler first saw it. When the latter left Africa for good there was a large Christian church, ministered to by a Zulu, educated and ordained, planning and giving to send the gospel to the sources of the Nile!

THE E. C. D. B. TO THE RESCUE.

BY S. F. WILKINS.

For the first time in the history of the American Board the Prudential Committee, in order to limit expenses to probable income, have reduced the salaries of male missionaries ten per cent., and they have cut down the grants for general work twenty-six per cent below those of last year.

This reduction means retreat from many points where Christian work has been commenced, the disbanding of numerous schools and sending multitudes of pupils back to darkness, the relegating to heathenism of hundreds of persons now under instruction for church membership.

By means of the Extra-Cent-a-Day Band the Congregationalists of the United States can add yearly to their present contributions for missions $2,000,000. If equally divided between home and foreign work the income of the American Board would be doubled and the receipts of the societies for home work would be enormously increased. Instead of closing mission schools and discharging students whose ambition is to become gospel messengers, and withdrawing our help from men who are longing to learn of Jesus Christ, we should with more than twofold vigor spread abroad the gospel story, and grand advances would be made in every department of home missionary work. We ca so easily save one cent a day on glove neckties, veils, bonnet trimmings, car fare lunches, table delicacies.

In this emergency of missions Christ plea with his followers for increased gifts. H who was rich with the riches of heaven, y for our sakes became so poor that he ha not where to lay his head, appeals to us wh bear his name to give out of our abundanc or it may be out of our poverty, not only th missionary work shall not languish in th earth, but that with enthusiasm and ente prise unknown before the gospel shall proclaimed unto the whole creation.

The E. C. D. B. movement started abo six years ago. Numerous bands have be formed, a single one having raised alread $2,087. The plan was strongly recommend in the resolutions presented to the recent N tional Council by Mr. Samuel B. Capen a unanimously and enthusiastically adopte and since that indorsement new interest h been awakened and a number of new ban have been formed.

Why may there not be an Extra-Cent-a-D Band in every Congregational church in t land? The scheme is simple; the burde when a burden at all, is light; the result money enough to send thousands of new m sengers to publish the gospel story. He is a plain way out of present distresses (a I believe there is no other plan equal efficient and practicable), and it will le surely to immense achievements for our Ma ter. Let earnest souls in every church s cure at once the formation of Extra-Cent Day Bands. Then there will be new meani and new answer to our prayer,

Fly abroad, thou mighty gospel,
Win and conquer, never cease!

CHRISTIANITY AND BUDDHISM.

Most of us have been taught that knowledge of God is confined to those who kno him through the Bible, and that he has n revealed himself through other religion Yet occasionally we have heard of perso who have never seen the Bible, but whose e periences are wonderfully similar to those Christians. May we not find in this fact evidence that God does sometimes make hi self known through other than Hebrew Christian channels, and even by means other names than those most dear to u Rev. Dr. A. H. Bradford, a member of t deputation of the American Board, which r cently returned from Japan, has given in t Outlook a remarkable illustration of an e perience of a follower of Buddha, which almost parallel to that of a follower of Jes Christ. He visited an aged Japanese woma a member of the Shin Shin sect of Buddhis who gave him in substance the following a count of her religious experience:

I am old and I am a woman, and it is not e pected that a woman will know much of su subjects, but I will tell you what thought have. I am weak and sinful and I have hope in myself; my hope is all in Amid Buddha. I believe him to be the Supre Being. Because of the wickedness of ma and because of human sorrow, Amida Bu dha became incarnate and came to the ear to deliver man; and my hope and the world hope is to be found only in his suffering lo He has entered humanity to save it, and alone can save. He constantly watches ov and helps all who trust in him. I am not a hurry to die, but I am ready when my tim comes, and I trust that through the gracio love of Amida Buddha I shall then enter in the future life, which I believe to be a sta of conscious existence, and where I shall free from sorrow. I believe that he hea prayer, and that he has guided me thus fa and my hope is only in his suffering love.

BOOK REVIEWS.

AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL.

The world owes a debt of gratitude to y man of mark who is willing to give the rength of his declining days to an ac- unt of his own life, if he only does it in natural manner and with entire free- m of comment and criticism. Such a ok as the Life and Adventures of George ugustus Sala, with its more than 700 pages, y impress us at first as overweighted th matter, but it was a life so character- ic of the age and the characters whose mes pass in review are so many and of so gh an average of importance that it is ly in the interest of some special class of aders that we could wish for a retrench- nt. Sala was the youngest of thirteen ildren. His mother was a native of Dem- ra and her mother a Brazilian with a ce of Indian blood, while his paternal andfather was an Italian. Thrown upon s own resources as a boy, he became art- , engraver and at last newspaper re- rter and correspondent and writer of itorial leaders. In the varied experi- ces of his life he knew many of the prom- nt people of Europe and America, and has pictured them for us as he saw them th graphic realism, but without a touch malice. The picture of his mother's ruggle to bring up her children in her ars of widowhood is particularly inter- ting. To any of our readers who may be mpted to imagine that the gift of a suc- ssful literary style "comes by nature," commend a sentence from this part of e book. "To her being well versed in e writings of the great theologians of the venth century, I owe the addictiveness hich I have always had for such writers Baxter, Hooker, Stillingfleet, Jeremy aylor, South and Barrow, whose sermons d essays I have been continually copying t and striving to imitate for more than rty years, and who have helped me over stile in some of the many thousand lead- g articles which I have contributed to a ngle London daily newspaper, and which e envious and foolish usually agree to y are 'knocked off.' Knocked off, for- oth! They have been ground out of my ains in the course of a life, more than lf of which has been devoted to system- ic and unwearied study." Such a book this is by no means a complete pic- re even of the journalistic life in which e author played so large a part, but it a free and brilliant side-light upon it. harles Scribner's Sons. 2 vols. $3.00.]

Among books which are essentially auto- ographical belongs also Pebbles from the ath of a Pilgrim by Harriet B. Hastings. rs. Hastings is the wife of the well-known litor of The Christian, and has been helper d sharer in his work. The story of a ildhood under hard conditions in Ver- ont, and of a Christian life spent in serv- e is full of interest and suggestion. A rge part of the book is taken up with escriptions of mission work in the South the years following the war. There is a ortrait of the author besides a number of her illustrations. The book would be uch increased in value in this busy age by he addition of a topical index. [H. L. astings. $1.50.]

SOCIAL QUESTIONS.

Missions and Mission Philanthropy, by ohn Goldie, is a contribution to the study of a great topic, but a contribution which falls so far short of what might have been possible if the author could have added to the personal experience and first-hand observation of the book a better knowledge of the work of others and a less difficult style that we find it disappointing. The author gave himself to study of the poor and to helping them. He found in the experience, he tells us, after much self-denial, that he did not love the poor, he only disliked their ways and wished to get them out of their misery into less disagreeable ones. We think that he is too hard upon himself as we are sure that he is indiscriminate in his condemnation of the ordinary methods of religious and philanthropic activity. He seems to contradict himself by saying on the one hand that the poor are content in their life as it is, and on the other that their misery makes them hate the rich. And we think he has made too little of the fact that an awakened ambition is the lever with which all successful effort works. With his contention that much second-hand charity is worse than wasted, and that we must give ourselves if we wish to accomplish any lasting good, we are in full sympathy. Those who have seen much of what the author calls "sentimental philanthropy" will echo his words when he writes, "It is strange how ready the philanthropist is to experiment upon the poor." Consideration is the first word in all social meetings, from the highest to the lowest, and with the lowliest most of all. The book is a strange compound of acute observation and partial knowledge, but those who wish to get the look of the world from the point of view of the slums will do well to read it. [Macmillan & Co. $1.50.]

In The Brotherhood of Mankind, by Rev. John Howard Crawford, we have "a study toward a Christian philosophy of history." The object of the book is "to show that the end towards which mankind are progressing is a united brotherhood." The method chosen by the author is that of historical study of progress of the sense of unity from the old ages, when the state was the unit of society, down to our own time, when the battle is on between collectivism (or altruism, as he prefers to call the recognition of the claims of brotherhood) and individualism. Most of the book is devoted to defining and tracing the influence of Christ and the church, but there is an interesting chapter given to the service of art and literature. "The great school of altruism is the family life," Mr. Crawford tells us, but only in the marriages of one husband to one wife, and in line with what he says about this matter is found, we think, the correction for what seems to us rather a one-sided presentation of the matter. "It looks like a paradox to say that man, by isolating himself in his own family, develops more love to others, but it is certainly true." As in true marriage there is a development of individualism tending toward fellowship because it makes the man himself more complete and more responsible, so in history the full development of individualism must precede the attainment of the final brotherhood. The more a man is, the more he will have to give. Individualism with right motives is the condition precedent of any altruism which will have virility enough to save the race from a return to moral chaos. The faith of the book in altruism as the promise of God's purpose for the future will not mislead its readers, we hope, into thinking that this life of ours on earth can ever be anything but a strenuous life, in which self-development shall be essential to progress and usefulness as well as efficient kindness. [Imported by Chas. Scribner's Sons. $2.00.]

Miss Frances E. Willard has prepared an illustrated handbook for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union under the title of Do Everything. It begins with an historical sketch of the movement, and is full of practical suggestions as to the best and most effective handling of the local organization, including model constitution and programs. The book will be useful wherever this form of organization is used by the women in their Christian work. [The Woman's Temperance Publishing Association: Chicago.]

RELIGIOUS.

From Dodd, Mead & Co., of New York we have three numbers of a series called Little Books on Religion, edited by W. Robertson Nicoll, and printed on good paper in narrow book form which, if somewhat unusual, makes them just right for the pocket and gives a pleasant page to the eye. First of these is The Seven Words from the Cross, by the editor, followed by R. W. Dale's Christ and the Future Life, and The Upper Room, by John Watson (Ian Maclaren). Similar in reverent study and sympathetic interpretation of the life and words of Christ, they are marked by the individual qualities which have made the authors so well known. All three keep very close to the heart of Christianity and bring the reader very near to Christ. Ian Maclaren's book especially is marked by all the power of imaginative sympathy and insight which in Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush so endeared him to the hearts of his readers. We commend it to our readers as a preparation for the communion season. [Each 50 cents.]

Blossoms of Thought is a little book of reverent and often suggestive original paragraphs by Caroline E. Russell, all of them bearing upon the spiritual life. We like the prose better than the verse. [Arena Publishing Co.: Boston. 75 cents; paper, 25 cents.]

In Salvation Papers we have a treatise on "personal salvation as an experience" in the form of collected evangelistic addresses by the late Rev. S. A. Keen, prefaced by a memorial address and including a portrait of the author. There is a force and directness about these discourses which must, if the manner expressed the matter, have made them effective as spoken addresses. [M. W. Knapp: Cincinnati. 35 cents.]

STORIES.

Wandering Heath is a book of short stories, studies and sketches by Q., which, as our readers know, is the pseudonym of Arthur T. Quiller-Couch. The scene of many of the stories is in the writer's own Cornwall, with its Celtic humor and feeling for the mystic side of the world, but the longest sketch in the book carries us to the eastern slope of our own Rocky Mountains. Even there, however, in the strangely humorous and pathetic situation, it is a touch of the otherworldliness of the Cornwall fisher folk which hedges about their descendant, the Bishop of Eucalyptus, in his strange surroundings. The book is a fascinating one and wholly free from the smirch of "sex insanity" which spoils so many recent short stories. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.]

Readers of Jane Barlow's Irish Idylls

will be glad to have a second series under the title of Strangers at Lisconnel. With the background of crag and peak and the stretch of black bog surrounding the village, the simple-minded and keen-witted Irish peasantry are pictured with episodes which stand out before us with the distinctness of an etching. A bit of real nature showing the warm human heart beneath the misery and perverted conscience of the lowest lives is that of the brother and sister in Mrs. Kilfoyle's cloak, and it is all the better for the simplicity with which it is told. [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25.]

The Paying Guest, by George Gissing, is an amusing little story of the experiences of an English family who wished to increase their income without sacrificing their social position, and of the complications which followed their reception of a "paying guest" into the household. The few characters of the book are sharply drawn and the reader's sympathy is called upon in turn for all parties to the bargain. [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.75.]

And the Sword Fell is a story cast in the form of a diary by Carrie Goldsmith Childs. The form militates against its power, and the stage is too crowded for the best presentation of the types of character. It is evidently a first attempt at story writing and there is no complete mastery of the dramatic requirements, but the spirit of the book is good. [Mayflower Publishing Co.: Floral Park, N. Y. 75 cents.]

From R. F. Fenno & Co. of New York we have The Professor's Experiment, a characteristic love story by Mrs. Hungerford. [$1.25.]

In the Ivory series we have a reprint of a part of the Stevenson's New Arabian Nights under the title of The Suicide Club. It is beautifully printed in convenient form for the pocket and is bound in tasteful covers of white and green cloth. [Charles Scribner's Sons. 75 cents.]

MISCELLANEOUS.

In Volume XII. of the Select Library of Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers we have The Letters and Sermons of Leo the Great, translated with introduction, notes and indices by Rev. Charles Lett Feltoe, and The Book of Pastoral Rule and Selected Epistles of Gregory the Great by Rev. James Barmby. In the extension of this series of translations of original materials for church history, with their careful editing and full apparatus for study, we take great satisfaction. [Christian Literature Co. $4.00.]

A Memorial and Historical Discourse delivered at the Trinitarian Congregational Church, North Andover, by the pastor, Rev. Henry E. Barnes, D. D., comes to us in a handsome cloth-bound volume with portrait of the author and other illustrations. It will be of interest to a wide circle and contains material of value to the student of American church history.

The Evolution of Horticulture in New England, by Daniel Denison Slade, is a work of leisure and research and opens in the good old fashion with a sketch of the history of gardening from the beginning of the world. It is a careful and well-written development of the subject with an evident love for the literary side of it and for the wild garden in the midst of which man makes his experiments. The book is well printed on good paper and shows the results of care and good taste throughout. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.]

From Horace G. Wadlin, the chief of the Massachusetts Bureau of Statistics of Labor, we have the Twenty-fifth Annual Report of the bureau (for 1894), which contains much material which will be of use to students in its department, and from the same hand we have received also the Annual Statistics of Manufactures.

Way & Williams of Chicago send us advance sheets of a republication of the sometime famous Battle of Dorking, or the German Conquest of England, with a preface suggesting that it may be of use by way of warning to defenseless America. We doubt whether the book is strong enough to produce this result at second hand even if any enforcement of the Jingo spirit were desirable.

NOTES.

—— A public-spirited Frenchman, Calman Levy, has presented the library of the late Ernest Renan to the French nation.

—— Pres. W. A. P. Martin, formerly of the Chinese Government College at Peking, is about to publish an account of recent Chinese history under the title of A Cycle of Cathay.

—— Mrs. Kipling's special literary service to her husband is said to be that of barring the doors of his workshop, so that he is "the most unapproachable literary man in the world."

—— The London correspondent of Book News calls attention to the fact that in December Trilby headed the list of sales in London, with Kipling's Second Jungle Book a good second.

—— A clay tablet discovered in Babylonia in 1894, says Dr. Herman V. Hilprecht in the Sunday School Times, contains what is undoubtedly a Babylonian love letter of the time of Abraham.

—— Mrs. Burnett, it is said, shows her versatility by the new stage and method of her forthcoming story, which is to be a historical novel of the time of Queen Anne. Critics who are never happy without hooking a comparison will need to recall their Esmond.

—— The Consolidated Library of New York has declined the offer made to them by Hubert Howe Bancroft of his great historical library of 60,000 volumes for $300,000. The library was collected in connection with the writing of Mr. Bancroft's histories of the Pacific States.

—— Editorial changes in the serial form of recent novels are explained by the fact that the pressure to buy stories from the most popular authors is so great that publishers have been forced to bid for them unread, and in some cases, unfortunately, to expurgate them before offering them to the readers of their magazines.

—— It will be necessary for the daily newspapers to use more care in making up their illustrations. In a recent number of a Chicago paper, says the Boston Transcript, a picture of the late Cardinal Manning was labeled, "Frau Krüger, wife of Oom Paul," and accompanied with an entertaining sketch of that excellent lady; while in another place was a picture of Mrs. Krüger, looking grand and intensely Dutchy, which bore the legend, "Cardinal Manning."

—— Dr. Dunning's Bible Studies in a Hindustani version has been in use for more than two years as a text-book of theology in the Bareilly Theological Seminary of the American Methodist mission in the North West Province, India. Published first in the vernacular newspaper of the mission, it was found so well adapted to the needs of the students that it has been issued in book form at the Lucknow publishing house of the mission.

—— The Canadian copyright question still continues to make trouble. A protest of French authors, publishers, booksellers, mu dealers, artists, photographers and engrav has been sent to the French foreign office by them forwarded to every governm which accepted the Berne convention. difficulty is with the manufacturing cla which requires a copyrighted publicatio be manufactured in Canada. The effect the protest will brobably be to exclude C ada from the circle of the Berne conventi The proposed law hurts the French publ ers, because there is a large market their copyrighted material in French-spe ing Canada.

PRAYER MEETING.

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN.

Topic, March 1–7. What Is Involved in Loyalty to Christ? Luke 10: 25–37.

A great many things are bound up in our elation to Christ, but the specific duty rought out in this passage is service to the nfortunate. Jesus, to be sure, would not ave us ignore the civilities, courtesies and bligations that belong to ordinary human ntercourse, but he is not talking here about inistering to members of our own families, r of "our set," the doing of good to agreeble persons and those "from whom we may eceive again" in kind, but he has in mind hose who are down, the lower half, the suberged tenth, the lapsed masses, as we say in odern parlance.

It was with the lowly and the lost that esus especially identified himself. While e had pleasant relations with many in the pper ranks of society, he seems to have een particularly anxious to reach and bless hose who had been left behind in the race of fe, the human wreckage which in those days s in these is tossed on the bank as the stream f humanity moves forward. Was there anyody about him lost, anyone out on the cold, leak mountain or down in the mire, he was he special object of Jesus' compassion and esus' search. So the disciple of the Lord alls short of his pattern when he fails to care or the forlorn children of men.

To select such a person or a group of such ersons as the object of special ministrations a practical way of extending the kingdom f God. Theories and conventions are all ght and schemes of social amelioration eed, of course, to be framed, but the wisest tudents admit that if one well-to-do family ould select some poor family and care for it ith Christian wisdom and tact, or if one ighly-favored individual would pick out a nely and dispirited soul and establish with true comradeship, and if this practice hould become general society would be reonstructed speedily and thoroughly.

An interest in the weak and struggling reacts beneficially on the one cherishing it. It nlarges the outlook and sympathies. Workrs in social settlements say that they beome intensely interested in the life of the oor about them. It presents phases in one ense more romantic and thrilling than are eflected from the pages of novels. But the argest value of such an interest is that it eeps religion from becoming selfish, and esus evidently felt that religious people in articular, those who keep up the institutions f their faith, who are known publicly as its epresentatives, are in danger of forgetting he wounded and despoiled about them. This arable smites the idea that religion consists n conformity to conventionalities or in the rofession of righteousness. A religion occupied principally in the endeavor to get ne's self to heaven was not Jesus' religion. Unless it have place in it for constant and pecific practical ministrations to the unfornate, it is "sounding brass and a tinkling ymbal."

At what cost of life our tables are furnished vith food may be imagined by thinking on he fact that during the last twenty-two ears 2,193 men, sailing from the port of Gloucester, have been lost at sea. This is the hief port on our coast for fitting out fishing essels. The number lost last year was 131, he largest for twelve years. Annually on he average 100 men lose their lives in this azardous business. A society organized ight years ago distributes such money as it eceives to the widows and orphans, who re often left destitute, but the total amount s only a little more than $1,000 a year.

PASSING COMMENT.

The annual meeting brings into the foreground all the various departments of church work more conspicuously than any other occasion of the year, and it gives a good opportunity to compare them with each other and with the standards which the leader of each should set for his special effort. It is sad in some instances to see how idle the Sunday school or C. E. Society has been for a year, simply for lack of energetic leadership. The conspicuous absence of the pastor from these departments in some cases is a potent influence. The pastor's interest should be felt, not assumed only.

It is difficult, in fact quite impossible, for some churches to minister to the whole man in providing for his mental and physical needs in addition to the spiritual. But a plan arranged by a New Hampshire cluster of churches points to a possibility for the intellectual improvement of the country community, which would doubtless be most beficial to many rural neighborhoods.

A [Cleveland] church [needs] to spend no time in proving the benefits of the institutional methods properly conducted. There is in its case but one side to the argument.

A new idea in sociables is suggested by a church which recently delegated the men to do the cooking. New dishes "never heard of before" were promised.

With the report from the South this week begins the series of spring meetings of the State bodies.

THE NEW YEAR IN CANADA.

The new year in Canada has been laden with events of more than passing interest. The political tension of the last few weeks has been without parallel in the history of the Dominion. War talk, not of sword and rifle, but of vote and ballot, has been heard on every side. Cartoons have been in circulation, representing in figurative terms the members of the Dominion cabinet with daggers and clubs engaged in bitter conflicts. Such things are peculiar to any land, but recent weeks have produced special reasons for their appearance in Canada.

In the midst of all this internal commotion and excitement Canada has not been indifferent to the dispute that has arisen between the United States and England. Questions that concern the motherland are of vital interest in Canada, since here loyalty is both deep and strong. Independence has its advocates, but among these it is not felt that the time has come for severance from the British crown. It is also true that annexation has had its champions, but these are few and are seldom heard. The Liberals of the Dominion have sometimes been charged as annexationists because of their desire for closer trade relationship with the United States, but a more unfounded charge was never uttered and may be relegated to the campaign slanders, alas, too prevalent in every land. Conservatives and Liberals alike are united in their loyalty to England. The great mass of Canadian people, with all their thoroughgoing democracy, may be considered a unit in their allegiance to the British crown.

Though these facts are apparent at every turn, yet nowhere can there be found a feeling of unkindness or hostility toward the United States. On the other hand, the truest good will is freely cherished, which, it is believed, is fully reciprocated. Evidences of this are continually passing between the two lands. American newspapers, magazines and journals are scattered broadcast throughout the Dominion, and in these articles are constantly appearing from the pens of Canadian contributors. More marked than anything else is the constant interchange of men and women of all occupations and professions of life. Some of the finest buildings in Canada are from the designs of American architects. In pulpits all over Canada are pastors called from across the line. Anniversaries and special occasions constantly witness invitations extended to men of eminence in the United States, whose visits are always hailed with pleasure and profit. On the other hand, all over the republic are pulpits occupied by pastors called from Canada in early life or in later years of service. Among these may be named Rainsford, MacArthur and Marling of New York, Du Moulin, Silcox and Beaton of Chicago, Brand of Oberlin, George of St. Louis, F. E. Clark of Boston, and scores of others who have reached positions of prominence in the land of their adoption. McGill University alone, it is estimated, has given to the different professions of the United States 500 of her graduates. From mechanical and agricultural pursuits there have crossed the line tens of thousands of Canada's men and women who are now citizen's beneath the stars and stripes. No tariff walls can prevent this unbroken interchange between two lands so essentially one. On both sides of the line are members of thousands of families, separated by reasons of necessity or preference, yet one in ties of kinship and blood though citizens of different lands.

In view of these relationships the reality of war between the United States and England strikes the Canadian mind as impossible. It is true that from some irresponsible sources belligerent utterances have been heard, but it may be said that the people of Canada would greatly deprecate war between the two nations. Indeed, the possibility of such a deplorable occurrence has never been seriously entertained.

The first month of the year is always filled with the annual meetings of the churches, and a study of the statements just announced reveals many evidences of growth and prosperity. Gratifying accessions are seen in different quarters and most of these are from the regular and ordinary work of the year. An annual revival does not find a place on the formulated program of the church, unless the word be understood in its continuous and not periodic sense. It is true many gladdening times of special meetings have been held, but the churches do not arrange a revival for particular occasions.

In Toronto the reports bring more than usual encouragement. Bond Street Church shows a membership of 556, and a revenue from all sources of $7,000. Of this amount $400 were applied to the reduction of the floating debt. Northern has added forty-four names to the roll, but faced a financial deficit which is already partly met. Broadview Avenue, one of the youngest churches of the city, reports twenty-nine additions, a substantial increase, and the best year of its history. The long-continued vacancy of Zion is unfortunately brought forward. Olivet, too, has handed down a like legacy, but the new year brought to the church Rev. Wilberforce Lee, missionary of the American Board, who has received a call which he will doubtless accept. Western has enjoyed a fair share of prosperity, while Parkdale, Dovercourt, Concord Avenue and Hope have been battling with heavy financial burdens, and may possibly unite in some plan which will bring about a more economical expenditure of men and money.

Montreal has had on the whole a prosperous year. Emmanuel changed pastors, giving Mr. Silcox to the United States and receiving in return Dr. Evans, under whom the work has moved forward with continued success. The reports of Calvary had as usual a decidedly missionary flavor. With Rev. E. M. Hill as pastor no other seasoning could be expected. The total receipts were $3,700, of which $1,200 were used for benevolence. Building was the watchword of Zion, and now the members rejoice in the occupation of their new commodious and comfortable home, and in their increased facilities for extended service under their faithful leader and teacher, Rev. Professor Warriner. Point St. Charles church had a somewhat broken year through the absence in England for an extended period of the pastor, Rev. Thomas Hall. Mr. Kelley, a student, however, proved a good supply, and Mr. Hall has again been at his post for several months with his accustomed energy and zeal. By no means the least interesting of Montreal statements is the starting of the new work at Westmount, where a Sunday school has been organized and an evening service commenced. Toward the new building Calvary church has voted $10,000, and already the new enterprise has met with the encouragement which its promoters desire.

From other cities come pleasing reports of the work of the year. First Church, London, borrowed $1,500 to pay off the accumulated liabilities of some years, and entered upon 1896 with a guarantee more than sufficient to meet the interest on the mortgage and the above loan. Southern Church of the same city showed an active year, and an earnestness in the building project which is now before the people. Woodstock is happy in the removal of her floating debt, and looks forward to the reduction of the mortgage and to an increase of the pastor's salary. Stratford members very naturally turned their thoughts to England, from where the return of the pastor is soon expected. A four months' vacancy was brought forward at Brantford, but it is expected that the pastorate will soon be filled. The First Church, Ottawa, listened to encouraging reports, and had the joy of the new year increased by the installation of Rev. William McIntosh, who feels justified in remaining in consequence of the gratifying record of the past twelve months A second church, too, has just been organized at the Dominion capital. St. Catherine's reported twenty new members, an increase in the weekly offering, yet a deficit of $63. The statements from other cities are not yet announced, but no doubt those already given may be taken as indicative of like work by the churches in other centers of population.

LOUISIANA CONGREGATIONAL ASSOCIATION.

The place of meeting was St. Paul's Church, New Iberia, Feb. 7-9, and it was the twenty-seventh anniversary. Congregationalism in Louisiana is coeval with the founding of Straight University, from which most of its pastors have come and all of its strong supporters. The present number of churches is sixteen, two of which are white, the members being mainly Northern immigrants. The membership is a little less than 1,200; the Sunday school attendance 1,275.

But figures by no means measure the influence of Congregationalism in the State. The churches as a whole have insisted upon morality as a condition of membership and upon intelligence as a qualification for the ministry. The effect of their example has been to raise the standard of church membership and the ministry in the communities neighbor to them.

The first afternoon was occupied with reports from the churches, which were on the whole encouraging, though there was a minor tone running through most of them owing to the hard times. The condition spiritually was probably never better. Perhaps the most gratifying fact of all was the evident growth of the pastors, spiritually and mentally, their more perfect consecration and larger comprehension of their duties. In the evening the annual sermon was preached by Rev. J. W. Whittaker, followed by the Lord's Supper.

Saturday was given largely to the Sunday School Association and the Woman's Missionary Union. Of the latter Mrs. C. M. Crawford was elected president. The report that $120 had been contributed by the different auxiliaries during the year was a fact of no little interest to those who have watched the union from its feeble beginning a few years ago.

A Christian Endeavor rally has come to be a regular part of these annual meetings, and the session Saturday night, led by Mr. E. H. Phillips, president of the local union in New Orleans, was in interest and enthusiasm all that could be desired.

Sunday was also a full day, partly devoted to subjects pertaining to the Sunday schools. Papers were read on How Much Can a Man Know of God Without Revelation, The Christian Home and The Pastor Among His People. The subjects were treated with marked ability.

The discussion of intemperance brought out the fact that the pastors are giving earnest attention to this matter, and that there has been substantial improvement in the conduct of church members in the use of intoxicating drinks. So much interest was awakened by Mrs. Crawford's paper on The Christian Home that it was repeated.

An address was given by Professor Henderson of Straight University, the moderator of the association. The subject was the Duty of the Hour. He gave a brief sketch of the history of the South since the war and urged the duty of acquiring property and education.

A sufficient um has been pledged to insure his support.

WORCESTER.—At the close of the fiscal year of he Y. M. C. A. last October there was a floating debt of $10,900, the accumulated deficits of previous years. Strenuous efforts have been made to extinguish it. and at present it has been reduced to $700, an amount which it is expected will soon be secured. A membership contest closed last week, by which 1,184 new members and $2,500 were secured. Of the individual and church contributions, Piedmont Church gave $1,278 and Union and Central similar amounts The course of popular tencent entertainments has been a marked success. ——Representatives of the American Board met the pastors and laymen of the churches on Friday evening and presented the financial conditions and the plans for paying the entire debt. The Worcester people assumed the raising of $5,000 by March 1.

For seven weeks the congregation has worshiped with its Methodist brethren in delightful services. Over $700 have been expended in new seats, carpets, painting, papering, stained-glass windows, new roof, choir chairs and general refurnishing. The company at the noon hour partook of a bountiful repast. Rev. M. L. Richardson is pastor.

PERU.—The church held its first service in the new meeting house Feb. 9. The old house was burned a few months ago. Great zeal and unanimity have been shown in the erection of the new edifice. Although without a resident pastor, the church has kept the spiritual life and activities up to a high mark. The untiring energy and wise counsels of Rev. E L. Clark, who supplies the pulpit, have been a source of inspiration. The children, who are a full third of the congregation, have raised $122 for the pulpit furniture. It was the original intention to use the insurance money and what could be raised on the ground to cover the cost, but extra expenses have given sister churches an opportunity to show their fellowship in a practical manner.

Maine.

PORTLAND.—Second. Rev. R. T. Hack has recently made a canvass with a camera of the hotels and other places where liquor is illegally sold, and given the results of his observations in a Sunday evening sermon illustrated by the stereopticon. It was a forceful arraignment of the non-enforcement policy of the present city officials. This, together with a similar sermon by Rev. L. S. Bean of the West Church, has made a marked impression and is likely to effect the issue of the coming municipal election. Mr. Hack and his wife, at a parish reception at the parsonage Feb. 13, were given a gold watch and chain and a beautiful afghan.—— The secretaries and other representatives of the A. B. C. F. M. filled all the Congregational pulpits of Portland Feb. 9, making the day a rally for missions. The Williston Church made a special offering of $100.

Arrangements were carefully made and a house to house canvass carried out. The seats are divided into sections under the care of two ushers each, directed by a head usher on the platform who uses an ingenious system of electric bells. A chorus choir of over 100 voices rendered fine music. Many have signified a desire to begin Christian lives.

New Hampshire.

ORFORDVILLE.—The new edifice cost a trifle over $3,000. Cash received from all sources and a collection at the recent dedication service left a debt of about $450. About $300 were given by friends outside of the society. A pulpit and chandelier were donated by Messrs. Aaron and Edward Hale of Boston, the pulpit Bible in memory of Mr. and Mrs. Asa Palmer, two of whose sons born there became ministers, the communion table by Mrs. Sylvester Blood, and the carpet, costing nearly $125, came from the women of the society. A memorial window to the memory of Rev. A. B. Foster, a former pastor who left a legacy of $1,000, was put in. Only four who were present at the dedication of the old church in 1833 were present on this occasion.

FARMINGTON.—The Sunday school is in a flourishing condition and on the increase in efficiency as well as numbers. The attendance averaged 110 for the month of January. The withdrawal of the resignation of the pastor, Rev. S. H. Goodwin, and his acceptance of an invitation to remain another year is a matter of congratulation.

HOPKINTON.—Union services were held during the Week of Prayer and the two following weeks, eliciting a good degree of spiritual interest and a few conversions. It is hoped the vacancy in the pastorate will soon be filled.

BARRINGTON.—During the winter the interior of the church edifice and the vestries have been frescoed, adding much to their beauty. The audience-room has also been newly cushioned and carpeted.

NORTH CONWAY.—For two winters this town and Bartlett have united in sustaining lecture courses of a higher grade than was possible for either alone. The past winter Conway joined with them.

CONCORD.—First. A helpful missionary concert, Feb. 2, had the theme, The Turkish Empire, divided into sub-topics. Painstaking papers were prepared, giving interesting and valuable information.

DOVER.—Belknap. The church has voted to close its doors for an indefinite time, and the pastor, Rev. R. N. Thomas, will seek a new field.

Vermont.

NORTHFIELD.—A portrait of Rev. Calvin Granger, whose first pastorate was with this church, has been given by Dr. Porter, and now hangs in a prominent place in the church parlor. Mr. Granger, now living in East Poultney, is the oldest Congregational minister in the State, being over 90 years of age.

SAXTON'S RIVER.—The church is rejoicing in the gift of a parsonage from Deacon J. H. Ramsey, recently deceased; also in the donation of $3,000 from the estate of another member.

Rhode Island.

PROVIDENCE.—Union. A Young Men's League has been formed at the suggestion of the pastor, Dr. Wallace Nutting.——Pilgrim. A missionary tea was held at a private residence of one of the members recently, and fifty "fragment baskets" were distributed, to be returned next fall as full as possible of savings for missions. Mrs. Stockwell of the Rhode Island Missionary Union spoke for home missions. Shehadi A. Shehadi, robed in his picturesque Syrian attire, spoke for the foreign work. Rev. F. B. Pullan spoke on Fragments.—— Plymouth. About 25 persons are expected to unite with the church as the result of the Week of Prayer services.

PAWTUCKET.—Park Place. The C. E. Society lately invited the society of Pilgrim Church, Providence, to join it in a social evening. A special electric car took about 45 young "pilgrims" to the happy gathering. This church has the largest Sunday school in the State—about 1,300 enrolled members.

Connecticut.

NEW HAVEN.—At the time of the recent Christian Workers' Convention held in the city a committee of women was appointed to formulate plans for a Door of Hope Mission for the carrying on of rescue work for girls. W. D. Hyde of Bowdoin on Belligerency versus Arbitration.——Humphrey Street. At the recent annual meeting the current expenses were reported as $4,000 and total benevolences $1,687. The additions to membership during the year were 21. The present membership is 472, a net gain of six. Rev. F. R. Luckey has been pastor since his ordination in 1888.——Westville. The current expenses for the year just closed were $2,192 and benevolences $200. Smith of Hartford, Misses Billings and Miller were detailed from the Vermont Missionary Society by Secretary Merrill for the help of home missionary churches in Connecticut. In the early autumn they came to the Exeter Church, Rev. D. J. Bliss, pastor, and proved a great help to pastor and people. At the beginning of the new year they went to the First Church, Rev. W. S, Palmer, pastor, and by visiting in the homes and holding largely attended services they have helped Christians and the unconverted alike.

WATERBURY.—Second. The new parsonage is now practically completed and is one of the handsomest and most convenient in the State. The exterior is pleasing, being a combination of colonial with modern architecture. The interior is finished in fresco and hard wood and the arrangement of the rooms is particularly convenient. It is to be heated with hot water and lighted by electricity and gas. The building is situated just north of the new meeting house, and cost about $10,000. Dr. Davenport expects to occupy it about May 1.

FALLS VILLAGE.—An interesting fellowship meeting of the Litchfield northwest district was held at Ellsworth a week ago Tuesday, Rev. Evan Evans, the pastor, presiding. Large numbers were present from here and other neighboring places. The topic was How to Interest Young Men and Keep Them in the Church. One speaker gave an account of the formation in his town of a Young Men's Club as a result of the recent revival.

JEWETT CITY.—The 200th meeting of the local conference was observed with this church Feb. 12. The sermon was by Rev. H. S. Brown. Christian Fellowship was the theme of the afternoon addresses, supplemented by a history of the conference by the scribe, Rev. H. T. Arnold, and reminiscences of earlier conference days by H. L. Reade and others.

NEW MILFORD.—In its annual statement the church reported a prosperous year and 31 new members received, the largest number in 28 years. Johnson is pastor.

NAUGATUCK.—The amount of the Sunday school collections for 1895 was $1,420, exceeding that of the year before by $170. This all goes to benevolent work and is outside the large amount of other church and private benevolent contributions. Rev. Sherrod Soule is pastor.

MONROE.—Special revival meetings are in progress and are meeting with much success. The pastor has charge of the meetings and is assisted by neighboring clergymen. The late Mrs. Jane Hawley of Bridgeport, formerly of this place, has left a legacy of $1,500 to the church.

PLANTSVILLE.—Union revival meetings began Monday under the leadership of W. E. Biederwolf, B. Fay Mills's assistant. Extensive arrangements have been made for the success of these meetings, and much good is expected to result.

GLASTONBURY.—The parish expenses last year were $2,273 and the benevolent contributions were $2,271. Of the 322 members of the church over 60 live outside the parish. Rev. G. F. Waters is pastor.

CANAAN.—The committee on the canvass has met with such success that a building committee has been appointed, and work on the new parsonage will be begun at once.

ALLEGHENY.—First. A series of revival services has just closed and great results are manifest. The church has been quickened and over 40 names have already been proposed for membership and more are expected. Another result is the formation of a Junior Endeavor Society. Rev. A. T. CLEVELAND.—Pilgrim held its annual banquet Feb. 13, with nearly 350 persons at the tables. Over 450 new members have been received in the past four and a half years. Each member wore a card bearing his name and the year of admission and two hours were given to social greetings. Officers were elected by a printed Australian ballot. The banquet was followed by a history of the year and five-minute addresses from representatives of the young men and women, the veterans, the recruits of '95 and from Secretary Fraser and the two pastors. The new year-book, distributed at this meeting, shows a membership of 636, a net gain of 99, 123 new members received during the year, 535 families, $4,779 given for benevolence, $29,358 given to the building fund, $9,789 expended by the society, $1,802 by the institute and $1,273 by the Sunday school and other organizations. The gymnasium has classes for men, women, boys and girls. At the various Sunday services, with the exception of the four summer months, more than 2,600 people have gathered every week. The usual Sunday evening congregation is regularly about 1,100, and frequently much larger, and an after meeting is held from New Year's to Easter. The church is open every week day and an average of about 1,700 persons enter its doors during the six days.

PAINESVILLE.—One of the greatest awakenings perhaps ever enjoyed in this city has recently come through the labors of Mr. P. P. Bilhorn, the singing evangelist. The meetings were begun by the Baptist church at the invitation of the pastor, but in two days its house of worship was inadequate. The Congregational church tendered its larger and more commodious building—the largest in the city—and there the meetings continued for nearly three weeks. The work has been felt beyond the churches and hundreds of persons profess conversion. The First Church will receive a large addition to its membership.

LODI.—The church held its annual meeting Jan. 30, 150 persons taking dinner in the new basement, about half of whom were not members. Over 60 responded to the roll-call. The money expended last year, $6,048, is the largest amount ever used for expenses in one year. The new building gives excellent satisfaction and the church is free from debt. Six members have been received this year, four on confession. Congregations are growing. Rev. W. H. Baker has been the pastor for over four years.

BURTON.—The church debt, $3,200, of less than three years' standing, was reported paid in full, without pledges, at the annual meeting. Most of the amount was incurred in rebuilding and since the dedication of the new edifice, in April, 1893, the women's society has turned $1,000 into the church treasury.

THOMPSON.—A series of meetings, conducted by the pastor, Rev. W. O. Town, Jan. 12-31, resulted in 10 conversions and a quickening of the spiritual life of the church. The congregations are increasing.

TOLEDO.—First. The benevolences for 1895 were $3,000. The system of giving for this year appropriates to all the seven societies. A reserved fund for special appropriations is also arranged for.

The new houses of worship at Sandusky and Wellington are nearly completed.——The church at Ft. Recovery has recently purchased a fine parsonage.——This year the Twinsburgh church has placed all the seven regular benevolences on its schedule.——The Welsh churches at Granville and Newark are being supplied by Rev. NEW ULM.—The probable formation of a Un rian church among Germans hitherto with church connection does not decrease our congre tions. Rev. J. P. Campbell is preaching at C land, where there is a destitute community, s has aroused much interest in the service and Sunday school.

FOSSTON.—This pastorless church has been ited by Evangelist C. B. Fellows, and while th have been few conversions an interest has b awakened in the community to support the chu and secure a resident pastor. At McIntosh, out-station, there were conversions and the de opment of religious life. Meetings are also be held at Erskine, where there is no church organ tion. The people at these three points have pressed a desire to secure a pastor as soon as po ble.

LAKELAND.—A series of meetings has resulted in conversions, and at South Stillwater, where a Sunday school has been formed, there is increased interest and growth in the congregations.

PILLSBURY.—Mr. W. B. Frost of Ohio is holding a series of meetings here and in the neighboring churches, where he will remain for a few months.

Kansas.

STOCKTON.—The twentieth anniversary was recognized Feb. 6 by a prayer and praise service interspersed by reminiscences and greetings from absent members and friends. The Sunday following Rev. J. K. Eckman of Osborne, its founder and first pastor, preached in the morning an anniversary sermon, and in the evening Rev. F. E. Sherman, its first resident pastor, delivered an historical address. He was followed by representatives of the various denominations laboring in the place.

ANTHONY.—Twenty-one members united with the church in 1895, but the loss of crops and business depression make it more difficult than formerly to meet current expenses. The church, however, keeps out of debt and is progressive and hopeful.

CLEBURNE.—A church of 12 members was recognized by council Feb. 12. The sermon was by Rev. C. M. Tunnell. The new organization is in Riley County in the midst of a large Swedish community, which has also a mission church whose services are wholly in Swedish. The Congregational enterprise has an important and extensive field as the only one whose services are in the English language and yet among a people who speak English chiefly in common life.

ALTON.—Rev. D. H. Platt, who is here temporarily because of the death of his father, Rev. L. H. Platt, has been holding successful revival meetings.

WABAUNSEE.—The Y. P. S. C. E. is one of the best in the State, numbering 100 active members and conducting the evening services of the church. Members of the society also hold services regularly in country districts. The pastor has recently started a weekly meeting for the study of the teachings of Jesus, which is awakening interest. He preaches on alternate Sunday afternoons in Tabor Valley district.

CHAPMAN.—Union meetings were held recently by the three evangelical churches with entire unity of feeling, and resulted in strengthening Christian sentiment in the town. Seventy young people of the county high school have organized as King's Sons and Daughters, in seven bands of 10 each, and are doing effective work. The church is continually growing and extending its influence, the average attendance at Sunday school during January being 106.

STAFFORD.—Ten persons were welcomed to fellowship Feb. 9. All the churches in town have worked in excellent harmony this winter and unusual religious thoughtfulness has prevailed.

Rev. J. E. McClain of Dover held a two weeks' series of meetings at North Topeka in January, and the church was greatly quickened.

Nebraska.

LINCOLN.—Plymouth. The ten days' special meetings, under Evangelist Billings, closed with a deeply impressive service, Feb. 9. The pastor, Rev. John Doane, had made earnest effort in the way of preparation, cottage prayer meetings having been held occasionally in addition to the regular services for some time previous to his coming. Mr. Billings was warmly welcomed and found ready co-operation from the first. The attendance was large on special evenings, such as Grand Army night, and it was touching to see a white-haired veteran and a girl of seven standing together to confess Christ. The meetings were characterized by a deep spiritual tone and plain presentation of Bible truth. Forty or fifty persons signed cards pledging themselves to the service of Christ.

MONROE AND WATTSVILLE.—Rev. H. A. Shuman, the pastor, has just closed a four weeks' campaign at the latter point. The church has been refreshed and strengthened and 24 persons have committed themselves publicly to the service of Christ. Mr. Shuman will open special meetings in a few days at Monroe.

South Dakota.

YANKTON.—The excellent meetings recently held under the leadership of Rev. C. W. Merrill have been helpful both to the church and the college.

VALLEY SPRINGS.—This church is growing under the efficient leadership of Rev. W. C. Gilmore. The Sunday school is increasing in membership and the work among the young people is hopeful. The pastor and children prepared a short entertainment as a pleasant surprise for Superintendents Thrall and Daley, who spent a night here on their way to another field.

Oklahoma.

CHOCTAW CITY.—The pastor, Rev. Hugh Atkinson, held special meetings for a week, during which six persons were converted who afterwards joined the church. He then went to an out-station, three miles to the north, in one of the hardest districts of the State, where, after three weeks' services, he had the satisfaction of welcoming to membership nine of the leading persons in the place, with a prospect of more fruit to be harvested later.

Arizona.

PRESCOTT.—The principal result of the two weeks' special meetings in January was the conversion of four Chinamen. Another, who had been converted several weeks previously, expects to return to China as a missionary and will enter the training school in San Francisco as soon as his business affairs can be arranged. The members of the Chinese school have built a reading-room in their own quarter, which is now being used for gospel meetings in their language, conducted by Christian Chinamen, who read and explain the Scriptures, give personal testimony and offer prayers. It is said that 250 Chinamen live in Prescott and vicinity. This church raised twice as much for benevolences in 1895 as in 1894.

TUCSON.—The Week of Prayer was observed with profitable meetings. A roll-call meeting was held Feb. 5, which emphasized fellowship and reconsecration. The pastor, Rev. L. A. Pettibone, is encouraged already by increasing morning congregations. More men are coming to the front in the activities of the church.

TEMPE.—Rev. Charles Kloss of Kansas City, son of Rev. Daniel Kloss, pastor of this church, is, with his family, spending the winter here for his wife's health and assists in the services of the church. His preaching is greatly enjoyed.

PACIFIC COAST.

California.

SAN FRANCISCO.—Third. Under the auspices of the Boys' Brigade Rev. William Rader has begun a series of half-hour talks on the Bible.

PACIFIC GROVE.—Mayflower. At the annual meeting reports were encouraging, all bills being paid and $25 in the treasury. Messages were heard from absent members, of which there were many, the church being located at a summer resort. Its present enrollment is 90, the resident membership being 60. During the last 20 months 47 members have been added, 128 since the organization four years ago. All losses save six have been caused by removals. The work now promises greater permanency.

OAKLAND.—First. During the past year the benevolences of the C. E. Society amounted to $400. It is now assisting the C. E. Church at Decoto, the only town in Alameda County without a meeting house. Rev. F. H. Maar, laboring also at Decoto, is devoting himself assiduously to the erection of the new building.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

One hundred cottage prayer meetings, led by Endeavorers, were held on a single day at Beverly, Mass.

The prison society at Michigan City, Ind., now numbers about 300 and more than 100 have been baptized by the chaplain.

To promote evangelistic efforts there is being sent to California societies a little booklet designed to aid those that wish to win souls.

A flourishing Junior Society, holding its services in Spanish, is to be found in Embudo, N. M., although most of the population of the town is Roman Catholic.

Besides conducting a meeting every Sunday at the Home for Aged Women, the society in the First Church, Bangor, Me., occasionally arranges an evening entertainment for the pleasure of the inmates.

A Sunday evening service at Weeping Water, Neb., was lately placed in charge of the Juniors, each of whom presented his gift toward removing the church debt and told how he had earned the money.

That open billiard saloons on Sunday in Palo Alto, Cal., were not permitted by an ordinance is largely due to the earnest efforts made by Endeavorers in awakening public sentiment.

To lessen the influence of the saloon a society of Bay City, Mich., furnishes refreshments every Saturday evening in a public reading and lunch room. It also takes an active part in providing music at other times and in contributing to the success of the enterprise in all ways.

At the First Church, Oakland, Cal., the Endeavor Society is divided into twelve posts, each having a leader and being composed entirely of young men or women. At a recent consecration meeting each post had a certain clause of the pledge about which to center the thought.

In a Florida town where there is not yet a church a society has been formed which holds meetings in an unfinished barn, when the weather permits. The zeal with which the members are entering upon the work is shown by the fact that they went to another town to hold their consecration meeting one month after organization, in order to help start a society.

A new chapter in the history of floating societies has been opened by the formation at Chicago of the first floating society on the Great Lakes, which is made up of fifteen active members and one associate. Chicago has been taking much interest in the work among the sailors, and this organization followed the series of meetings carried on by Mr. J. M. Wood of the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

The tenth annual convention of the Rhode Island societies met at Woonsocket, Feb. 12, in the beautiful building of the First Baptist Church. Mr. C. J. Morse of the Woonsocket Union welcomed the delegates and the State president, Rev. W. C. Daland, responded. Addresses were given on the Condition of Permanent Enthusiasm in Endeavor Work by Rev. A. Z. Conrad; Mission Work by Mrs. H. C. Brown; Some Perils of the Consecration Meeting by Rev. F. B. Pullan; The Spirit of the Pledge by Rev. J. M. Craig, and Christian Citizenship by Rev. C. A. Barbour. Rev. F. W. Tomkins, Jr., led the "quiet hour" with which the day's program closed. There are 128 societies in the State, 101 of which, reporting, enroll 4,287 active and 1,215 associate members; 358 have united with the church during the year. S. W. Marsh, Esq., of Newport was chosen president and F. O. Bishop, Esq., of Pawtucket corresponding secretary. Vigorous resolutions were adopted concerning the observance of Sunday, against all forms of gambling and concerning the petition to the State legislature to amend the liquor laws.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

The Maryland Union conducts a Teachers' Union Bible Class in Baltimore every Friday. The Field Record, their State organ, has entered upon its eleventh year.

A pastor in Rhode Island gains an acquaintance with each class by inviting, in rotation, one class each Sunday to spend the lesson time with himself and the teacher in a separate room.

A Cambridge school increases its average attendance and the punctuality of many classes by the use of a star placed upon a standard in each class form when the teacher and scholars are all present at the opening of the session.

At a meeting Feb. 6, representative of all the evangelical clubs and social and superintendents' unions in Boston, action was taken for assuming full charge of Boston's part in providing for the coming international convention.

Primary Teachers' Unions are taking up normal training in several parts of the State. Springfield has had such a course for several years and now Worcester, Melrose, South Framingham, West Gardner, Fall River and Plymouth unions have begun.

State Secretary W. B. Wilson of Rhode Island has sufficiently recovered from his prolonged illness to again take up the work which has necessarily been largely suspended since the annual convention in November. A convention will be held in Newport the last two days of this month.

The Tennessee Association has begun the publication of a monthly paper, The Tennessee Sunday School Worker. It has secured, for the first time, a field secretary, Rev. G. O. Bachman accepting the position. At the last convention the association was able to provide for all indebtedness and raised $500 toward the salary of the secretary.

Pilgrim school, Providence, R. I., has increased its offerings sixty per cent. during 1895 over the preceding year. The superintendent agreed that every Sunday on which the collection equaled $7.01 it would be made up to $8.00. Ten Sundays out of forty-three less than one dollar was called for to make up the $8, and on twenty Sundays the collection averaged five dollars more than the minimum amount fixed. The increase made the amount $399 for the year.

Haverhill district held its annual convention Feb. 12, and the schools of Bradford, West Boxford, Georgetown, Groveland, Merrimac and West Newbury, with those of Haverhill, sent large delegations to Haverhill. Five and ten-minute papers on The Ideal School and How to Teach a Review by Rev. W. P. Landers occupied the morning session. The Ideals of the Bible by Rev. J. M. Dutton, The Pastor and the School by Rev. W. R. Bailey and Egypt's Witness to the Bible by Rev. F. A. Horton, D. D., were strong and practical addresses.

BACKUS, Jabez, for the past eight years pastor at Westport, Ct., is spending the winter at Palm Beach, Fla. His health is much improved by the change. His pulpit is supplied by Prof. E. C. Norton of Pomona College, Claremont, Cal., who is spending a year in the East.
BURNABY, Sidney A., who was recently married to Miss Jeannette Prince of Spencer, on his return from the wedding trip was tendered a reception by his people in Southbridge, Mass., who presented them with a beautiful silver service.
DAVIS, C. E., of Hebron, N. H., Jan. 29, received a visit from seventy friends, who brought to the parsonage nearly thirty dollars in money with other substantial tokens of esteem and generosity.
GARDNER, Rufus P., Hampstead, N. H., has so far recovered from the effects of the serious surgical operation, as to leave the hospital in New York city for a few weeks sojourn in Lowell, Del., with the prospect of being able to resume the active duties of the ministry at no distant day. His many friends will rejoice with him.
JONES, David, and his wife were pleasantly surprised on their fifth wedding anniversary by the members of the First (Welsh) Church, Scranton, Pa., who left several presents as tokens of fraternal feeling.
PLASS, Norman, leaves the Vine St. Ch., Cincinnati, O., on account of failing health, greatly to the regret of both pastor and people. He is now in Florida seeking recovery.
SARGENT, Frank D., has been tendered by the church and society of Putnam, Ct., a three months' vacation with salary, the church to pay for the supplies. He will probably take a month's vacation now and in the summer take the remainder of the time for a trip to Europe.

DR. GRIFFIS ON JAPAN.

A good-sized audience assembled in Pilgrim Hall last Monday morning to listen to the address before the Ministers' Meeting, by Rev. William Eliot Griffis, D. D., on Japan and the Missionary Problem. Dr. Griffis said in part: Japan was never more truly becoming a Christian nation than at present. The Japanese are asking, as never before, who it is who has overturned the gods of Rome and Greece, who was the cause of the Reformation, who made the Puritans, who came to Japan and turned the nation toward Christendom. We answer this question in our own way; we know who it is. But our answer as the Japanese see it, in our literature, law and reform movements, does not satisfy them. Our Christianity, as the Japanese see it, is made up first of the teachings of Jesus, then of Greek philosophy, of Roman authority and law, of Stoic and Epicurean teaching and realism.

Before the missionaries went to Japan in 1859 Christianity had a subterranean history of hundreds of years. There are now in Japan Christian churches which are 300 years old. When the people first came under the teachings of the missionaries they were like children, accepting and enjoying everything. Then came the period of growth, with five, six or seven thousand conversions a year. This was the dangerous time for Christianity, when it looked as if the government might establish a state church. Now they have begun to think for themselves, and nobody can stop that operation except God Almighty himself.

Today Christianity is re-creating the country, but this does not mean that they will take our doctrinal forms. It is admirable in the Japanese that they would not yield one point to the brethren from America, even though the non-yielding might involve the loss of all aid from the American Board. They are brave enough to say we do want Christianity, but we do not want your doctrinal forms and we won't have them. Why? Because Japan has had an ethical and religious training of her own under divine providence for thousands of years which has prepared her for Christianity as well as any nation on the face of the earth. They had the discipline of the Shinto religion, which impressed upon them the principle of worship, the sense of sin and the necessity of purification; the Buddhist religion, which made them gentle and helpful; and then came Confucianism, which inculcated loyalty until it has become a national principle that binds society together today.

Japan has come to her inheritance through sore trial and labor. There were martyrs for the Christian faith before ever the missionaries came, and the first man who dared to plead for freedom of religious belief in their parliament was assassinated within three hours by ruffians who did not want Christianity. The only thing we can give them is the gospel of Christ. We cannot teach them politeness or loyalty; they know these already. They have been through every movement of the human mind that Europe has come through. Even in commercial life they have had the same documentary experience, have had cheques, manifests, insurances. Their law embraced a large portion of local liberty, and the principle of justice was all through the system. When we understan the question of holding property in Japa as it appears to the Japanese we shall cea to debate the point. According to the tre ties foreigners are forbidden to hold any pro erty outside of the treaty ports, and should Japanese turn over to the American Boar any land or buildings he could be sued in th courts as a lawbreaker.

We have given Japan many things—thre quarters of the reforms today were suggeste by the missionaries. There has never been dollar wasted of the money spent on Japa but now, we would better not send any mo men or women unless they are what the Ja anese want. And Japan wants men so hig up, so near God, that there will be no roo for petty controversies; she wants men bui on the model of the late Dr. N. G. Clark.

Dr. Griffis was warmly greeted at the clos of the address by his many friends, who hav felt that Boston suffered a genuine loss whe he withdrew from the local circle of mini ters. In his congregations last Sunday at th Eliot Church, Newton, were some who use to sit under his ministry. In the afternoo he preached at the new Congregational ente prise in Brookline.

TO THE SULTAN OF TURKEY.

Caliph, I did thee wrong. I hailed thee late
Abdul the Damned, and would recall my word.
It merged thee with the unillustrious herd
Who crowd the approaches to the infernal gate,
Spirits gregarious, equal in their state,
As is the innumerable ocean bird,
Gannet or gull, whose wandering plaint is heard
On Ailsa or Iona desolate;
For in a world where cruel deeds abound
The merely damned are legion. With such souls
Is not each hollow and cranny of Tophet crammed
Thou with the brightest of hell's aureoles
Dost shine supreme, incomparably crowned,
Immortally beyond all mortals damned.

A college education is an admirable equip ment for work, but that it is not absolutel essential for successful scholarship may b proved by the statistics of Yale, where, ou of 227 members of the faculty, fifteen (o nearly one out of every fifteen) are not grad uates of any college. The college opportu nity is a means to an end, but those who hav been providentially hindered from using i need not despair of culture because this on means fails.

MORE LIGHT FROM THE SCRIPTURES.

he editorial on this topic in our issue of . 6 has called forth a number of responses, ch suggest not only perplexities which urb many, but varied views on a subject lly connected with Christian experience. print below some of the letters received. shall treat the subject further editorially future time.

HE GREATEST MINDS LIABLE TO ERROR.

have just finished your excellent and ely editorial, More Light from the Scrip- es, and am in hearty sympathy therewith. I cannot be insensible to a difficulty ich you have raised in my mind and per- s in the minds of others familiar with the and character of Jonathan Edwards. No who has carefully studied the writings of great divine can fail to have settled one nt. If ever there was a saint upon this th, Jonathan Edwards was pre-eminently aint. The more I study him the more I impressed with this fact. Impressive as his intellectual gifts and attainments his ty outstrips them. During the painful and sperating experiences of the close of his torate at Northampton he fully exempli- l in his daily life all that he maintained hristian ought to be in his work on Reli- us Affections. "The strength of the good dier of Jesus Christ appears in nothing re than in steadfastly maintaining the holy m, meekness, sweetness and benevolence his mind, amidst all the storms, injuries, ange behavior and surprising acts and nts of this evil and unreasonable world." o one can read his wonderful sermon on e Reality of Spiritual Light without per- ving that Edwards was no mere cold dia- tician, but a man of a sweet and fervent sticism, on one side of his manifold nature be classed with Fénelon and Madame yon. As our dear Whittier so truly said him:

The schoolman's lore, and the casuist's art
Drew warmth and life from his fervent heart.

Here, then, was a man of intellectual gifts supreme that as a giant he moves among e giants. Here was a saint who, ranked his piety, must have a seat in heaven thin whispering distance of Isaiah and ul. Here was a Christian who believed st devoutly in the reality of a spiritual ht imparted to believing and faithful stu- nts of God's holy Word, and who with ong crying and tears implored the Great ther for that light as he sought for truth as gerly as the miser gathers gold; and yet at man fell into grievous, disastrous and mentable errors.

Of what use then to us trembling mortals id the eternities and silences of God is n infallible rule of faith and practice" hich neither great intellectual gifts, pro- und learning, nor the most devoted and mble piety can interpret with sufficient rrectness to protect from dark and gloomy rors? Is not some form of rationalism the ly logical outcome of your editorial? I ask r light and instruction; for this "more ht" business has ever been a source of rplexity to me. C. E. S.

SOME STILL UNILLUMINATED PROBLEMS.

As you have "more light" on the Scriptures an we used to have and somewhat more an we have in this section, will you be so nd as to let your light shine on some pas- ges which contain "things hard to be un- erstood?"

For instance, you say that "Christians once elieved that God was so angry with nations whom he had not revealed his will that he rected his chose people to massacre men, women and children, as Turks are now mas- sacring Armenians. Such a belief does not now accord with the ideas of the justice and mercy of God which we have learned from the Scriptures." The trouble is not with our ideas. The difficulty lies in the Bible itself. Please let some of that light shine on Deut. 20: 16–18. It must be borne in mind that this is not an isolated passage, but part of a system.

I perceive and feel the difficulty in the ethics but I find no relief in slurring the matter over. Besides, while you are about it let us have light on the question of punishment for "no sin," as Ruskin calls it: for instance, the horse that has not sinned yet suffers untold agony at the hands of its cruel master. But God permits it, and however matters may be balanced for the man in the next world we seem to find no justice for the horse. I wish this slaughter of the miserable nations in Canaan were the only dark and forbidding thing in revelation and experience. To say that we do not believe this or that in the Bible does not help us much, for the trouble is we are called upon to explain them. And no sooner do we get them out of an expurgated Bible than we find something full as mysterious in experience, and the latter is fact that refuses to be amputated by "higher critics." E. J. R.

THE OLD IS BETTER.

More Light from the Scriptures in your last issue is all old darkness. Not a few Christians believe that God did command his chosen people to exterminate the inhabitants of Canaan, for they read it in the Scriptures. Not a few believe in the doctrines of the Synod of Dort; not a few believe that we are all by nature children of wrath on the strength of Scripture assertion. John Robinson knew all this new light as well as you, and repudiated it. The new light yet to break forth will confirm all that is essential in what John Robinson taught. All true progress is in the line of the old orthodoxy. The Creed of 1883 teaches election or decrees—Art. II. All the new truth of Dr. Gordon's book is old error. The very title of it is an insult to those he calls brethren. "The Christ of today," indeed! "Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, today and forever."

A PERSONAL TRIBUTE TO DR. N. G. CLARK.

Though not altogether unprepared, yet was I deeply saddened to hear of the death of the late Dr. N. G. Clark. When I was a student, now many years ago, in the University of Vermont, Dr. Clark was professor of rhetoric and of English literature, the worthy successor of the honored and incomparable Dr. William G. S. Shedd, and I remember him as one of the most lovable, manly, as well as saintly, of men. He was simple, artless as a child, as kindly, genial, guileless and approachable, as he was scholarly, thoughtful and spiritually-minded. He was in his prime, an eloquent preacher, and all his college ministrations, prayers and extemporaneous addresses were with unction. In his case the pursuits of a student life had in no wise dried up the spiritual juices. He was specially a great power for good during a gracious revival that occurred in the university and vicinity during the early fifties, in connection with which, among many others, the late silver-tongued C. L. Goodell, D. D., was brought to Christ. How vividly and freshly, indeed, now that those once eloquent and glowing lips are sealed forever, come up to my mind certain of his exhortations and appeals. Especially indebted to him am I, not only for my first large and permanent impulse and stimulus toward literature, but, withal, for my first positive and efficient impression in the direction of a personal Christian life. To me, therefore, in a peculiar sense, his memory will ever be as ointment poured forth.

MORE ABOUT THE MONDAY HOLIDAY.

I have been much interested in the articles recently in The Congregationalist upon making Monday the school holiday. I say interested, not pleased nor satisfied, for the first paragraph awakened hopes in regard to the doing away of Sunday preparation of school lessons which were utterly blasted as I read on.

There must be a remedy, but, as one who has watched in a university town the working of that would-be remedy, I protest against the one proposed. Why? Because, though remedying the phase of evil spoken of, it brings others more destructive of Sabbath observance and the preparation for it.

I am a Puritan but, although I like the old-fashioned way of giving Saturday night to quiet home life, to settling of the week's affairs, to study of the Sunday school lesson, etc., I realize that changes may require new adjustments, so would not say that such a strict observance of Saturday night is absolutely necessary to the Christian life. When, however, the young people in our schools have Saturday instead of Friday given them as the last working day of the week and consequently that evening for all the gayeties in vogue—card and dancing parties, club suppers, theater and opera going, etc, all of which begin and close late, is it not easy to sleep over the Sunday call to breakfast and the ringing of the church bells? If the morning service is not lost in consequence, and the Sunday school also, will the soul be in a condition to be fed, the mind and body to begin the Christian activities of the day? Will not the conversation of Sunday be largely upon the festivities of the evening previous? Will not the society atmosphere, sweet and wholesome when in place and in due proportion, linger about that home all through the day? Could there be on Sunday comfort, order, regularity of service, right adjustment of cause and effect in a home where festivities had continued until twelve o'clock Saturday night? If I have not imagined these evil results, is there anything spiritual to be gained by changing our school holiday? With Saturday as the holiday, the pupil studies on Sunday because he prefers to desecrate that day with study.

I, too, would establish as strong a sentiment as possible against Sunday study. It is not only a violation of the Fourth but of the Eighth Commandment. It is stealing time. I would bring to bear upon those trespassing upon holy time by studying, every persuasion, every argument possible, feeling confident that the work will be far easier than that of persuading those who, under a new arrangement of school holidays, must take their social life Saturday night or not at all.

Might not a practical way of lessening the liability of Sunday study be for the teachers to make the lessons for the first hours of Monday very simple, perhaps only class work?

But how to teach by precept and example the need of the Sabbath as a day of food getting for our souls is the question. If we could feed our body, mind and soul each day of the week as they equally need, a day especially set apart for spiritual life would not be necessary, but God made the best plan for our growth. He gave us six days out of seven in which to attend to worldly affairs, shall we appropriate the last and only one left to him?

HELP FOR STARVING ARMENIANS.

Having been a teacher and helper in South Carolina during the cyclone famine, I know well and feel intensely what the missionaries in Armenia are undergoing. I know what it means to wake in the morning and see hundreds of people waiting for help and to know you must refuse half at least; to hear the pitiful, patient pleading for a little mouthful for the hungry children, and with tears in your eyes and pain unutterable to have to say, No; to see your own scholars and helpers in teaching grow thin and weak before your eyes for want of the food you cannot give and, what is perhaps harder, to see faith and hope alike failing in them under the terrible strain and with empty hands to bid them still trust in God and send them away uncomforted and unfed. Without personal experience it is almost impossible to realize the daily, hourly suffering among a starving people, or the burden of those who love and help them. Knowing this, I entreat you pour in your gifts promptly.

A Sunday school of Negroes in the cyclone district sends up five dollars, a large sum for them, with their prayers for the poor people in Armenia, thus doing their best to help as they were helped. Surely, not for ages has the Christian Church had such a direct call from the Lord himself as this one to help those suffering for his holy name. E. M.

THE PURITAN SABBATH.

Upon reading that excellent article by Henry Van Dyke on The Puritan Sabbath and the American Sunday two questions arose. 1. Why did the Puritan's Sabbath change at the destruction of the Armada? 2. Did any Pilgrims or Puritans ever have a law, either church or State, prohibiting taking a walk, smoking a pipe, kissing a wife or staying from meeting one time upon the Sabbath?

Please answer in your columns, as many another subscriber would like to know the truth of the matter even if it did deny their supposition that the so-called Connecticut "blue laws" were written as a burlesque.

M. E. M.

1. We do not know. Perhaps the Puritan Englishman, regarding the defeat of the Armada as a deliverance for England by special act of God, and remembering that the Spaniards were defeated on two successive Sundays, thereafter kept the Lord's Day with great reverence.

2. The false "blue laws" of Connecticut, composed by Dr. Peters, may be seen in Blue Laws True and False by J. Hammond Trumbull. They forbade the taking of a walk on the Sabbath and mothers to kiss their children, etc. None of them were ever enacted. The early laws of most of the American colonies made it a crime not to attend church on Sunday. The New Haven colony ordained that every person should attend divine service on Lord's Days and days of public fasting and thanksgiving on penalty of a fine of five shillings for each absence. In the colony of Virginia, where the Episcopal form of worship prevailed, every man and woman was obliged to go to church twice daily and twice on Sunday, besides the catechising service. The penalty for disobedience was a fine for the first offense, fine and public whipping for the second and death for the third. During that period, the early part of the seventeenth century, fines were imposed in England for staying at home from church.

MINISTERIAL QUALIFICATIONS.

I want to say a great big thank you for the article in a recent paper on Who Is Responsible for Our Ministers? Coming from the Reformed Dutch Church as I did, the church that is very strict as to the quality of its ministry, I have many times been amazed at the good-natured laxity of associations and councils in the Congregational fold. It's high time to call a halt. R. W. B.

PRAISE FOR AMERICAN CONGREGATIONALISM.

Rev. Dr. George S. Barrett, the British delegate to our National Council at Syracuse, in an interview with a representative of The Christian World said:

I think Congregationalism in this country has much to learn from the Congregationalism of the United States. Congregationalism in America is more definitely organized and the entrance to the ministry is more carefully guarded than it is here, whilst the general education and culture of the ministry are certainly equal to anything we find in our own land. The Society of Christian Endeavor is becoming a growing power for good there, and all the churches I visited had flourishing branches of this society. In only one thing do I consider the American Congregational churches much behind our own, and that is in the service of song in the house of God. The most enlightened leaders, however, are anxious to improve the quality of the music and the part the congregation take in it.

SOLICITUDE FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL PUPILS.

The conversion and spiritual culture of the pupils are too often overlooked by teachers and officials of Sunday schools. From the Union Park Church, Chicago, there has come to us a circular containing twenty-two questions recently asked and answered by all the teachers of the Sunday school of that church. Some of the questions are as pertinent and searching as the following:

How many of your class are church members? How many not? How many not now church members seem to you to be ready or inclined to confess Christ? With how many, within the last three months, have you had direct personal conversation on the subject of confessing Christ? What means do you employ to develop the Christian life of those of your class who are now members of the church? Do you ever hold prayer meetings with those who are already Christians in the special interest of those who are not now Christians? Do you ever invite the whole class, or members of the class, to attend church with you on Sunday? Or the prayer meeting on Wednesday night? Or the Christian Endeavor meeting Monday evening? Is it your habit to confer with the parents of the members of your class, whether these parents are Christians or not, on the subject of the conversion of their children to Christ? Have you any plans for making the spiritual aims of Sunday school work more definite and earnest during the coming year? If so, what are the plans?

WORTH SEEING.

This Florentine Divan is just a blaze of golden light. Every raised surface is burnished and the whole back flashes with light from hundreds of a hundred points.

In the midst of this dazzling display is the tufted center, covered with a celestial blue satin damask, with a floral design in lightest shading of self-color.

The back is inclined to a broad angle, and the seat is somewhat firmer than is customary in a divan. The piece is one of a suit of three, each with full Florentine Carving, finished in gold.

It is going to be harder this year to do without gilt furniture than ever before. It is now strongly in evidence in nearly every town drawing-room, and prices have been greatly reduced by the wider demand.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

The Government bond issue is still a lively topic of discussion on State Street. Elation at its great success still fills men's minds. Boston has been more affected by the loan than any other financial center in regard to money rates. The latter have ruled high here, the clearing house rate between the banks ruling at ten per cent. last Thursday. In New York the banks took greater precautions to fortify themselves, with the result that there money rates have ruled comparatively easy. The situation here, however, is growing easier, and nominal rates are among the immediate prospects.

General trade throughout the country continues quiet, but commodities hold firm in price and there is apparently no pressure to sell. It can thus be described as confident in tone with a light movement in trade. The important improvement in demand and prices has been most noticeable in hides, leather and boots and shoes. Iron and steel have reacted slightly and the production of pig iron has fallen off somewhat.

Cotton manufacturers are trying to hold prices steady but jobbers are cutting them. Raw cotton is fairly steady, and any advance in the staple would stimulate values on the manufactured goods. The woolen industry remains unsatisfactory, and indicates further shutting down of machinery. The manufacturers claim that the woolen industry needs more protection in order to thrive.

A favorable feature of the situation is the steady increase in railroad earnings. In January gross earnings showed a larger percentage of gain than for any previous month but one in the past three years. The January earnings of 126 companies aggregated $37,926,110, which was equal to an increase of 11 3 per cent. over January in 1895.

Bank clearings last week, despite the holiday on Wednesday in New York and other States, increased 10 per cent. over the same week last year, when there occurred no holiday. The stock market has been rather irregular, but the feeling is hopeful and trading grows dull when values decline. The prospects are for a broader speculation on the Stock Exchanges and higher prices.

EDUCATION.

—— Eight members of the Sophomore Class at Dartmouth College have been suspended during the remainder of the year for "horning" a professor disliked by the class, and seven juniors at Brown University have been suspended for plagiarizing in rhetorical work.

—— Dr. R. M. Wenley, formerly dean of the faculty of arts in Queen Margaret College and lecturer on philosophy in the University of Glasgow, has recently accepted the professorship of philosophy in the University of Michigan. He has enjoyed great advantages in Glasgow and Edinburgh, as well as in France, Italy and Germany, and is the author of Socrates and Christ and Aspects of Pessimism. An editorial in The Glasgow Herald deplores his leaving Scotland.

—— At the earnest request of the faculty State Evangelist Veazie held a short series of meetings in Washburn College, Kan., beginning with the Day of Prayer for Colleges. The work brought excellent results. Besides speaking to large congregations each evening, Mr. Veazie was at the college several hours each day for private conversation, and thirty persons called on him in a single day. At the close many signed cards of renewed consecration or desire to live a Christian life.

—— The Day of Prayer at Beloit marked an epoch in the lives of many of the students. The earnestness apparent was suggestive of a revival. The early prayer meetings of the students were unusually helpful, and the chapel gathering was composed of a congregation which was moved in individual cases to the first reception of the Spirit. Dr. G. R. Leavitt gave faithful attention to the work, and he has started a bi-weekly fellowship meeting which has had a marked effect among the students.

—— After Mr. S. M. Sayford visited the professional schools of Boston he went to Andover where in Phillips and Abbot Academies gratifying results attended his labors. In St. Johnsbury, Vt., fifty students in the academy have professed conversion, half of whom are young men. He spends the remainder of the month in Vermont, visiting Montpelier Seminary, the State University at Burlington, Middlebury College, Troy Conference Academy at Poultney and the academy at Saxton's River.

—— The Day of Prayer was observed at Yankton College, S. D., and in the city churches. The students held a sunrise prayer meeting, largely attended, and later President Warren preached in the assembly-room and was followed by a song service. There were also a testimony meeting, a Bible reading, a consecration service and union mission meetings, and in the evening a union prayer meeting of the city churches. The union evangelistic meetings just closed have resulted in quickened spiritual life in the church and college and over thirty conversions, fifteen among the students.

CRITICAL DAYS IN IOWA.

The same week of Dr. Magoun's death, to hich earlier reference has been made, Iowa st another of her distinguished sons, Dr. A. Marshall, who held this, his first and only, astorate at Marion for forty years. For the st few months he had an assistant who re- ved him of the heavy burdens of the parish. e was strong as a preacher and in pastoral ersight, and was one of the prominent men the State in the Presbyterian denomina- on.

That those who were leaders in advocating e "mulct" law intend to grant the liquor wer still greater privileges is very evident. was claimed that this was a temperance easure, but a bill has been introduced into e legislature granting the privilege to man- acture liquors in the State. This was an- cipated by those who opposed the law. ithout doubt, if such a law is enacted, the xt attempt will be to establish license as e policy of the State. We do not believe at the temperance people will submit. Let e Republican party attempt to do this, and ousands of her firm adherents will leave r. Governor Jackson gave considerable ace in his message to discussing the influ- ice of the mulct law on the cause of temper- ice. He made as good showing as could be made and in localities no doubt conditions have been bettered. In many counties where the mulct law has been operative there are fewer dealers paying the Government tax than under prohibition. In other counties the number has been increased. As a whole the number has been decidedly decreased. Still the mulct law has not been the only factor at work. The number has decreased in counties where the mulct law has not been operative.

Some new phase of the temperance question comes up every few months. A wholesale firm outside the State has tried to collect a debt for liquors sold to a man running a saloon under the protection of the mulct law. The district court has decided against the plaintiff on the ground that the business is unlawful and therefore does not have the protection of the State.

Those who take a stand in favor of restricting the liquor traffic and thus interfering with the personal habits of any one are classed as cranks and fanatics in this State as elsewhere too generally. Railroads have not always won the reputation of taking a high stand touching questions of morality. They often adopt strict rules touching everything that contributes to their interest. Most roads are now insisting on absolute sobriety on the part of their employés. An Iowa road has just issued an order prohibiting their employés from boarding at hotels with a bar attached. They feel that this is placing their men under a peculiar temptation and they will not permit it. Will those who have been denouncing all temperance people as fanatics denounce this railroad management for interfering with "personal liberty" and for sending forth a sumptuary order?

A Cloud of Witnesses.

Most people are skeptical about the cure of Asthma, Catarrh, Bronchitis and similar diseases, and this advertisement is intended for any "doubting Thomas" who is a reasonable person. Are you open to conviction? We know from thousands of letters (hundreds from readers of this paper, in which we have advertised for months) that Hyomei, the new and wonderful Australian "Dry-Air" treatment, comprised in relieves 99 out of every 100 people who try it, and cures 99 out of every 100 who use it conscientiously and according to directions. Here are the endorsements of living men and women whom you must believe—you can't help yourself.

Bronchitis.

Hon. FRANCIS H. WILSON, Member of Congress from Brooklyn, writes:

Temple Court, New York City, November 26, 1894.

My Dear Mr. Wyckoff: On your suggestion, I procured from your friend, Mr. Booth, one of his Pocket Inhalers. It has worked like a charm. The Bronchitis has entirely disappeared, and, thanks to you, is the first thing I have found in ten years that has given permanent relief. There is certainly a great field for a remedy having such merit.

Cordially yours, F. H. WILSON.

Colds.

Boston, Mass., July 30, 1895

In my family of three we have used the Hyomei, and have been perfectly satisfied with the result. None of us have had a cold since we have had it. I believe it is a great preventitive as well as a cure.

Rev. STANLEY SEARING, 10 Carter Street.

Loss of Voice.

Brooklyn, N. Y., February 1, 1895.

Booth's Pocket Inhaler works like a charm. The first inhalation gave relief. It is a blessing to humanity, and I am sorry it is not better known. I add my name to the "Pass-It-On-Society."

Sincerely yours, Rev. J. M. FARRAR, D.D.

Asthma.

Deer Park Parsonage, Baltimore, Md., Oct. 7, 1895.

The Pocket Inhaler came Friday morning. Mrs. Honey had been suffering severely for three weeks daily with Asthma. As soon as the Inhaler came, she began using it, and after a few inhalations, the Asthma ceased, and now, Tuesday, it has not returned. She has had this trouble since she was seven years old, and is now forty. We have spent hundreds of dollars in search of relief, purchasing everything we saw advertised.

Rev. GEORGE H. HONEY.

Catarrhal Deafness.

Syracuse, N. Y., March 6, 1895.

Having been personally relieved from Catarrh through the use of an Inhaler charged with Hyomei, I take pleasure in recommending it most highly. Mr. H. H. Warner, of Rochester, of Warner's Safe Cure fame, according to his own statement, made in the presence of a friend of mine, Dr. Frank E. Howe, Barrett House, Broadway, New York, has been cured of Catarrh and Catarrhal Deafness of several years' standing through the use of Hyomei.

E. G. WYCKOFF, No. 209 Genesee Street.

Chronic Cough.

Manchester, Mass., March 26, 1895.

Inclosed find $1.00 for Pocket Inhaler outfit. The one I bought of you for my mother did her a world of good. She writes me that her cough is completely cured. Success to you.

ABBIE J. GANNET.

Catarrh.

Boston, Mass., April 20, 1894. (Care Jordan, Marsh & Co.)

I had Catarrh for twenty years, and the last ten years (passed in this great establishment) I suffered fearfully. It extended to my throat; the base of my tongue was badly affected. I could not sleep with my mouth closed. I began using Hyomei in December, and in two weeks I was entirely—and now, after four months and no return of the disease, I can say, permanently—cured. I am going to ask the head of this firm, Mr. Eben D. Jordan, to indorse this statement. ELVIRA E. B. GIBSON.

Indorsed, EBEN D. JORDAN.

Consumption.

Buffalo, N. Y., August 21, 1895.

In thirty years' experience in the practice of medicine, I have never given my name in support of a proprietary remedy; for I have never seen one that performed all and more than was claimed for it, until I met with Hyomei, which I indorse with all my heart (profe ssional ethics to the contrary notwithstanding), for I believe it a duty I owe to humanity. Since testing Hyomei in Laryngitis, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, Hay Fever, and last, but far from being least, Galloping Consumption, in an advanced stage, which by the use of the Exhaler one hour a day, and the Pocket Inhaler ten minutes every hour, with no other medicine, in four weeks, was transformed into an assured recovery; I believe in it for itself for what it has done, and I gladly add my name to the "Pass-It-On-Society."

S. H. MORRIS, M.D., 159 Franklin St.

P. S.—You are at liberty to use this as you may deem best

Hyomei is a purely vegetable antiseptic, and destroys the germs and microbes which cause diseases of the respiratory organs.

The air, thoroughly charged with Hyomei, is inhaled through the Pocket Inhaler at the mouth, and, after permeating the minutest air cells, is slowly exhaled through the nose. It is aromatic, delightful to inhale, and gives immediate relief. It stops all spasmodic coughing instantly, clears the voice, expands the lungs, and increases the breathing capacity.

Pocket Inhaler Outfit, Complete, by Mail, $1.00, consisting of pocket inhaler (made of deodorized hard rubber, beautifully polished), a bottle of Hyomei, a dropper, and full directions for using. If you are still skeptical, send me your address, and my pamphlet shall prove that Hyomei does cure. Consultation and trial treatment free at my office.

Hyomei Balm.—An antiseptic skin food for weak chests, burns, scalds, chapped lips, rough hands, frost bites, eczema, etc. Nothing has been d... so effective for the purposes named. Price by mail, 50 cents.

WOMAN'S BOARD PRAYER MEETING.

CONGREGATIONAL HOUSE, BOSTON, FEB. 14.

The leader of the hour was Mrs. Ida V. Woodbury, field secretary of A. M. A., who read from Isaiah 9, laying emphasis in verse 11, "The government shall be upon his shoulder," upon the word his, as she spoke of the burdens brought to this weekly meeting, not only of home care but of mission and church work, with all the planning which is necessary. "We may depend too much upon our organizations; the government is upon his shoulder." Sojourner Truth preached a good sermon when she asked Fred. Douglass, "Frederick, is God dead?"

Calendar topics for the week referred to the Zulu mission, Mrs. Edwards, the first missionary adopted by the Woman's Board, having her place on Friday. Miss Stanwood gave a brief account of a work which Mrs. Edwards has undertaken in Durban in establishing a home where native women who come in to visit their sons or brothers employed there may spend the night. There has been crying need for such a resort, and some English residents, aroused to the situation, have taken hold of the matter and contributed money to rent a house and furnish it. No one is better fitted to inaugurate such an enterprise than Mrs. Edwards, although she is greatly missed at Inanda Seminary during her temporary absence.

Miss Lamson read extracts from a letter from Miss Price, also of Inanda Seminary, in which she described their Tuesday, which corresponds to Saturday in most schools. The girls love their homes, even the heathen homes, and although they may have run away from them on account of cruel treatment will not remain away more than two terms without visiting them, and like girls in our own land they enjoy the home cooking. The prospect of additional buildings and enlarged accommodations, through the generosity of the Misses Stokes of New York, has brought great cheer to the teachers. Miss Kyle exhibited a model of a Zulu hut presented to the Board by Miss Gilson, and read extracts from a letter from Miss Bigelow, who is at Inanda, also from Miss Laura C. Smith who is teaching in the boys' school at Adams.

Miss Bessie B. Noyes was present, probably for the last time before she returns to her work in Madura, whither she goes via Japan, where she will visit her brother. Her "good-by" meant "God be with you," and her own "I will go in the strength of the Lord God" will be remembered as her parting assurance. Mrs. Capron, who has known her since her birth in the India home, with motherly and missionary sympathy commended her to God.

Mrs. McClelland, president of Oregon Branch of W. B. M. P., presented the salutations of that branch, one side of which is separated from the other by a mountain range, and where self-denial is sometimes carried to the point of a whole society going without new bonnets one year and giving the money thus saved to the missionary treasury. Mrs. Barton read a letter from Mrs. Wheeler of Harpoot. Mrs. Woodbury stated that one who was present the preceding Friday—Miss Ann Kimball of Concord, N. H., a familiar figure in missionary meetings—had since suddenly passed away.

THE New England Conservatory of Music in Boston has decided to replace the organ in its concert hall with one of larger size. The present instrument is an excellent one for church purposes, having three manuals and thirty stops. It will be sold at a very reasonable price and is in good repair.

he following is an extract from a speech ently made by a native Christian in Tan-e, India, published in The Christian Pa-t, Madras. Discussing the scheme pro-ed by the Madras native Christians for a ional church, the United Church of Christ, Pichamuthu said: "It cannot be in the sent generation, for, in the first place, Indian Christian, in common with other ndus, is a strict conservative, and it would very difficult for one to bring him down m the high pedestal he occupies as one o clings tenaciously to the tenets of his forefathers. . . . Further, we notice around us that a native congregation is bound up by ties of love and gratitude to the missionary who was the chief instrument in bringing them to the light of Christ. And it is a general belief that the national church movement is not, as a rule, sympathized with, by the missionary bodies. And the Indian Christian would do anything else but wound the feelings of the missionary, of whose disinterested and self-denying labors he is the living monument. For loyalty and gratitude run in the very veins of the Indian Christian. Further, we are not yet in a position to support a church of our own. It will be a long time before we can stand on our own legs." This is somewhat different in its tenor from the statements of the Japanese Christians.

A GOOD POINT.—It has been well said that gold furniture is like cordial—it must be drunk in small glasses. No one thinks of filling the drawing-room with gilt furniture in these days any more than they think of omitting it entirely. A single gilt chair or divan is absolutely indispensable in every parlor if it makes any pretensions to modern furnishing. The headquarters in this city for gilt furniture is at Paine's, 48 Canal Street.

Senator Victor I. Spear, of Braintree, Vt., who has filled every high position in the gift of his State, says:—"My wife was troubled with nervous debility bordering on nervous prostration, and at the same time a trouble on her hands like eczema. The use of Doctor Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy produced very satisfactory results, healing the eczema and greatly improving the nervousness."

Senator Frank Plumley, of Northfield, Vt., who was Vermont's delegate to the Republican National Convention and who is a man of national reputation, says:—

"In the fall of 1892, I came out of the presidential campaign with my nervous system almost broken. Some of my personal friends advised me to take a course of Dr. Greene's medicines, which I did, with entire success. I use Dr. Greene's Nervura and find it an excellent remedy for that exhaustion caused by long continued mental work, and think well of it."

HON. CHAS. J. NOYES.

Judge Charles J. Noyes, of Boston, ex-speaker of the Massachusetts House of Representatives, states:—

"Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy reinvigorated and recreated my severely taxed nerves and debilitated vitality. To all needing an invigorator and permanent restorative, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy is the very best medicine within my knowledge or observation."

Hon. Samuel B. Page, of Haverhill, N. H., who for twenty-five years has been a member and leader of the New Hampshire Legislature, says:—

"I have used Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and take pleasure in recommending its use to all sufferers from any derangement or disturbance of the nervous system."

Add to these magnificent testimonials of the great and wonderful curative powers of Doctor Greene's Nervura, the fact that it is a physician's prescription, the discovery of the most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., who can be consulted free, personally or by letter, and you have the greatest and grandest indorsement of value and assurance of cure possessed by any remedy in the world.

THE ENGLISH PRESS ON THE CONGREGATIONALIST'S PILGRIMAGE.

Many of the English newspapers, secular as well as religious, are saying pleasant things of the coming of The Congregationalist's party to England and the Continent next June. Some specimens of the comments of our friends across the sea we print below:

Amid the wars and rumors of wars with which the year has opened, it is satisfactory to find that missions of peace and fraternity have also their place. English Congregationalists have now completed their arrangements for the reception of a great deputation of their coreligionists from the United States, who are to make a pilgrimage to the principal spots in England made famous by their Puritan forefathers, and to the places in Holland where Nonconformists took refuge from the persecution of the Stuarts. Their visit will, it is expected, be the signal for a striking fraternization of all denominations—Churchmen and Non conformists alike. The Americans are sure of a hearty welcome everywhere.—London Daily Telegraph.

It has been resolved to have a pilgrimage to this country to visit the spots from which the Pilgrim Fathers, who emigrated to America 275 years ago, mostly came. The party is to start from New York in June and to be landed at Plymouth, from which port the Mayflower finally set sail for the new world. In England many of the chief members of the Congregationalist ministry will join the visitors, and, despite the frequent declarations of the want of tolerance on the part of the clergy of the Established Church towards Dissenters, it is interesting to note that the Dean of Westminster will receive the party in the Abbey and grant them the use of the historic Jerusalem Chamber for meetings.—Liverpool Daily Courier.

It is a relief to be reminded that Christianity and brotherly love still exist in this stormy world. The English Congregationalists are arranging to receive a company of their fellow-religionists from the United States. Fortunately, President Cleveland's warlike message, and the consequent disturbance of the public mind on both sides of the Atlantic, have not been allowed to interfere with the work, and the preparations are now almost completed. The American Congregationalists will be headed by some of the most distinguished members of the sect, both clerical and lay, in the States. Their object in crossing the Atlantic is to visit as pilgrims the principal spots in England made famous by their Puritan forefathers. Our American visitors are assured of a hearty welcome, and their pilgrimage, let us hope, will aid in producing a kindlier feeling between the people of the two great English-speaking nations.—Newcastle Daily Leader.

The utter madness of ever thinking of a war between England and the United States will be demonstrated in a striking manner in June next. On June 11 a number of American Congregationalists will arrive at Plymouth, from whence in 1620 their ancestors sailed in the Mayflower. They are coming to make a pilgrimage to the historic spots of Congregationalism in England and Holland. It is hoped by this means to create a greater interest in Congregational history and to strengthen the ties of fellowship between the Congregationalists of the two countries. An English contingent will accompany the party to Holland, and arrangements will probably be made so that a limited number of English Congregationalists may make the English tour also. Dr. Mackennal, Dr. Guinness Rogers, Dr. Horton, Dr. Barrett, Dr. John Brown and others are superintending the arrangements in England.—London New Age.

REV. ALFRED EMERSON.

Emerson was born in Beverly April 5, 1812. His r, Rev. James Emerson, a pioneer in the higher ation of woman, was at the head of seminaries at ld, Saugus and at Weathersfield, Ct., and was the or of Emerson's Watts on the Mind and of other text-books on Scriptural and historical subjects. His mother was Rebecca Hasseltine, sister of Miss A. C. Hasseltine, long principal at Bradford Academy, and of Mrs. Ann Hasseltine Judson, missionary to Burmah. Mr. Emerson graduated at Yale College in 1834. He studied theology at Andover, where his uncle, Rev. Dr. Ralph Emerson, was a professor, and at New Haven. He was three years tutor at Yale in mathematics and natural philosophy. His first pastorate—a happy and successful period of eight years—was at South Reading, now Wakefield, where he was ordained in 1845. For three years he was professor of mathematics and astronomy in Western Reserve College. Returning to the pastoral office he was for a short time at South Berwick, Me., whence he was called to the Calvinistic Church, Fitchburg, where he had a most useful service of twelve years, adding 400 members to the church and sending off a strong colony.

He continued to preach as his health allowed, residing for a time at Lancaster, but now for some years at Dorchester, where his funeral was attended on the 10th inst. Affectionate tributes were given by his pastor, Rev. Dr Arthur Little, and Rev. Dr. A. H. Plumb, with whom he had been associated for over twenty years on the board of trustees of Wheaton Seminary, Norton. As treasurer of this institution, and the careful administrator of the benefactions of its patroness, Mrs. E. B. Wheaton, in the reconstruction of the seminary buildings, he rendered efficient and congenial service. He had Luther's veneration for the office of a teacher. Himself a teacher, and by inheritance and companionship specially sympathetic with teachers, the retirement of his closing years, by a singular felicity, was cheered by the society of Mrs. Emerson, who had been a principal of Wheaton Seminary, and of his two daughters. Genial and serene, full of faith and overflowing with gratitude and love, cherishing a tender recollection of his past associates and maintaining an active and prayerful interest in the progress of Christ's kingdom in all the earth, his strength gradually failed until in perfect peace he gently fell asleep in Jesus.

He will long be remembered as he was in his prime—alert, erect, vigorous, keen, accurate, thorough, sparkling with humor and working always up to the full measure of his strength. He was a workman that needed not to be ashamed.

Professor in Chicago University.

12mo, 409 pp. Price, $2.00.

A work which deals in detail with all the quotations made from the Old Testament by the writers of the New. The principles of quotation which obtained in the time of the New Testament writers are brought out by abundant illustrations from classical literature, and the various objections to the form, method, and accuracy of the quotations are satisfactorily met. The book will undoubtedly be recognized as of the highest authority on this subject. It represents ten years of earnest and conscientious study. THE beginning of Lent is a turning point of religious thought and experience to many more than the embers of the churches which take offi l notice of its fasts and observances. ie slackening pulse of social life is ac- mpanied by a quickening flow of spirit- l thoughts and opportunities, and the ry fact that so large a part of the com- nity is engaged in following the experi- ces of our Lord can hardly fail to turn e thoughts of others in the same direc- n. It would be wiser to live always in e mood of this observance, always mind- l of the life and sorrows of Jesus, and ways going on and up in great rejoicing his resurrection and in glad anticipation his return; but we are human and it is eful for us to have some definite remind- s and fixed occasions for this line of ought. The misuse of the time would be making it exceptional rather than em- atic, in setting forty days of the year art as religious and the balance as secu- r—in forgetting that this year is Anno omini, the year of the Lord, through ery one of its 366 days and nights. One ust be familiar, indeed, with the presence Christ in absorbing work and pleasure understand the privilege of special days d weeks when the soul has leisure to ink more deliberately of him and meet m oftener face to face. May the thoughts d observances of the season lead some to acquaintance with our Lord and a mul- ude of his disciples to a closer fellowship.

Trinity Church, Boston, held a large and thusiastic audience last Sunday evening. tlanta University was the theme, or, ther, the higher education of the Negro, hich that institution is so effectively car- ing on, and the speakers were men of in- ience in educational affairs. President umstead showed how much better the egro's industrial work may be when his tellectual and spiritual powers are highly veloped. Dr. Bumstead has invested the reater part of a lifetime in heroic efforts to alize his plans, and the illustrated bulle- n issued by the university shows, as far as aterial things can be made to show in ctures, how large a success he has al- ady achieved. President Eliot of Harvard uttered wise words, as did President Hyde of Bowdoin, while Rev. J. E. Smith of Chattanooga and Pres. R. R. Wright of the State College of Industry of Savannah by their addresses furnished illustrations of what graduates of Atlanta may become. We hope that one result of this meeting will be a generous addition to the very inadequate resources of the university.

The trouble in the Salvation Army is creditable to its members in this country and a high compliment to the character and work of Commander and Mrs. Ballington Booth. They have been summarily ordered to give up their positions and to leave the United States for another field. This order, under conditions recently imposed, they have now declined to obey, though they at first accepted the summons without remonstrance, and they have severed their official connection with the army. They have done a great deal to improve the methods and efficiency of the army and to win for it the sympathy of the churches. They seem to have aimed to develop its character in consonance with the American religious spirit. It was to be expected that they would gain the enthusiastic devotion of the army which has been so freely accorded to them. It is not in accordance with our national life that the internal affairs of a religious organization in America should be controlled from a foreign land. The Roman Catholic Church has been able to do this only because its membership in this country is so largely composed of foreigners, and, as these realize their citizenship, they grow impatient of interference from abroad with their duties and privileges as citizens. If, as appears probable, the Salvation Army in the United States declares its independence and Mr. and Mrs. Booth accept leadership in it we believe that such action may be best for the army and the kingdom of God.

In the effort to stimulate interest in home missions the Presbytery of New York has arranged for a great public meeting on March 2, at which President Cleveland is to preside. The actual field work of the churches is to be represented by such speakers as Sheldon Jackson and Booker T. Washington, while the element of interest in men who are much in the public eye is to have further recognition in the presence of Dr. Talmage. The laboring oar, so far as Presbyterian missions is concerned, must evidently be taken by Dr. Jackson, who knows the subject historically, theoretically and practically in the experience of many years. We hope that some of the other speakers will take occasion to refer to Dr. Jackson's recently announced gift of the nucleus of an endowment for a Christian college in Utah, which is one more proof that home missionaries believe with all their hearts and to the bottom of their pocketbooks in home missions and in the necessity of a Christian education supplementary to the preaching of the Word and the building of churches. When the history of the church militant comes to be written one of its most brilliant chapters in the eyes of the church triumphant will be that which recounts the faith and self-denial of thousands of Christian pioneers who never had their share of earthly recognition.

Students of the "institutional church" will find material for thought in a description of the activities of the Jersey City Tabernacle, which the pastor, Rev. John L. Scudder, contributes to the Sunday School Times. "The keynote of institutional work," he says, "is ministering to the entire man and interesting yourself in every department of his being," and the results outlined in this article make it clear that this particular work is really as comprehensive as the claim which is made for it. In five buildings are provided industrial training, gymnasiums for both sexes, amusements, art teaching and music, from voice culture to drum and fife practice for the boys. All this with the idea of keeping the boys out of the street and the young men out of the saloons. The result of these attractions, wisely and lovingly maintained and administered, is found in a church made up largely of young people and a Sunday school with more males than females in its membership. Throughout the work it is plain from what Mr. Scudder says that there is the attractive power of a warm and unassuming sympathy, while the aim is always to awaken an ambition and direct it into the highest channels. "It is a crying pity," Mr. Scudder adds, "that institutional churches located in tenement house districts are not more liberally supported by Christian men and women of wealth." Perhaps when we can have more men who are fitted by training and sympathy for the oversight of "these gigantic missionary plants" the question of endowment may not be so difficult.

The recent horning of the professor of history at Dartmouth was followed by the suspension of eight of the students. Many of their comrades were aggrieved because some of the guiltiest were not included, owing to ignorance on the part of the authorities. The trouble has now been satisfactorily adjusted by the restoration of those suspended to their former standing. This issue was brought about by a reference of the whole matter, after a plain and candid statement of the case by the president, to the students themselves, thus throwing the burden of responsibility upon their sense of justice and right. Their manly course of co-operation in the investigations, confessions and their disposition to sustain the necessary discipline and dignity of the college were the occasion of an arousing and manifestation of public sentiment against such practices generally as utterly at variance with the true spirit and aim of college life. This justified the authorities in reinstating the guilty ones, with the assurance that by such a course faculty and students would be brought into a closer relationship and render good government easier for the future. College sentiment has thus come in, not to supersede, but to aid college authority in the maintenance of a wholesome discipline and the cultivation of a manly honor becoming such an institution of learning. This outcome of a troublesome disturbance is a matter of congratulation to the alumni and friends of the college.

THE BIBLE AS AUTHORITY.

The Bible has accumulated authority with age. It was never read by so large a proportion of the human race, never had so great influence over mankind as today. This was to be expected. The more the truths of the Bible have been tested by more extended and varied experience, the greater is their power. We appeal to them with a confidence that cannot be shaken because the many successive generations have given harmonious witness to their divine wisdom.

Our appeal, however, must be intelligent as well as confident. We must admit that the present interprets the past. What was once addressed to human reason is addressed to ours, and our reason must approve. If it does not, we must search for some interpretation which it will approve. Otherwise we shall not convince our fellowmen of the truth of the Bible, neither shall we believe it ourselves, however vehemently we may affirm our faith.

In our issue of last week we printed some criticisms on a recent editorial, entitled More Light from the Scriptures. One correspondent is disturbed because eminently holy men like Jonathan Edwards have shown that their holiness did not prevent them from adopting some erroneous views. Another is perplexed because of unsolved mysteries common to the Bible and experience, especially because in the Old Testament God is said to have commanded the wholesale killing of women and little children. A third regards the words of the Scriptures as well as their obvious drift as a final and complete revelation of God, and sees only error in what is regarded by others as "more light" from the Bible. These criticisms are no doubt representative, and an attempt to answer questions which they raise we believe will be welcomed by many.

First, then, the holiest and wisest men have made mistakes in attempting to interpret the character and will of God. Moses, David, Elijah, Jeremiah, Peter—indeed, all the apostles—made mistakes while they were attempting to interpret to men the mind of God, mistakes that have been recorded in the Bible, and as thus recorded affect the history of divine revelation. Only one person in the Bible claims to have made no mistakes. He was in the bosom of the Father, and no one, he said, knew the Father but himself and those to whom he, the Son, declared him. We may be sure, then, that no man in the past except Jesus Christ, the divine man, has perfectly known God. Our appeal to holy men of old is never to what is in itself a final authority independently of the Holy Spirit illuminating our own minds. They learned and declared great truths suited to bring us into fellowship with God, and sufficient to our salvation. But the exhaustive word concerning the character of God and his will has not yet been spoken.

From these statements it is only a natural step to say that the Bible is the record of a progressive revelation, continually revising, correcting and enlarging what went before. The ethical standard of the New Testament is in important repects a marked advance upon the Old Testament. Christ forbade the hatred of foreigners which breathed in prayers of Old Testament saints, and stigmatized as adultery forms of family life which Moses sanctioned. He often in his teaching corrected the ethical positions of his apostles, and, when about to leave them, said that there were many things he desired to say to them which they were not able to receive. He promised them that the Holy Spirit should guide them into all the truth, and that promise is for us as truly as for them. Not yet has it been exhausted, nor will it ever be, while finite man seeks to understand the infinite God.

It may be, as one correspondent affirms, that many believe God commanded the slaughter in war of women and children, because they read that statement in the Scriptures. But if any people attempt such cruelty in our time they are certain to invoke the execration of the whole Christian Church as well as of the civilized world. According to Num. 31, Moses once caused a great multitude of mothers with their little ones to be put to death, but permitted his army to save alive a vast herd of cattle and 32,000 virgins for their own use, after selecting a certain number of cattle and virgins by lot for a heave offering to the Lord. Who in our day would justify such a deed or would believe that the Lord would accept such a sacrifice? It may be that many believe that the law of Moses [Deut. 14: 21], permitting diseased meat to be sold to foreigners, was the law of God. But, if any one in this country should be caught acting on the provisions of that law, he would soon find how decided is the disapproval of it by courts and people. It has been well said that, "where the human mind is concerned, it is idle to speak of an authority which can simply be imposed. There neither is nor can be such a thing. The real question is whether there is an authority which can impose itself, which can freely win the recognition and surrender of the mind and heart of man."

That the Bible has won such a surrender of hearts and minds to itself all the Christian centuries give wonderful and increasing evidence. That is not a confession that those who wrote the Bible perfectly understood the mind of God, or that all specific laws and precepts are fitted for every age. But it does mean that the Bible is the record of the fulfillment of the purpose of God to make himself known through human experience as men increasingly have been able to know him. The fulfillment of that purpose is still going on, and the Bible is its most efficient instrument in the hands of those who seek with all their hearts the guidance of the Holy Spirit. It requires, first of all, a will obedient to him, but also a mind diligently examining its pages in the light of all the knowledge which each succeeding age has discovered and to which, up to its latest book, its very pages bore witness.

The question is asked by our correspondent, "Is not some form of rationalism the only logical outcome of your editorial?" We answer that the rationalism which ig nores revelation or accepts its teaching only so far as the reason can explain ther is shallow and conceited. But the accept ance, as revelations of the mind of God, c what reason revolts at and conscience re jects is destructive of true religion and c ourselves. He led holy men of old. He i leading us also if we humbly seek to knov his will. It is as wrong to reject inner ligh as to reject the written word. So far as the are both from God they will not contradic one another if we reverently, patiently stud to come to fuller knowledge of him. Ther are great unsolved problems in connectio with experience and daily events. Afte all our reflection we shall find them, per haps, only so far solved as Job found ther in that magnificent epic, when he confesse that what he had supposed were within th compass of his mind were "things too won derful for me, which I knew not." But w may be sure that faith, laying hold of th unsearchable God as portrayed to us in th historic Scriptures, will never find the sens of righteousness repelled nor true worshi rejected.

WHAT X RAYS SUGGEST.

With every forward step of knowledg Christians like to think that they have take an upward step in comprehension of th thoughts of God. It is not in the realm o theology alone that the promise of leadin into truth holds good, nor is light to be ex pected only from the written word. Go has an interest in our education, and a every step reverent hearts feel that th presence of the teacher is an assurance o success in knowledge. There is a sugges iveness, for example, in the recent photo graphic discoveries which even the popula mind has felt, and which has found expres sion in sundry comments in the newspapers distinguished rather for mercurial spirit than for sober and rational thought. "W are to have complete publicity," one says "brain and heart and stomach are to b open to the gaze of every curious eye, an privacy will be no more."

Crude and wild as are these popular spec ulations and guesses, because founded upon crass materialism, and little as they expres the true achievement of the discoverers, the bear witness, nevertheless, to words of ou Lord written deep upon the conscience an imagination of the people. "For there i nothing covered, that shall not be revealed neither hid that shall not be known." T see the brain is not to see the mind; to pho tograph the heart is not to read the life a God reads it; but there is here, as the pop ular mind has discerned, an echo of th judgment voice which forbids man's sin t hide itself successfully and laughs at all th refuges of lies. "Can any hide himself i secret places that I shall not see? saith th Lord. Do not I fill heaven and earth? sait the Lord.

This, however, is not all. The discover is made at the expense of man's pride an self-conceit. The rays which pierce throug flesh, which the wood and metal of ou strong boxes hinder as little as the glas hinders the light of day, are outside th range in which our vision works. We ar blind to them—blind as the eyeless caver fish to daylight—and know them only i their effects. The terms in which we de scribe them are terms of sight, but we ar forced to apply them to what we canno see, and so confuse the thinking of many. It is not until we conceive of a world of light, of which only a part is open to our instrument, the eye, and so reach out into fields beyond the imperfection of our vision, that we get a true grasp of the opportunity which opens to us. We look upon the universe through a very narrow window, but there is wider vision for those who can see more than we.

This thought of light beyond our visual range is not new to the physicists, but it is fresh to many who read about the work which is beginning to be done in making visible pictures with invisible rays; and again the suggestion leads to words of the Book—"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." We think of the making of new glories, but perhaps it is only the improvement of the instrument of apprehension which is needed (like the opening of the eyes of Elisha's servant) to show us unexpected helps and wonders in the universe, whose meaning we imagine we have grasped. "Now we see in a glass, darkly; but then face to face."

This is a field where no wise man will dogmatize or presume, but surely heaven and earth are bound in closer union than many of us dream, and advances in our knowledge of the one are foregleams and suggestions of the other. God, who has taught us his will and shown us the kingdom of his Son in a book so large a part of which is poetry, would have our minds awake to the suggestion of the poetry of earth, in which, like students of a palimpsest, we decipher now and then the fresh music of a noble thought or line. The earth is the Lord's that it may bring forth suggestion, as well as bread, for man.

SHALL WE MAKE IT UNANIMOUS?

A correspondent gives us the following statement, which we suppose represents occurrences not infrequent, but which deserve thoughtful consideration:

Not long ago I attended a church business meeting called to consider the advisability of extending a call to a certain minister. After the usual preliminaries an informal ballot was taken, resulting in a vote of about sixty for and fourteen against extending the call.

A second informal ballot was taken, with a smaller number of votes cast and a less per cent. of noes. Then came remarks. We were urged to act not from mere personal taste but for the good of the church, and it was strongly suggested that the call should be unanimous. Otherwise the candidate might not accept.

Only two brothers were sufficiently interested in the negative side to state that they could not conscientiously vote "yes." Both these men stated, however, that, should the candidate become their pastor, he should have their loyal support. The formal ballot was cast with one dissenting vote. Then came the motion to make the call unanimous, which was carried. Is this not a fair history of many a "unanimous" call?

Now, one of two things must follow—either the recipient of the call must receive a wrong impression, or, having had some previous knowledge of "unanimous" calls, the word must convey a very uncertain meaning to his mind. Ought such things to be in a body professing to be governed by the highest principles? A minister surely need fear nothing from two such honest, conscientious brothers as those before mentioned. May the day hasten, then, when pastors shall cease to expect or demand unanimous calls, and when such calls shall not be given with any but the sincerest significance of the word.

First, we must suggest that a ballot once declared can never be made unanimous by any vote. A historical fact cannot be altered, nor can any vote alter a ballot. Of course a viva voce vote can extend a call, if the rules do not require a ballot. A motion to make a call unanimous is absurd on its very face, because no majority can make anything unanimous. Unanimity is found only in the fact that the motion to extend a call has no dissenting votes.

There is a very grave objection, beyond this formal difficulty, to any motion to make a divided call unanimous. It destroys the object of an unfettered vote by ballot. It brings an unpleasant pressure to bear upon dissentients, who do not like to appear in an attitude of opposition, and it tempts them to suppress their honest convictions. An apparent unanimity may be declared, but it deceives nobody. Perhaps we ought to qualify this statement. We have known cases where it did deceive the minister who accepted the call without being told of the previous divided ballots. The argument that the minister might not accept unless the call was unanimous shows that a practical deception was to be played upon him. The pressure which caused some of the minority to abstain from voting on the second ballot, and to let the matter be called unanimous through their silence upon the final motion, secured no unanimity. The minister ought to be honestly informed of every step in the transaction.

We have known cases, we say, where this honesty was not displayed, and where the minister discovered when too late the deception which had been practiced. It was not too late, however, for some whom we have known to reap the evil consequences which followed and which brought due punishment upon the church. Honesty should characterize church action.

It is often too much to expect that perfect unanimity will be found in a first ballot, although in many cases it is really secured. If there is a considerable minority it is seldom wise to press the project further. It may be, however, that those at first dissenting will cheerfully, after a little discussion, acquiesce. But if the second ballot does not find a united body, no motion can make it so or prevent the harm which may be anticipated.

Why ministers dislike to accept a call which is not really unanimous is because some of them know too well that a few dissentients may be expected in due time to create dissatisfaction. They can hardly judge the minister fairly. They will feel that their judgment is not respected. The time is quite sure to come when, upon the most frivolous pretexts, they will say, "We told you so." If the minister is to encounter this difficulty in his work he should be told in an honorable manner just what was the state of the case, and not be deceived by the farce of making the call "unanimous."

OUR DUTY TO THE PUBLIC SERVICES OF THE CHURCH.

It is vital to appreciate the fact that we have a duty in the matter. Our relation to the public services of the church is not merely one of privilege, great although the privilege is. We are under a positive and large obligation. All is true which is said about the superior saving influence of holy living as compared with religious formalities. But it is not the whole of the truth. The services of the church, especially in worship, do an important work which otherwise would not be done. The preaching of the gospel, the more familiar mutual enlightenment, comfort and help afforded by the prayer meeting, the careful study of God's Word in the Sunday school, the benevolent and philanthropic activities of the church and all its other forms of public service—these it is the bounden duty of every true Christian to maintain and promote in their highest efficiency.

Some churches undeniably put too much emphasis upon machinery as compared with steam, that is, they are more concerned to enter into various forms of church work than to develop that internal spiritual life and that consecrated force which are the indispensable elements of true success. And some Christians undertake too many kinds of religious effort at once and either scatter and weaken their usefulness or soon become too weary mentally and physically to do the best service. But in most instances both churches and individual believers easily might do more and better work.

When God's relation to the public worship and other services of the church is realized properly it becomes easier to estimate them and our duty to them aright. Treat them as commendable and useful and, of course, to be approved, yet as of no more importance than engagements made in the way of pleasure or business, and you testify powerfully to the world that you do not really regard them as vital. Show that you honor, reverence and enjoy them—and show it by your spirit, by the whole temper of your life—and others will believe you and also will come to believe that you are right in your attitude.

Let us never allow ourselves to doubt the value of public religious services. There would be little personal piety without them. No matter what some urge about modern social changes and the need of new methods. Human nature and its needs have not changed in two thousand years and more. History triumphantly justifies the public services of the Christian Church, and the future will only confirm the testimony of the past.

CURRENT HISTORY.

The National Legislature.

There are men in Washington who, for various reasons, wish to injure the Indian. Knowing that of his best friends those equipped with the most authority are the members of the Board of Indian Commissioners, they attempt to deprive him of these friends. Twice recently when Congress has been voting on appropriations for the ensuing year the House Committee has cut out the appropriation of $4,000 for the Board of Indian Commissioners, and twice the appropriation has been insisted upon by the Senate and restored. Last week the House Committee on Appropriations again reported adversely upon this matter, but, thanks to the earnest and searching speeches of Congressmen McCall of Massachusetts and Bartlett of New York, the House rejected the report of the committee and accepted Mr. McCall's amendment restoring the appropriation for continuing the beneficent work of the Indian commissioners. It is difficult to understand the action of the committee, and it is a pleasure to record and praise the action of Messrs. McCall and Bartlett and their colleagues who came to the rescue. Speaker Reed and Mr. Dingley deserve credit for their desire to keep the national expenditures within reasonable limits, especially at a time when the revenues are so deficient, but there are other branches of the public service that can stand the pruning knife better than the Indian service. The House, sitting in committee of the whole, by a vote of 93 to 64 has shut off all appropriations to sectarian schools for Indians. This is a blow at the Roman Catholics, taking $250,000 from them at one fell swoop.

Congressman Gillett of Massachusetts is showing commendable interest in many reforms, and a bill introduced by him making one year's residence in a territory a prerequisite to obtaining a divorce there has been favorably reported by the committee to which it was referred, and will pass probably. Senator Hoar last week also showed his interest in the subject of marriage and divorce reform by insisting on amendments to the marriage law of the District of Columbia, which will guard American women against the rapacity of alien adventurers and make it more difficult for European courts to repudiate the validity of marriages performed in the District.

Conciliation and Arbitration for Anglo-Americans.

The work of conciliation between Great Britain and Venezuela on the one hand and Great Britain and the United States proceeds. While Lord Salisbury and Mr. Olney are working diplomatically, it is confidently believed, toward that end, public sentiment in Great Britain and the United States is insisting more and more strenuously that peace must reign. In editorials, speeches and interviews British editors and men of affairs are informing Lord Salisbury that now is the opportune time for putting an end to the dispute and laying the foundations for a permanent court or tribunal, to which all such controversies may be referred in the future. Mr. Smalley, the correspondent in this country of the London Times, has urged the merits of a joint commission to determine the Venezuela boundary dispute, and the Times has indorsed the plan. Lord Rosebery, the ex-Liberal leader, has made known the interesting fact that while he was in power he endeavored to further the plan of a permanent court of arbitration, and he asserts that dealing directly with the United States rather than with Venezuela would be much preferable in further negotiations respecting the boundary. While this probably is true, looking at the question from the British standpoint, our representatives should be careful lest, in accepting authority to act for Venezuela in this case, they establish a precedent committing us to the rôle of protector of other American nations, responsible for all their misdeeds as well as arbiter of their destinies. Our contention thus far has simply been that Great Britain must deal fairly with Venezuela, and it is by no means certain that Venezuela or her sister republics wish us to assume any such protectorate as Lord Rosebery hints at, or that they would consent to it.

In this country the movement toward a permanent arbitration tribunal has gained marked headway. On Washington's Birthday and the following Sunday at many local celebrations addresses were made and resolutions passed supporting the plan. In New York city, on the 18th, a meeting was held at the home of Mr. William E. Dodge, and such men as Bishop Potter, Mr. Chauncey Depew, Mr. William E. Dodge and Mr. Henry E. Howland were sent as delegates to the conference in Philadelphia. Those present at Mr. Dodge's home listened to earnest, enthusiastic speeches by ex-Mayor Abram S. Hewitt, Mr. Chauncey Depew, Hon. Seth Low, Dr. Lyman Abbott and his brother, Austin Abbott. They passed resolutions indorsing the plan of a permanent arbitration tribunal for Anglo-American differences, and favored the summoning of a conference in Washington, at the earliest practicable date, of representative citizens from all parts of the country, to voice the feeling of the people and bring pressure to bear upon legislators.

On the 22d old Independence Hall, Philadelphia, was the scene of a gathering as notable and prophetic as any it has seen in many a day. Men like Rev. Dr. Washington Gladden of Columbus, Richard Henry Dana of Boston, President Hyde of Bowdoin, Austin Abbott, Felix Adler and Bishop Henry C. Potter of New York city addressed large popular assemblies. The delegates listened to carefully prepared papers setting forth the legal problems involved and then conferred about ways and means of arousing public sentiment and securing legislative action. The President of the United States sent a letter in which he said that it was entirely unnecessary for him to assure those present that he was "in hearty sympathy with any movement that tends to the establishment of peaceful agencies for the adjustment of international disputes," but he begged leave to insist that "the subject should be discussed with a clear perception of all the features belonging to it, and in a spirit of patriotism as well as love for mankind." A cable message from London brought greetings, appropriate to Washington's Birthday, from such men and women as Dr. Parker, Dr. John Clifford, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, Dean Farrar, the Bishop of Durham, Lord Playfair, Sir John Lubbock and Lady Henry Somerset and the expression of the hope that through a permanent court of arbitration all differences arising in the English-speaking family in the future might be peacefully and honorably adjusted. George Washington's spirit, we venture to imagine, revisited the hall made sacred by his deeds and words and said, "Amen."

Uncle Sam Refuses to Be a Scavenger.

The verdict obtained in Chicago recently against a publisher of a "flash" newspaper which printed indecent literature and advertisements daily, and the punishment by a fine of $2,000 and imprisonment of the proprietor for two years, is so encouraging to the Post Office Department, which has been ably seconded by the Department of Justice, that their attention now will be turned toward journals in New York, Boston and Kansas City. These hitherto have had unrestricted sway as poisoners of the well-springs of society. It is to be hoped that this good work, so auspiciously begun, will be pressed most earnestly, and that juries and district attorneys may be found who will do their duty as faithfully as those responsible for the Chicago verdict. It is not particularly flattering to the legal profession to be told that the greatest difficulty heretofore in dealing with this class of offenders has arisen from the reluctance of district attorneys to invite the enmity of editors and publishers.

Ex-Gov. George D. Robinson.

The late George Dexter Robinson, ex-governor of Massachusetts, who died Feb. 22, aged sixty-two years, was born on a farm in the historic town of Lexington, two facts which doubtless had much to do with shaping his character and career. He graduated at Harvard in 1856, taught school for nine years and then entered the legal profession. His career as a legislator began in 1874 as a member of the lower house of the General Court of Massachusetts, from which he graduated to the State Senate. In 1877 he was translated to Washington, where he served until 1883 as a most conscientious and influential member of the House of Representatives. The greatest service he rendered to his native State was his successful campaign against Benjamin F. Butler, in which the latter was defeated and relegated to the ranks of private life after a career as governor not at all creditable to the State, and the former became governor in 1883. Re-elected in 1884 and 1885, Governor Robinson served the commonwealth and the people as few men have. Since 1886 he has been leader of the bar of the State, generally considered to be one of the ablest of Massachusetts lawyers, and a most valuable counselor in the Republican party's affairs. There are not a few of his admirers who wish that he had been more discriminating as a lawyer and refrained from putting his services at the command of clients when their purposes were so generally conceded to be inimical to the interests of the plain people of the State. Every time an ex-governor of the State of Massachusetts appears as counsel for corporations or individuals that public sentiment holds in suspicion, he brings the legal profession into disrepute and sullies the honor of the State that has honored him. Of late there have been too many instances of this tendency.

Turkey, Great Britain and Egypt.

Zeitoun has surrendered to the Turk and its residents thus far have not suffered from Turkish breach of plighted faith, but starvation is staring hundreds in the face and sickness is widespread. Miss Barton wishes to go there, but has not gained permission. Two of her assistants are about setting forth for Harpoot, and the cable messages from Constantinople tell of pledges from the Porte that Miss Barton and her assistants are to be unrestricted and that now is the time for relief funds from America and England to pour in. We hope for much from this, but can scarcely be enthusiastic about the outlook. Credit should be heartily given to six Turkish officials in Oorfa, near Aintab, who faced a mob on Jan. 1 and saved Miss Corinna Shattuck from death or a worse fate.

Turkey is reported to have made an offer to Great Britain respecting the latter's tenure in Egypt, which the Porte hopes will atone for any concessions it may have made to Russia, but the report is vague and unintelligible without more light.

NOTES.

Queen Victoria's opposition has not been able to prevent the election of Sir John Millais as president of the British Royal Academy as successor of Sir Frederick Leighton.

The release of Mrs. Maybrick, which the British home secretary has promised, will please not a few of her fellow-Americans, who have never believed her guilty and have labored incessantly for a reconsideration of her case. Chief among these is Gail Hamilton.

Dr. Jameson, the filibuster, has arrived in London with a large number of his followers. The Transvaal Republic handsomely surrendered to Great Britain the duty of disciplining these men, and British honor is pledged to see that this duty is fearlessly and thoroughly performed.

The death of "Bill" Nye removes one who pleased many by his humor, which, however, was not always that of the most refined or spontaneous type. The suicide of Hon. M. D. Harter of Ohio is deplorable. It takes from the ranks of the party with which he was identified one of its sanest financiers.

Governor Morton of New York State has signed the law enacted by the legislature retaliating upon Germany for the exclusion of American life insurance companies, and already the superintendent of the insurance department of the State has made discriminations against German companies. The lex talionis may affect Germany since diplomacy cannot.

The election of John Dillon as leader of the anti-Parnellite faction in the House of Commons has not conduced to harmony, and the summary treatment given to the petition of the Irish for the release of political prisoners, a petition re-enforced by the pleas of Professor Lecky, the historian, now an M. P. from Dublin, shows how hostile the dominant party in Great Britain still is to the cause of Irish Home Rule.

Senator Lodge, in his speech on the Cuban revolution, Spain's treatment of her richest province, and the past relations of Spain and the United States, revealed his breadth of sympathy and wealth of information, and said that which the citizens of Massachusetts will consider timely and creditable. Fate is inexorably working for Cuban independence, and the question for the United States to settle is whether, on the grounds of humanity, she ought not to interpose and save Cuba from further massacre and oppression and Spain from useless further contraction of a debt she can never pay.

Following the example of Mr. Reed and feeling the same pressure which our national legislature felt in common with most other modern deliberative bodies, Mr. Balfour has given notice that the ministry proposes to so change the rules of procedure in the House of Commons as to give greater precedence and more time to the discussion of imperial affairs. There is much opposition among Conservatives, but it is a change likely to be indorsed by the members of Parliament. As national interests grow vaster and civilization more complex, while the days continue to contain only twenty-four hours, it is inevitable that personal interests and idiosyncrasies should be shoved aside and suppressed.

IN BRIEF.

The Yale Divinity School is to be congratulated most heartily. Rev. John Watson (Ian Maclaren) will give the Lyman Beecher course of lectures next fall.

The response to our special offer of the paper—twelve weeks for twenty-five cents, together with a copy of The Bonnie Brier Bush—exceeds our most sanguine expectations.

The Nonconformist conscience did its best to kill home rule and succeeded in killing its great advocate.—The Pilot.

The factional fights of Irish malcontents have killed home rule for Ireland; and as for Mr. Parnell, he killed himself.

Few men have been sought as peacemakers in church quarrels so often as Dr. Quint. Though his article this week cites only instances of such difficulties in the distant past, this seems to be especially a time when the suggestions he makes deserve careful attention in a number of places.

Forty-nine names added to lists already published make the number of pledges to the General Howard Roll of Honor 683. The secretaries confidently expect that another week will see the 700 mark passed. Then half of the desired number will have been secured and the last half, it is hoped, will materialize more rapidly than the first.

The Baptists have been planning to hold their anniversary next May in Portland, Ore., and half fares have been secured on the railroads. But hard times and the destruction of their publishing house in Philadelphia by fire have discouraged them from attempting to hold a meeting on the Pacific Coast. They need to have a large assembly this year. Will Congregationalists hold to their purpose to go West in 1898?

The Center Church of New Haven, Ct., Dr. Newman Smyth, pastor, has invited the Congregational Home Missionary Society to hold it next (seventieth) annual meeting there in the first week of June, 1896. Though the executive committee has not yet taken formal action, the invitation will no doubt be accepted, bringing the home missionary anniversary for the first time into New England, whence for nearly seventy years the society has been drawing the bulk of its resources.

After a prosperous pastorate of eleven years, Rev. D. N. Beach last Sunday resigned the pastorate of the Prospect Street Church, Cambridge, to accept that of Plymouth Church, Minneapolis. Few men in this section have had more influential ministries than he. Not only the church but the city will deeply regret his departure. We understand that one of the chief considerations in his decision is the health of his wife, who is now in the West because she is unable to endure the winter climate of the seaboard. Plymouth Church is to be congratulated.

A somewhat unusual communication is that which the First Congregational Church of Detroit has addressed to the Eliot Church of Newton, containing a series of resolutions recounting the inspiring words, kindly deeds and abounding sympathy of Rev. and Mrs. W. H. Davis during the last twelve years of faithful service. With such a letter of commendation the people of Eliot Church must not only receive their new pastor with a new assurance of liking, but have a real sympathy with the church in Detroit which has felt itself obliged to give him up to them. He is to be installed the third week in April.

The death, on Monday, of Henry C. Bowen at the age of eighty-three removes one who has been a prominent figure in New York and Brooklyn for many years. A blunt and pronounced personality, his indomitable will and untiring energy have helped to give the Independent international recognition as a powerful and able journal. If Dr. Ward, as is likely, is now promoted to the position of editor-in-chief, we shall look for some modifications of the paper in important particulars. It will not be easy, however, for him to improve upon certain features which were originated and developed by the man who has just passed away.

A correspondent of the London Standard writes from Germany that the dislike of England, which has found such remarkable expression in connection with the troubles in the Transvaal, dates back to the time when Frederick the Great was abandoned by England during the Seven Years' War, and has gathered volume ever since. If this be not going too far afield to seek the origin of a feeling which just now is very manifest, it is an interesting example of the survival of ancient prejudice and of the mischief which one man (in this instance Lord Bute) can work in the handling of international relations.

Americans will be amused, we think, by a specimen of the address which was the occasion of the protest which Minister Taylor made to the Spanish Government the other day. It was delivered before a geographical society in Madrid by the commander of the caravel Santa Maria, which came to this country to take part in the Columbian Exposition. This is the way he saw us. "In America there is no family. Society goes on with no other ideal than dollars, without a thought of representing anything in the history of the world. . . . It is a country without religion, without family, without ideals, and will collapse the day its material prosperity is imperiled." This looks a little as if Señor Concas had made most of his observations in the stockyards of Chicago.

A sensible editorial in the New York Christian Advocate is worth a reference for the sake of some of our older readers who can remember the force of Methodist opinion in some quarters long ago upon the question of the proper attitude in prayer. "While kneeling is undoubtedly one of the best forms of position for devotion," says the Advocate, "it has no pre-eminence over any other attitude. Thus, a man who wishes to pray may make his choice of every possible attitude. He may stand, sit, bow, kneel or prostrate himself at full length upon his bed, the ground, or the floor, but whichever attitude he chooses it must be to him the best expression at the time of his actual state of feeling." This is another evidence of the way in which men are throwing off the yoke of customs and opinions which belong to the category of foolish and unlearned questions which gender strifes.

Attention has properly been called to the indirect and incidental influence for good arising from the mere presence in Japan of four such earnest Christian gentlemen as comprised the American Board deputation. It is no less fitting to recognize the valuable work of a single individual going thither unofficially and in the capacity of a Christian educator and traveler. Dr. B. G. Northrop's recent visit has occasioned cordial notice in the Japanese press, and the forty lectures which he delivered in various places were warmly received. One on The Bible as a Classic is to be translated and published. In Tokyo prominent Japanese, many of them high in official circles, gave him a banquet. The speakers made appreciative reference to the friendly aid extended by him to many Japanese youths sent to this country for study, as well as to his influential share in securing for Japan the Shimonoseki indemnity. Dr. Northrop returns to this country in sanguine spirits regarding the progress of Christianity in Japan. His article in this issue on Miss Talcott is none too generous a tribute to that noble imitator of Clara Barton and Florence Nightingale.

It is thirty-five years since Charles Carleton Coffin began to write for The Congregationalist, and a glance at our files since then would show numerous articles from his facile pen which treats in an equally vivid and trenchant style historical, scientific and practical themes. Peculiarly fitting, therefore, is it for us to join our congratulations with those that were showered upon him and his wife last week Tuesday on the occasion of their golden wedding. Mr. Coffin's life illustrates what pluck and high religious ideals can do for a lad who starts with few advantages. As a war correspondent he had few equals. Nineteen volumes represent his literary activity, and several of them, like the Boys of '76, have attained phenomenal and enduring popularity. His public service has been large and utterly disinterested, while his devotion to the church and denominational causes has been of that old-fashioned, sturdy, persistent type which is all too rare today. May he and his gentle and beautiful wife, who for half a century have walked before the Lord so blamelessly in an ideally happy union, be spared yet many years to their great circle of admiring friends.

Associate Justice David J. Brewer.

The Eminent Jurist in His Home, at His Work and Giving Expression to His Opinions.

A man of genuine worth in public life invites and rewards study when engaged in the ordinary duties of his calling. If, however, in addition to the regular routine, there are loaded upon him exceptional responsibilities and cares, it is all the more interesting to approach him with a view to forming an estimate of his caliber and capabilities. Justice David J. Brewer of the United States Supreme Court is just now bearing unusually heavy burdens. The drain upon his physical and mental powers being so severe, the man's traits reveal themselves all the more distinctly when one comes close to him, as only the fiery ordeals to which human life is subject do test and display a man's powers.

Besides the regular work of the Supreme Court, which even the willingness at this time of his associates to favor him cannot reduce to anything like a sinecure, the presidency of the Venezuelan commission involves a vast deal of careful thought and labor. Moreover, a private sorrow weighs upon his heart. A beloved daughter has been forced to leave Washington for milder climes in search of health that seems to be eluding her grasp.

Yet as one, after being conducted through the halls and up the stairway of Mr. Brewer's pleasant, but far from showy, home on Massachusetts Avenue, enters the sunny study at the rear of the house, the first impression is that of a serene, self-poised man, whose public and personal anxieties leave little outward trace of their presence. The absence of anything that savors of hurry and drive is anothor equally agreeable inference, as the eye takes in the desk, where everything seems to be in its proper place, and the man at the desk, of solid, compact frame, the hands toying with paper-cutter or pencil, the smooth-shaven, friendly face, the keen blue eyes and the lips which frequent smiles draw apart.

Though it is only ten o'clock in the morning, one circumstance may perhaps explain the justice's easy manner and justify even so busy a man as he in bidding his caller welcome and motioning him to a seat. While most of the residents of the capital city are getting in the best part of their night's rest and many of them sleeping off the effect of late revelry, this associate justice of the Supreme Court has been at his desk enjoying four hours of uninterrupted study before breakfast. His custom is to rise at four and, after drinking a cup of coffee, to settle down for the most arduous mental labor of the day. During these hours, while night is giving place to day, the justice is studying his cases, forming his opinions and going to the roots of the particular subject which demands his immediate attention. So by the time lazy people, and, indeed, people not so lazy but who belong to the ordinary run of humanity, are beginning to contemplate the direful necessity of rising from their couches, Mr. Brewer has already performed a good hard day's work, and goes to his breakfast feeling that whatever interruptions may be in store for him this much is secured.

From nine o'clock to twelve Mr. Brewer dictates to his stenographer opinions and letters, having long ago abandoned any prolonged use of the pen himself. The noon hour marks the convening of the Supreme Court on Capitol Hill, and from that hour until four the justices are listening to evidence and pleas. The latter part of the afternoon and evening Mr. Brewer devotes to less strenuous duties or recreation and social life. He is a favorite at dinner parties but is chary about accepting invitations, and the form of relaxation which he covets and enjoys most is a quiet evening with his family in his own home. Yet one who has such a gift of story-telling and who enlivens and brightens any large or small gathering is not permitted to confine the play of his wit and fancy to the charmed circle of his own home.

His study is emphatically a workshop; the books are legal tomes and most of the pictures are of members of the judiciary. A map of Venezuela pinned to the wall and several pamphlets bearing on the question which has so thoroughly aroused both continents indicate the particular problem to which Justice Brewer is just now giving such earnest and painstaking thought.

What lifted this man to a position which is the ideal before ambitious practitioners of law all over the country? What influences of birth, native environment and training combined with the providential purpose of God to lead this man round by round to the summit of the ladder? Such questions as these flit through one's mind as the justice begins to talk pleasantly on indifferent themes. One recalls the fact that he came into this world fifty-eight years ago on the coast of Asia Minor in the ancient city of Smyrna; that his father, Rev. Josiah Brewer, was one of the first missionaries sent to Turkey, going out under the auspices of a Woman's Society in New Haven. But hardly a year of David's life was spent in that far-off land. His parents returned with him and the lad grew up in beautiful Berkshire County. The blood of the famous Field family, to which his mother belonged, coursed in his veins, and when his parents decided to remain in this country young David grew up, as did his kindred, in the stimulating intellectual and spiritual environment created in large measure by those two strong personalities, "Father" Field, a kind of bishop of all the Berkshire villages, and his remarkable wife, in no whit inferior to him in qualities of mind and heart.

Naturally the baby boy brought from Turkey no definite impression of missionary work and its environment, but he tells us that the frequent reference in the conversation of his father and mother to missions and their own missionary work impressed his youthful mind as it developed.

Yale was Justice Brewer's college and the famous class of '56 his class, and after studying law in the East he took a bold transitional step and established himself in Kansas. This choice of the West as his field of activity must have changed somewhat the outward course of his life, and affected, as well, the trend of his thought and sympathies. But there is no shade of regret in his answer to the question whether he now considers the move a wise one. He tells us, to be sure, that his first experience in a Western court opened his eyes somewhat, for, looking around for the judge, that personage was discovered at one end of the room smoking a pipe and with only a rough rail between him and the promiscuous company that filled the house. Kansas was then in its formative stage and the great issues between the North and South were rife. A young man of purpose and talent could hardly fail to make himself felt, and Mr. Brewer soon won public confidence.

One disappointing experience in politics turned him away from that sphere and led him to concentrate all his ambition and energies on his chosen profession. In it he rose naturally and rapidly and in due time received an appointment to the Kansas Supreme Bench, where he remained thirteen years until President Harrison in 1890 called him to serve his country in its highest tribunal. It is an unusual circumstance that two such close relatives as Justice Stephen Field, venerable and honored for his long service, and his nephew, Mr. Brewer, should be on the bench together.

In seeking Justice Brewer's opinion on matters of public moment it was natural to inquire whether he perceived a growing antipathy between different sections of the country, especially between the East and the West. On this point he spoke hopefully, ascribing recent displays of sectional feeling to the present disturbed financial conditions and looking upon such hostile attitudes as likely to be but temporary in their duration.

The fact that in his address before the Yale Law School several years ago Justice Brewer uttered a warning against the greed of corporations and the growth of class feeling led me to draw him out on this general subject. He said that he believes in a more equable division of property than now obtains. On the other hand, he would have the government protect everybody who has a dollar against any one who would despoil him of it. The best interests of humanity, in his judgment, are secured by holding before every man a chance to accumulate all the money he can. He would not limit fortunes to ten millions or to hundreds of millions, but he thinks it would be a blessing to the country if the right were taken away from its money kings to will all their property to a single individual. In this respect he believes we have much to learn from France, where a wealthy man's property is divided into more holdings than obtains in this country. He thinks that succession taxes are just, but so long as a man lives he would not have the law step in and dictate what shall be done with the money he has made. The fact of death, however, to his mind, opens the way for wise provision on the part of the government that will insure a fair distribution of the estate rather than its concentration in the hands of one heir.

Knowing how earnestly through all these years Judge Brewer has maintained his Christian life and labor, I put a question or two touching the relation of the church to the community. He believes in a measure of readjustment to the times with a view to bringing the church close to men, though he would not have it become an institution for merely one kind of activity, such as rescuing the fallen or ministering to the social natures of men. But he looks with favor on such modern movements as the Salvation Army and everything that shows the world that the church is awake and means business.

With regard to the general progress of Christianity he is an optimist. He has seen, to be sure, changes in theological positions and in practical conduct. "We are all probably doing things," said he, half jokingly, "that would seem rather strange to our grandfathers and grandmothers. But," he went on immediately to say, and his eye kindled with the thought, "I don't believe the world is growing worse; I find, day by day, in men and women about me, more of the sweet humanity that was in Christ's life."

Another side of Mr. Brewer's character reveals itself when he stands before his large adult Bible class at the First Congregational Church. Of his own accord he took up this work soon after he came to Washington and has performed it with the same fidelity and thoroughness that mark all his public activity. His method is that of the lecture-room, though he is quite willing to have his pupils question him. He comes to the class laden with the accumulation of the early morning's labor, for he rises as early on Sunday morning as on other days, but gives the hours before breakfast to preparation for his Bible class.

His approach to the Scriptures is none the less reverent and trustful because it is judicial and critical. His teaching is positive and constructive although far from being dogmatic on most points. For example, the day of my visit he was discussing the question of the star in the east, and he seemed to prefer not to import a miracle into the scene, but to consider the brilliant luminary in the sky to be a natural though exceptional celestial phenomenon.

When he came to the passage where Simeon takes Jesus in his arms exclaiming, "Now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace," Mr. Brewer, after vividly portraying the scene, spoke of the rarity of such fulfillment of human hopes. "Most of us, when we come to the end of life, in view of all that we have failed to do, feel a great measure of disappointment. This to me is the pathos of life, that it is filled for all of us with a thousand disappointments. These unspoken, unknown, buried sorrows constitute the sadness of life and point to a hereafter where we shall have time and opportunity to realize our unfulfilled yearnings and to cherish dear interests which here we have had to neglect."

If Justice Brewer were voicing his own deep conviction it must have been largely the utterance of a noble nature that can never entirely escape dissatisfaction with itself and its attainments. For, as an outsider looks upon his strong, symmetrical and useful life it seems to have reached a point of vantage and success which it is given to few men here on earth to attain. Learning, fame, friendships, high position, large influence in church and state—these are already his possessions. They are something more than gracious gifts of a power that rules the universe. They are the earnings of years of hard and patient toil, the fruit of an early and sustained devotion of himself to Christ and his fellowmen.

THE CHRISTIAN LIFE.

II. RESPONSIBILITY.

BY REV. FLOYD W. TOMKINS, JR.

Just as soon as a man knows the difference between right and wrong he is bound to act upon that knowledge, to do the right and to resist the wrong. No religious profession can increase this responsibility, no failure to make such a profession can diminish it. It cannot be thrown off upon another's shoulders. Almost as bad as his disobedience was Adam's cowardly attempt to shift his responsibility upon his wife. It cannot be evaded through the claim of ignorance. "I am Jesus whom thou persecutest," said Christ to Paul. It cannot be rejected through fear. "I was afraid," said the man of one talent. The lord answered: "O, thou wicked and slothful servant!"

And this is only common wisdom, the wisdom upon which all our life experience and duties rest. The mind, the judgment and the will are as necessary parts of the clerk, the tradesman, the banker and the physician as the hands and eyes and ears. You rely upon them constantly and if you could not rely upon them economic relations would cease. We proceed daily upon the assumption that men will do what they know to be right, and where there is suspicion and doubt we bring in the law to enforce their doing it. But the law does not create any responsibility, it only enforces it.

We find, however, that this realm of right is large. Though we may be able to meet the little responsibilities, because they appeal to our lesser, and sometimes selfish, powers, when we enter the larger field where complications and heavy burdens await us we are confused and often fall. We start in the morning with high resolves to fulfill every demand of right; long before night courage and endurance fail, and when, as we kneel by our beds, we look back upon the hours we find them full of omissions and commissions—

> Sins committed while conscience slept;
> Promises made and never kept.

Nor is the future any more hopeful. Away stretch the years of our life, every hour of them crowded with claims and dangers, responsibilities which must be truly met for righteousness's sake, and in the face of them we falter. Either a dead and hardened conscience, a life of laissez aller, or else a trying warfare in which he is often woefully defeated. That is the story of every man. He may know that God, a wise, loving God, made him for an eternal and definite purpose, but when he comes to fulfill that purpose he is overwhelmed.

Yet why should reason and faith fail here? If God is wise is it likely he would demand of his children impossibilities? Would he give visions of right and reveal on every side their glories only to mock us? Place mountains for us to climb upon whose slopes we must sink exhausted? Open fields for us to reap of their wealth in the very midst of which we must die? If he provides for our bodies the food and the clothing and the sleep necessary for their strength will he neglect the character, the moral nature, the soul hungering and thirsting for power? Most certainly not, else were he not a father. I deal not so with my child. A God deals not so with his children. There must be helps, means of grace, simple methods of sustenance by which I can draw from him sufficient strength and save my life from failure.

And then what do I find? Exactly that which I expected. God has the helps all provided, and very simple, so that a child can use them. There is a book full of his wisdom, so that when I am ignorant I may learn. There is prayer, so that I can talk to God and draw into myself some of his dear power. There is church worship, by which, in his presence and with my fellows, I may adore my God and gain refreshment and courage. There is the holy communion, by which I may be assured that my failures are forgiven and forgotten, and through which my body and soul may be nourished by his dear love. There is work for others, help given to lead weak ones to strength and tired ones to courage and erring ones to the right. And I sum them all up and call them religion, the rebinding of my life to God, the glorious means whereby "I perceive and know what things I ought to do, and also have grace and power to fulfill the same."

Religion, then, is for man, not man for religion. It is the great summary of truth, indeed, but truth revealed for man's sake. It is the great flood of worship, adoration, prayer, but a flood for the satisfaction of human thirst and longing. The church exists, divinely gathered, as a kingdom; but man enters it, not because by such entrance he assures to himself salvation, but because therein he finds, with his fellows, the blessed, sustaining food which shall make him strong. Christ died that men by partaking of his life, for their sakes laid down, might enter into the new, high life of victory.

What a glorious revelation that is, and how it makes clear the natural hungerings of men after the ideal! "My responsibility—how can I fulfill it in the face of all these obstacles!" And the answer comes, "Through Jesus Christ and his truth." He told us of the means and became himself the way. From his sacrifice flows the assurance of failures atoned for. From his teachings appear the simple means whereby failures may become fewer and successes more constant. From his life as a grand ideal of mastery, made real, for he was the only man, throbs the courage to make us know that we can be conquerors.

Let us remember, then, that while responsibility cannot be increased by any vows or pledges, or diminished by any neglect or weakness, it can be met. The helps from our Father are like lamps guiding the vessel through a dangerous channel to the harbor. Sevenfold are they: prayer, Bible study, meditation, church worship, holy communion, work for God's great world, and work for some individual whom we can lead to the right. If a man sincerely uses these he must be able to meet his responsibilities, he must safely come to the haven of mastery where he would be. And for all falls he has the assurance of the Father's mercy and forgiveness through the Elder Brother, in whose completeness he can be made complete.

And let us remember that religion, Christianity, the church, are for our help. The faith they hold is only the revelation of this help. The graces they offer are offered for us. The promises they lift up are for our inspiration.

> And the width of the waters, the hush
> Of the gray expanse where he floats,
> Freshening its current and spotted with foam
> As it draws to the ocean, may strike
> Peace to the soul of the man on its breast—
> As the pale waste widens upon him,
> As the banks fade dimmer away,
> As the stars come out, and the night-wind
> Brings up the stream
> Murmurs and scents of the infinite sea.

Loss of Goods.*

By Rev. John Watson, M. A. (Ian Maclaren).

With most people—annuitants and government pensioners are perhaps the only exceptions—an unexpected reverse in circumstances must be taken into account as one of the possible incidents of life; and it is harder to bear than the victim is inclined to confess, or than his neighbors ever suspect. A brave man shows a good face for the time and makes light of the blow—it is, he declares, but the fortune of war. Friends surround him with assurances of sympathy—it is, they suggest, only a disguised success. Both sides make an admirable rally and give one a better idea of human nature, but such backsets are not joyful but grievous. When a professional man has given his best brains to his work and is ungratefully treated, or a clerk has slaved for a firm and is dismissed for the sake of petty economy, or a servant has put the family's interest before her own and is made an offender for a word, or a merchant accumulates a competency and sees it scattered by some speculator, it does seem as if the times were out of joint, and the heart of the sufferer is apt to grow bitter. What reward has principle, faithfulness, industry, loyalty? Is there no intelligible law in the moral world, but only a whimsical Providence which changes a man's wheat into tares between the seedtime and harvest?

Loss of goods is a very fair illustration of this kind of trial, and is treated too lightly by persons who have not lost any or never had any to lose. There are, of course, distinctions between cases, and sympathy is sometimes out of place. If one has lost a fraction of the fortune he does not know what to do with, and is only anxious to increase, then it is not uncharitable to refuse him pity or cruel to congratulate him on a wholesome bloodletting. Fewer goods may mean less care for him, less worldliness for his wife, happier because truer marriages for his daughters, more strenuous lives for his sons, a higher level of life for the whole family. But if a man be cast down because yesterday he was rich and today he is poor, one who has a wife and children, then let no person despise or belittle him as selfish, or mercenary, or worldly, or unspiritual. You are not entitled to judge him unless you have either made a sacrifice of your possessions for some great cause, or have taken joyfully the spoiling of your goods; and if you have passed through such experiences they will have taught you charity. No man need be thought an unworthy Christian because a worldly reverse adds ten years to his age or writes its mark on his brow.

Various reasons may be imagined for his concern besides disappointed avarice, and one may be a sense of injustice. The activity of life is largely based on the law of work and its reward. It is a perfectly honest instinct which resents the idea of laboring a long day and getting no wages in the evening. This is not a question of selfishness at all, it is a question of righteousness. The one who has been refused his right is injured, the one who wronged him is a rascal. If there be any manhood in the worker he will insist on his wage although he give it away next minute, and if he fail to get it the Bible will express his indignation with power. Suppose he accumulates a sum from his earnings as a support in old age or a provision for his family, and he be robbed of it by the strong hand of a merciless firm, or the reckless operations of an unscrupulous speculator, or the rascality of a gang of public swindlers, or the deliberate deceit of a trusted friend, then he has been spoiled of his just possessions, and he does well to be angry. When an industrious and well-doing man is plundered without redress it will be a marvel if he be not bitter.

Loss of wealth may also be regretted because wealth was the means of securing pure and ennobling pleasures. Money has a different value with different men, and is indeed a symbol for what we chiefly love or need. With some it may mean meat and drink and clothing and luxuries, which things come to sloth, pride and extravagance. With others it signifies so many books written by the prophets of the Eternal, so many pictures by the interpreters of the Unseen. With certain others money is the instrument of goodness by which they relieve men in straits, provide for widows left comfortless, educate poor boys of intelligence, and bring some brightness into the lives of poor people. Money is neither culture nor charity—it may be the enemy of both; but it can create an atmosphere in which mind and heart will come to their flower. Any man is to be envied who can feed the purest tastes and obey the kindliest instincts as he pleases, to whom no treasure in vellum is forbidden, no generous succor of the needy is impossible; and if one is exiled suddenly from this goodly Eden, then he is to be pitied and has cause of complaint.

It would be an injustice, however, to conclude that a true man will ever be much cast down by straitened circumstances if he be alone in the world. He is perfectly aware that any one, sane in soul, mind, and body, can always earn his living, and that a touch of hardness will only brace his soul. But he is perpetually concerned about the future comfort of those whom he loves and who have trusted him. Money-making has two sides—one is very ignoble, where an immortal being toils and scrapes and grasps and hoards, simply that he may possess; one is entirely noble, where one strives that he may provide. What heroism may be hidden behind buying and selling, bargaining and speculating! Where a weary, anxious man is ever thinking of a woman who must not know want, of boys who must have their chance in life, one forgives him his carefulness, his keenness, his rashness, since all he does is for love's sake; and one understands that his suffering through a reverse has not in it a single grain of selfishness.

This man is, however, fortunate in retaining one possession, for loss of goods is not loss of honor. He may have to go into a smaller house, to practice various economies, to withdraw certain subscriptions, to refuse his family some pleasures, but he does not need to lower his head at the meeting of a friend, nor will his children have cause to be ashamed of their father's name. There are men on whom the sun has shone and who are increased in goods, yet none respect them; most honest souls despise them. Their fortunes would be a cheap price for this man's character, but that cannot be bought by gold, nor is it lost when gold departs. After all, it is not required of every one to be successful either in his business or in his profession—in letters or the church. What is asked, and eternally shall be asked, is that a man shall obey his conscience and do his duty by God and his neighbor. Has he done so according to his ability? Then, be his lot prosperity or adversity, let him keep a high heart, for none can put him to shame either in this world or the next.

Adversity will also be helpless to deprive him of the love of wife or child, but, by a blessed law of human hearts, will only make him dearer. Does a woman think less of her husband because he has been worsted in the battle and has been sent out of the lists wounded? She is so constructed by God that she will claim her knight before the people and glory in him and lavish hitherto unknown riches of love on him and be prouder of him than if he had come off victor over all opponents. Why? For a woman's reason: because he is not strong and successful, because he has failed and therefore has need of sympathy and comfort and confidence. For another woman's reason: because he failed for her, so that every wound has become an evidence of his devotion, a claim on her loyalty. What a love is that which God hath placed in the heart of a woman—so magnanimous, so ungrudging, so forgiving, so steadfast! Is there any man living who has ever fathomed that love, who has ever lived so as to deserve it? Who shall ever be able to repay it? Dare a man complain of any loss who knows that he has the love of a good woman as his portion?

Besides, adversity is a searching test of friendship, dividing the sheep from the goats with unerring accuracy, and this is a good service. Times there are when it seems we cannot count the number of our friends—we see so many smiling faces, we hear so many pleasant words. Times there are when we are not certain and question our heart. Suppose one became unpopular, or held unworldly opinions, or were reduced to poverty, or were slandered, how many out of this agreeable crowd would come out and take their places by his side against the wall? We ought not to expect many. We may well be satisfied with six, and the one good of adversity is that we should discover for certain who the six are. It might almost be worth enduring some loss to know what uncalculating and unhesitating loyalty burns in some silent, faithful, unflinching folk.

But among all the services of adversity surely the best is this, that it teaches us at last the difference between the goods that are held in barns and those that are stored in the soul. So alluring are things which are seen that they fascinate our minds and lead them captive; so severe are the things which are unseen that they fail to seize our imagination and inspire our lives. We are blinded by the gaudy colors and tinsel glory of the material, so that the kingdom of God cannot compete for our love. What advantages have the intangible riches of the spiritual world that we should win them at a sacrifice? Adversity gives one answer—they last. Vision, knowledge, faith, love, holiness cannot be taken from one by a thief; they cannot be lost in a day; they cannot ooze away before his eyes. They are inalienable and are never dearer, surer, sweeter than when all other possessions have failed and disappeared. Does it not too often happen that as people rise in the social scale their character deteriorates? They cast off old friends, they lose their former simplicity of manners, they withdraw from the service of Christ. They become affected, hollow, ambitious before our eyes. It is a law, with many a splendid exception, that those who are rich are deaf to the voice of Christ and refuse his cross; that those who are poor give him ready welcome and accept his cross as the way of life everlasting.

NOW THE KING SAT IN THE WINTER HOUSE.

BY HARRIET PRESCOTT SPOFFORD.

Why should one, unlessoned in creeds, who looks on the chill repose of death believe in continued life? Why should one bending over the loathly worm believe in the winged fly? And why should one in the power of the wintry world, when the cold earth seems dead as the dead shape lately hidden by its clods, take courage for a future? Yet courage merely means reliance upon power, power to overcome, power to endure, power to love and to be loved. And is not true reliance based, consciously or otherwise, upon assurance of never failing founts of strength, assurance that God lives in his world?

But see, through the chill air this wintry morning a fine frozen mist descends, a web of woven silver when a slant light touches it, hiding river and shore and field as much as if one were lost in some frozen nebula of the interstellar cold, could such thing be; and the thought comes involuntarily whether, were one wandering in the lonely spaces of realms unknown to this, would one then be less conscious, less observant, less a being still? A wind comes parting the veil of frozen gossamer and shredding it to ragged vapor—He bringeth the wind out of his treasuries—the sun bursts through and changes it to airy gold; there float up the river shores, all violet and tender fawns; there gloom the dark pines; carrying on its tide of fluent sapphire the snow-crusted glitter of its broken ice floes, sweeps the river far away into the rosy reaches of the east; and two great eagles come sailing down the wind. Surely if beauty be not the being of God himself, but is only the skirt of his garment, the Lord is passing down this way!

Nor is it all—this morning beauty—in the larger forces of the great tide, the solemn wood. See the frosty rime sparkling upon the parapet of the bridge, each crystal set in wrought-work of spun silver—and the hoary frost of heaven, who hath gendered it? See where on every bough and spray the settling, freezing vapor has caught the sun and has become a spark of fire, and the air is atoss with live rubies and emeralds and topazes—He hath entered into the treasures of his snow—and the whole cold, dead world is glancing and quivering with life, while the shadow of every drift, the color in the heart of every rift of the ice, is the very blue of heaven.

Come into the wood now; here, at the entrance, the wind sings over the tree-tops like a careering spirit, but going farther all sound ceases. Save for the rare lifting of an iron bough, the falling of a weight of snow, all seems the silence of death. But is it so? What streak of light was that darted up the tree-bole with the chipmunk? Here is the print on the snow, one foot before the other in a single line, where the wary mink has passed, and how soft was this fluff of feathers that blundered with the startled owl across our faces! Down in the cedar swamp a flock of finches and jays and robins chuckle over the blue juniper berries; here the black and white woodpeckers and snowbirds swarm all about the boughs, clinging to the under side of the stems and quarrying for the hidden store within. But they are here as we are, animate beings, making the best of things. Listen, then—that tinkle, airy, remote, like a crystal bell in a dream—it is drop by drop of the living water of the little rivulet and its falls beneath the ice; and wherever it flows the chemic power of the life of the great planet flows with it—"put like fire from off thy finger."

Here a dead leaf floats by us; its work is done, but something pushed it from its place, the thrill within the new bud there. The breath of the wind steals in now over this open glade and rifles the silky milkweed pod of its seeds, seeds where the life lies suspended, as it may sleep in the Oriental mage who has himself buried in the earth for a month or a year to be taken back some day to life and light again. Here is a chrysalis glued to a stem; it holds in its long sleep not the developing creature, but the folded, finished thing absorbing what it needs of the old body as the soul absorbs the issues of this life. See how vivid with their crimson juices are the stems of the wild roses, as we come out again; down there at the foot of the field, where a flight of crows go cawing and flapping home, the willow boughs are like green and golden flames. A cold and dead and frozen world? No, it is full of warmth and cheer and motion. The principle of life is never absent from it; even were it slumbering it is there, ready to wake. Everywhere throughout the apparent dark and cold is warmth and light—if we seek it. Everywhere, the vision growing strong and clear in the outlook, is the Creator and Preserver to be found.

But the wind comes from the sea; the storm blows up and the snow falls. Each flake gives the cheek a soft and cool caress, and its crystal passes in beauty on the hand. Their dance mimics and outdoes the dance of the swarming gnats, while they hang wreaths of immaterial bloom upon the loftier boughs, and spread a downy coverlid upon the little roots of the grass beneath. And if the gale grow to tempest it is with the triumphant sensation of overcoming evil that we breast it and defy it. How white and purified is the earth then at last! How spiritual its aspect and horizon! What a winged thing it seems! And we spread our wings with it. As we walk home some night when such a storm has blown away, tired, perhaps, and chilled, it may be depressed with care and full of gloom, even doubting all things, how the last, still glow of the receding sunset, with its clarity of rich pomegranate tint, drawing away over the snowy fields and their violet shadows, pictures a glowing hearth, invites us like the blaze of a father's fireside, gives us a sense of warmth and joy and cheer, as if we heard a welcoming voice calling us home, assuring us of love and peace; and, a shining chrysolite in the midst of a clear glow, the evening star looks out from illimitable distances and we know the welcoming voice was the voice of infinite things.

But now all the stars are out, Arcturus with his sons and the bands of Orion; the great planets fly like lampads running with their torches; there is no film between us; they hang out of heaven like living spirits. No summer skies are ever stripped so bare of even a breath between. How near the constellations are, how we seem a part of them, to be going on with them, how they swing down towards us out of the Milky Way, the Path of Souls up which our imagination travels towards universes beyond and yet beyond and comes out upon the far supernal light, while the wind sings by us as if it knew the way! And then they grow paler and the moon sends a glory before her as she floats up, up, up—so low she rode in summer, so high she rides tonight! In the middle of the highest sky she spreads her wings like a great hovering, brooding mother, while far, far off and faint the stars still hang like distant palace lights. What broad lusters, what sharp shadows on the snow, what reflection into heaven, what hight, what depth, what bending of the infinite spaces, what tenderness in the midnight blue, what sense of divine presence—for exalted and enlarged to all the limit of our vision on this winter night we see the sky is full of God!

WHEN THE TIDE COMES IN.

BY REV. A. H. QUINT, D.D.

First, let it be understood that I have no particular reference to any church whatever in what I am about to write. In fact, the substantial thought of this article, but not its title, was noted down some years ago. I believe the thought was suggested by a recorded instance in the life of some evangelist, who found a church sadly divided, in which much effort to unite separated people had steadily failed. I remember also a church which had been suffering from internal conflict, but where outward quiet had come, under the ministration of a temporary preacher. "We have been peaceful for several months now," said a good old Christian, "isn't it time for the brethren to come together and adjust their differences?" "Do not suggest it," said the minister; "don't you notice that I never even pray in public for peace and brotherly love? The only way to reunion is to have them forget their differences by looking to the Master."

When the great ship St. Paul lately went ashore the men who engaged to take her back into deep water made their efforts only when the tide came in. They did not succeed until the high winds and a great tide co-operated. Then they succeeded in floating the vessel and rejoiced that the danger of destruction had passed away.

Church quarrels, meaning quarrels within a church, it will be felt at once, are terribly injurious to the church itself and to the Christian name in general. But what can prevent them? Sometimes there seems to be an epidemic of such things, and spiritual epidemics are not controlled by any board of health. Then there are some localities in which such cases may naturally be expected. I have one such territory now in mind which has suffered not a little in the last fifty years, but which at present is in a state of quiet. Particular churches have also a reputation for great gifts in this respect. Some real difficulty may also arise in some excellent church, upon which parties are quickly formed. Sympathies are aroused. A loyalty to some injured person, or to one supposed to be injured, bursts into a flame. Hard things are said. Passion is excited and calm reason cannot operate. Sometimes church discipline is invoked to crush an opponent. Some of the meanest things that I have ever met with have been of this character.

Going back far enough to avoid all sensitiveness of living people, say seventy-five years, there is recorded a very sharp church division on the question of rapidity in singing. One section of the church insisted that all hymns should be sung in a slow measure. Others, I suppose the younger portion, believed they ought to make a joyful noise unto the Lord and insisted on greater speed. Each portion sang the same hymn in its own way at the same time with the natural result. The difficulty eventually divided the town meeting, and I doubt if a perfect reconciliation ever took place.

Another historical case of the last century was one of a serious quarrel between the conservatives who adhered to Tate and Brady and the progressives who advocated Watts. It came at last to a council, which advised as most councils do. It recommended that they use one book in part and the other in part. But this was so vague that the council was recalled and further explanation was given with better effect.

Still another instance was where a good old chorister insisted on pitching the tune too high to suit some of the people. A great controversy arose, which even involved a neighboring church. It was not until thirteen years had passed that the trouble ended. "The warmth of a continuous interest," says a writer, "melts the icy barriers." Confessions were made, and the neighboring church took part in the acknowledgments of error. It may relieve suspicion if I say that this happy reconciliation took place nearly a century and a half ago. But it will be noticed that the disturbance was not ended until the new warmth of religious interest was felt. The tide came in, the tide of Christian love.

In church quarrels there is often some real point at issue. It ought to be considered calmly before it makes a quarrel. Reasonable people can settle their differences. This not being done through reason and kindness and courtesy self-will takes possession. People are always extremely conscientious in such cases. Chattering busybodies repeat and misrepresent what other people say, and elaborately tell how wicked those other people are. Such is the way in which a church quarrel grows. The plain duty of Christians is that they shall never allow a difference of opinion to get beyond the lines of a sweet-tempered and prayerful discussion. Retorts and sharp speeches have no proper place in the church of God. "And the Lord's servant must not strive."

But I do not write this supposing that it will have much weight. People will quarrel, and will do it in the name of the Master. But when they have got tired of it, what then? A thorough church quarrel is never settled without leaving scars. It will often, however settled, leave alienated feelings for a whole generation. Such a church is fortunate if it is so situated that changes of population bring in new elements. But there may be some help in mediation. A reference to sister churches may bring kindly advice which will appeal with effect to most of those concerned.

But the real remedy is when the tide comes in. When the minds of the people are turned again to their Lord, when the power of the gospel is again felt in their souls by the work of the Holy Spirit, when they are subdued by the sense of their own unworthiness before God, when the desire for Christ's glory drives out their own pride, the rising tide of Christian faith and love will float the church once more into the safe sea, into which no devices, no arguments, no adjustments, no compromises can bring it. You can bring the church into peace and prosperity when the tide comes in.

I remember an illustration given by a visiting minister in one of my prayer meetings in a church near the sea. He pictured a barque thrown up upon the jagged rocks of a reef which were so sharp and bold as to be out of water. So far he did well. But when he proceeded to picture the same vessel getting over those rocks to the other side and into deep water again, and sailing off on the open sea with all sails spread and flag flying, some of my old sailors shook their heads, and one of them whispered to me as we went out, "That was too much. No vessel ever sailed over rocks as he said that one did. That was a wreck, and she went to pieces." A church may get into such a condition that no rising tide can make it worth saving.

CURRENT THOUGHT.

AT HOME.

The Hartford Seminary Record, discussing the report of the A. B. C. F. M. deputation to Japan, observes: "The simple question is this: Has nineteenth century Christianity, just as it is, vitality enough to win a nation to Christ, when that nation is environed with all of nineteenth century anti-Christian sentiment? . . . It is substantially the same question that troubled the Jerusalem church when Paul and Barnabas brought in their report from their work among the Gentiles. We believe that in God's book the same triumphant answer is already written." The Record believes that the theology of the Japanese church, "whether it be fashioned after Origen or Augustine or neither, will be shaped by the Spirit of the living God." The same journal, after carefully examining the Woman's Bible says: "No woman-hater could wish for a more powerful helper than this will prove to be. Unless the editors are impervious to ridicule we may safely assume that Part II. will never appear."

ABROAD.

Prof. H. E. Ryle of Cambridge University, reviewing Prof. George F. Moore's Commentary on Judges, in the January Critical Review, says: "so full and scientific a commentary . . . has never been produced in the English language." He says that Professor Moore (of Andover Seminary) shows himself "to be completely in accord with the best and most sober lines of modern criticism," one who has "no love of change for change's sake, but who is quite resolved to admit such changes of view as the evidence of the best scholarship seems to demand."

Mr. H. W. Wilson, an authority on naval history and tactics second only to Captain Mahan, in the February Nineteenth Century makes some interesting admissions respecting British vulnerability. "The air they breathe is not more necessary to human beings than is a free and uninterrupted passage of the sea for her ships to England. . . . The repeal of the corn laws sacrificed our farmers to our manufacturers. . . . I have in vain searched naval literature for any indication that the true naval experts, i. e., the men who will have to do the fighting, consider our navy able to defend our commerce against the assaults of even the strongest Power after ourselves. . . . There is no denying the fact that we have deliberately sacrificed our self-dependence (by adopting free trade). . . . Let us once more recall the fact that we have a bare twelve weeks' food at home, and that we certainly do not possess supplies of raw material for our manufactures which would carry us six months. . . . There is no need to picture the result of a sudden trebling of the price paid for every necessary and for each pound of raw material. It means only one thing, if it cannot be promptly counteracted, and that is the instant decline of our manufactures, the instant shrinkage of our national income, swift starvation for our masses—in a word, national death."

How much truth is there in Prof. Walter F. Adeney's charge in The Christian World? "The plain fact is that half the teaching of the Sunday school is obsolete everywhere but in the Sunday school. Notions are there spread out before sweet, simple, unsophisticated child minds which are rarely tolerated among adult audiences. What the minister would shudder to preach in the church the teachers are continually inculcating in the school. We have two theologies running side by side in most of our congregations, that of the Sunday school being at least fifty years behind that of the pulpit. . . . It is thought to be safest to follow this course. In reality it is highly dangerous, as is all tampering with truth for pedagogic reasons. When the hothouse-nurtured faith is transplanted into the world it is so delicate that it is ready to be nipped by the first keen blast of the wind of unbelief."

Recorder Goff of New York city, in an address given before the New York Press Club recently, ventured to deal in criticism, relegating laudation to such a past master in the art of compliment as Hon. Chauncey Depew. Mr. Goff asked: "May it not with truth be said that what is called public opinion is no longer exclusively formed by the press? Indeed, the signs are that public opinion is gradually asserting itself and attaining to a position by which it controls the press. Has the great power of the press been abused?" and replied: "Where it becomes patent to observation that the goal sought for is the tickling of the intellectual palate by sensation and not the imparting of valuable knowledge, men come to regard themselves as being imposed upon and treat the matter so served up to them as they are inclined to look upon the flaming circus poster. To a person not of the journalistic craft the causes for such conditions may not be accurate or clear, but to an observer from the outside a strong complexion is given to the suspicion that in the fierce competition for circulation, for advertising, for money-making, the true principles of journalism and the real responsibilities which rest upon its professors have been lost sight of." It is to be feared that Mr Goff is not far from the truth in his diagnosis.

A woman died in California some twenty-five years ago, leaving an estate worth $25,000. The heirs contested it, and the case has just been closed in the Superior Court of Los Angeles. After paying lawyers' fees and other expenses, there were left just forty cents. This may suggest the wisdom of being one's own executor.

INTERRUPTED.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Into the midst of the music
The joy and the fullness of life,
There swept a strange clangor; then silence,
A stillness more startling than strife.
We heard not the sound of the trumpets,
The bugles died out on the blast.
Could we march in that desolate waiting
For the thrill of a song that was past?

Could we work when our comrades no longer
Breathed courage and hope in the ear?
Could we triumph, when sorrow and sighing
Had palsied our hearts, until fear
Swept over our souls like the shadow
Of some brooding evil to come?
Alas! we were stricken; the music
That had given us courage was dumb.

Then down from the beautiful heaven
A word came, the word of the Lord,
And it struck on our languor and trouble
Like a dominant, silvery chord.
"Stay not for the music," it bade us;
"The music has only gone on.
You will hear it again in the glory
That waits when the day's work is done."

So now, though but faintly and seldom
We hear the sweet bugle-call blow,
We march on in the path that our Leader
Marked out in his conflict with woe.
Some day we will hear the grand chorals,
Some day we will stand on the shore,
Where the comrades already are waiting;
The music has gone on before.

The principle of displacing the evil with the good has been well illustrated in an experiment tried in Detroit for the past five years. Realizing the danger to their young people from the circulation of pernicious literature, an arrangement was made with the Public Library whereby entertaining and instructive books were put into the hands of school children in the five lower grades. Fifty-two schools were thus supplied, and the circulation last year was between 75,000 and 100,000 volumes. They are changed once in eight weeks, or five times per school year of ten months, and the only expense is for transportation. The parents, no less than the children, have derived benefit from the books, notably the fathers and mothers of the poorer classes. Is this not one simple and feasible way for training boys and girls in patriotism, especially those of foreign parentage? And what is to hinder a plan like this from becoming general?

It is a fair question whether articles on symptoms of disease in magazines whose province is to instruct and amuse do not work positive harm rather than good. In many households there are delicate invalids and sensitive, ailing persons who have plenty of time to read, but they are apt to be a trifle morbid in their tastes and select precisely the articles that friends and physicians are trying to keep beyond their reach. For instance, one of our best magazines, in a recent number, treats of insanity in a way which would only frighten a certain class of readers into watching for signs of mental disease in themselves or their friends. Yet these symptoms might well arise from a variety of other causes. Would it not be better to keep such sad communications out of journals intended for cheerful family reading, or else present the other side of the picture and tell how right living and careful diet can prevent a collapse? If one wishes to study a specific disease he has only to consult medical works, in which he will find also the cure or the method for arresting its progress. Let us demand for the family circle reading that is sane and wholesome in every respect.

Whatever may have been the fact in the past, recent statistics seem to disprove the common statement that there is a larger percentage of insanity among farmers' wives than any other class of women. It is also maintained that one reason for the excess of manual laborers over brain workers in insane asylums is simply because the former usually live under less hygienic conditions. An intelligent farmer's wife probably expresses the true state of affairs in modern times in a private letter by saying: "In these days of machines and helps of various kinds our work is not so very different from that of other women, and we have many good things to be thankful for which you poor townsfolk do not possess. Farming is going to be one of the fine arts, and all this talk about 'hayseed in his hair' and 'farmers' wives in the asylums' belongs to an age when spinning and weaving and butter-making were all done by the mother. I live in a farming community, and if you can find a merrier or more wide-awake lot of women than many of my acquaintances you will have to search for them in other circles." With the invasion of electric cars into rural neighborhoods and frequent mails to carry good reading matter, the isolation, which is said to be one predisposing cause of insanity, is rapidly disappearing.

THE STORY OF A "FALLEN" WOMAN.

BY R. L. H.

The other day I saw a Christian woman in great unhappiness, wounded, like poor Keats, by a magazine article. The lady was a rescue missionary. The article was One Woman's Story: a Study, in the February Cosmopolitan, and its author Mrs. Margaret Deland. The story was written with a purpose, and I mean to show that its purpose has been widely misunderstood. As I missed its meaning at first myself, I am not wholly out of sympathy with the people who write the vigorous letters of expostulation which every mail brings to the novelist's home in Boston. But first I must tell the story itself, in a paragraph, with what candor and justice I may.

Miss Sara Wharton, a young woman of fortune and position, induces a wayward girl named Nellie Sherman to abandon an evil life and return to the home of her aunt. There Nellie remains for a year, Miss Wharton, meanwhile, becoming well acquainted with her and using every conceivable device to call out her better nature. But, alas! there is no better nature to call out. The girl proves to be weak-willed, vain, selfish, indolent, ungrateful, ill-tempered, and devoid of any appreciation of high moral motives. All this Miss Wharton sees demonstrated beyond the possibility of reasonable doubt. Another fall, followed by another return to the aunt in the tenement, would have discouraged a less zealous philanthropist, but Miss Wharton remains resolute. At this juncture Nellie shows the first premonitory symptoms of consumption, and Dr. Morse, who brings the news to Miss Wharton, intimates that she might more wisely expend her philanthropic efforts where they would yield better results, and suggests the case of a poor but deserving family who are in need of immediate assistance. But the gaudy sentimentalism of rescue work is more attractive than mere brown-colored charity, and Miss Wharton clings to Nellie only the tighter.

The girl is sent into the country for the summer and regains her health, only to accomplish the ruin of an innocent boy. Dr. Morse then charges Miss Wharton with responsibility for Jack's downfall, for she had kept alive a woman whose soul had become incurably tainted with evil and who spread the foul contagion wherever she went. Meanwhile, the poor family have come to utter destitution for lack of the help Miss Wharton might have given them. Her duty, he insists, was clear. She ought to have let Nellie die. "There is only a limited amount of power in the world; only a limited amount of opportunity, or of money, for that matter; and you are bound to put the power and opportunity and money where they will do the most good! There is always choice; that's where responsibility comes in. We've got to consider moral economics; we've no business to gratify our selfish sentimentalism at the expense of society." What wonder that the philanthropist flinches under the doctor's rebuke?

I am fully aware that I have spoiled Mrs. Deland's story in trying to tell it in short compass. Nevertheless, this is the plot, and I have tried to be fair. Now, what is its purpose? The story of the story is its own best interpretation. As is well known, Mrs. Deland has been deeply interested for the last fifteen years in rescue work. During that time she has had a close acquaintance with at least a hundred girls of Nellie's unhappy class. From time to time she has taken them into her house, and by far the greater proportion of the hundred cases have yielded gratifying results, so much so that Mrs. Deland is full of hopefulness for rescue work. Occasionally, however, only the bitterest disappointment would follow her efforts. The Nellie Sherman of the story was one of the hopeless ones, and the poor girl is today an inmate of an opium joint in the South End of Boston. It was natural that Mrs. Deland should question whether she had done right or wrong in helping to keep Nellie in the world, since it was plain that to such a disordered nature life could mean only a career of crime. Out of these questionings came the story, meaning only to show that one may do great injustice to the deserving poor and even to society at large by devoting one's efforts to an attempt to reclaim the incorrigible, and this because there is "only a limited amount of power in the world." The story would have been better understood, it seems to me, had not the editor changed the title, which was originally The Law or the Gospel, the law being the Pauline principle, that "the wages of sin is death."

The people who call Mrs. Deland's sketch "a wicked story" do so for two reasons. Either they say that she has attacked rescue work by "limiting God's power to save," or that she is utterly heartless and means to prescribe capital punishment for erring women. Most of the indignant critics lay both charges at her door. It should be remembered, however, that Nellie Sherman is not, in Mrs. Deland's estimation, a fair representative of her class. Admitting that many, or even most, degraded women may be redeemed, here is a monster, a moral imbecile, of whom it is as scientific as charitable to say that her life is rather *un*moral than *im*moral. Such people exist, and it is useless to blind ourselves to the fact while criminology vouches for its actuality. And Mrs. Deland, probably without knowing it, is an excellent criminologist. Her analysis of Nellie's character is unerring—Lombroso himself could not have done it better. Lombroso, however, would have branded the girl with the name of criminal, an instinctive criminal, worse yet, a hopeless recidivist, which latter word is a technical term for one who will, by the mere preliminary of opportunity, "fall again and again." All this is unspeakably sad, but it is nevertheless true. There is no more use in preaching to Nellie than in exhorting a maniac, or an utter idiot, or a babe in arms. She is simply incapable of any response to moral influence. She may, however, be restrained, but even when she is "doing right" her conduct has no moral quality. She is as conscienceless then as while doing wrong. But restraint will, sooner or later, be broken over, and then the life of crime will begin again, working its hideous mischief as before.

Why, then, should we shudder at the stopping of life when death comes as a natural consequence of sin? What value can existence have to a person to whom virtue is by the nature of things an impossibility and sin a second nature? Certainly the death of an instinctive criminal is nothing but a blessing to society. So I must agree with Mrs. Deland that the important thing is "not life, but living."

We are learning that there are criminals and criminals. We can reform some, we can restrain others, and I believe the time is coming when measures will be taken to stamp out as far as possible the recidivist class by confining them in suitable institutions and preventing their leaving a progeny of criminals to take their places in the world. In such a course I can see nothing but Christian mercy.

THE CLARA BARTON OF JAPAN.

[BY REV. B. G. NORTHROP.]

No foreign woman has rendered such timely and valuable service to Japan during and since the war as Miss Eliza Talcott. Her history and work command the admiration of all who know them. She was born about sixty years ago in Rockville, Ct., her father having been one of the founders of that thriving village. She studied at the noted school of Miss Porter, in Farmington, Ct., and was graduated at the State Normal School in New Britain. Her uncle—once engaged in the tea trade in China — brought home many curiosities from that country, and thus her thoughts were early turned to the far East. She reached Japan in March, 1873, in company with Miss J. E. Dudley, the two young ladies being the first unmarried women sent to Japan by the American Board. The Kobe girls' school — now Kobe College—developed under their care. Fortunately for me, on the good steamship China, bound for Japan, Miss Dudley was a fellow-traveler. She consented daily during the voyage to draw from her rich stores of observation and experience for my benefit, and her stories of the courage, tact, energy and devotion of her early associate portrayed the ideal missionary.

After eleven years of exhaustive work in Kobe Miss Talcott took a year's needed rest in her native land. On her return she located in Okayama, where her time was devoted to house to house Bible work among the women of that city and to evangelistic touring trips in that vicinity. This is one of the most interesting missionary fields of Japan, where Rev. J. H. Pettee has labored so long and successfully. Here are two Christian schools, for boys and girls, and here is the justly celebrated orphan asylum of Mr. Ishii, "One of the worthiest charities of the East." After three years' service in this attractive field, Miss Talcott accepted a call to the training school for nurses connected with the Doshisha University, Tokyo, where she also gave motherly care to the inmates of the hospital, thus gaining special preparation for her great work in the military hospitals.

Hiroshima, a city 500 miles from the capital, was the center of interest in Japan during the war as the port of embarkation of troops for China, the temporary location of the eighth Diet and the point of debarkation of the wounded, both Chinese and Japanese, and of the Chinese prisoners of war. Here in six weeks were built and furnished excellent hospitals capable of accommodating 4,000 sick and wounded soldiers. In November, 1894, Miss Talcott chose as her field this stirring and crowded city, whose population was suddenly manifolded. During my stay in Hiroshima I was welcomed to her home, and gave a lecture in the church attended by many of the Red Cross nurses wearing their society garb and badge. What a contrast between that scene and the story told me less than twenty-five years ago by Japanese students in America regarding the custom of families on their new year's days of passing in Indian file around a circle and trampling on a wooden cross, thus training even the youngest to contemn that sacred symbol! Before me were Christian Red Cross nurses trained at Kyoto.

An interesting interview with Mrs. Joseph Neesima, the esteemed widow of the founder of the Doshisha, just after her return from hospital service in Hiroshima, showed her high estimate of Miss Talcott's work there. The war gave a great impulse to the Red Cross movement. The Japan Evangelist says, "The Red Cross Society in this country now numbers among its membership over 170,000 Japanese." Rev. Dr. De Forest of Sendai recently declared that "the splendid work of the Red Cross Society has brought the idea of 'the cross' in some sense before the nation that for centuries has regarded trampling on this emblem as a truly patriotic if not moral act." Twenty-three years ago "Death to the Christian" remained on the old edict boards at the crossroads. But at Hiroshima the Japanese surgeons especially commended the Christian Red Cross nurses for their skill, patience and fidelity.

Dr. Taylor, the eminent medical expert sent by the English Government to inspect the medical and surgical methods of the Japanese, told me that these hospitals were models in their plans and equipments, furnished with the best surgical instruments and appliances, with competent surgeons and skilled nurses, and this English physician, who was at the front at Port Arthur and elsewhere, spoke in the highest terms of the treatment of the wounded, both Chinese and Japanese.

Though Miss Talcott was a volunteer and at no time officially enlisted in the Japanese service, from the outset she was given free access to the different wards of the hospitals, and her work was highly commended by the head surgeon of the Japanese army. Many of the patients suffered so much from frozen feet that amputation was a frequent necessity. The cheerfulness of such footless sufferers impressed me strongly as I passed through the wards. To them Miss Talcott was an angel of mercy. Better, even, than the patient details of nursing were her words of sympathy and encouragement. It was natural that the patients should say, "Her visits do us more good than the medicine of the doctors." They were also profoundly impressed by the kindness and attentions of the empress, who so promptly met the demand for artificial limbs. Her munificence in former years in ministering to those in distress by reason of earthquakes, fires and floods is gratefully appreciated throughout the Japanese empire.

At one time a Buddhist temple in the outskirts of Hiroshima was filled with Chinese prisoners of war, to whom the kindness and attention of Miss Talcott brought timely peace and hope. One of the prisoners, Capt. Choy Ting Kon—one of 120 Chinese students sent to this country over twenty years ago, for whom, at the request of the Hon. Yung Wing, I arranged plans and places of study in the United States—was profoundly impressed by Miss Talcott. One object of my visit to Hiroshima was to meet Captain Choy. He had just been transferred to Osaka, over 200 miles distant, where I soon after had a long and interesting interview with him. His stirring words show what a magic influence Miss Talcott exerted on the Chinese prisoners at Hiroshima.

"Two wounded Chinese officers, who had been under kindest treatment in the Hiroshima hospital for three months, on their recovery were sent to our place of confinement. They said the Japanese doctors and nurses had been attentive to them in every possible way. But louder still were their praises of the kindness of a certain foreign lady, who presented oranges and many tokens of sympathy and interest in them. Their conversation so often drifted to the wonderful benevolence of this lady that my curiosity was aroused to know who she might be. I asked the Japanese interpreter to beg her to call on us. I had been previously favored with a visit from Rev. Mr. Loomis. In his second call he was accompanied by four women. One of these was Miss Talcott, the lady I had heard so much about. Her face was sunlight, beaming with Christian love. She had a mysterious happiness whose deep fountain we could not understand. Our officers had not exaggerated her kindness and acts of charity, for we had the rare opportunity to share them and to appreciate their divine effects. At a second visit Miss Talcott gave me a book called Jesus and the People, and asked me about our progress in Bible reading. She was thoroughly interested in us physically and spiritually. By the other Chinese prisoners, whom I have since met, Miss Talcott was gratefully remembered. No amount of preaching could have made such an impression as her work and example. They had been shown a Light of whose divine glory they had no former conception."

Such is the testimony of a Chinese scholar, educated in the United States and long in the Government service. Such facts and tributes show that the success which Miss Talcott has achieved in a long and varied missionary service, educational, evangelistic and philanthropic, has reached its culmination in the crowning work of the last sixteen months. She sails for San Francisco the last of February, but may not reach Connecticut till April as she expects to visit Dr. J. G. Johnson and other friends on her way East.

MORE ABOUT MATRIMONY.

PRUDENTIAL CONSIDERATIONS.

In the first place, let me emphasize the effect of what may be called "misfit attachments," for to marriage, as to population, there are "prudential checks," as Malthus himself would no doubt admit, in diminishing the pin money of the wives of ministers and justices of the peace. I should by no means choose to become interested in a young lady eight or ten years my junior; my conscience cries that it would be unjust, looking forward half a century, to impose my prospective gray hairs upon her brown ones. Neither should I choose to fall in love with a lady eight or ten years my senior; then the unfairness would lie in another quarter. Nor should I wish to love a girl with eight or ten years less of education than myself—that seems like folly. Nor should I yield to the enchanting face and winning manner of the maiden who has to kill time by the mile at making of doilies and painting of china while books lie neglected—that would argue a superficial taste.

And yet, so numerous are these classes, so abundant are their charms, and so "deceitful and desperately wicked" is the heart, that I have stood on the brink of each one of these chasms, although immersed in the soberest of collegiate, graduate, and professional study. At such chasms as these we halt and choose the forty years of wandering instead of the promised land.

Another foe to marriage has been the hard times and ill winds which are now beating upon educated men. Competition is white hot. Can you secure the insertion of your contribution to a periodical unless you have a name that is well known, or unless the article is ordered beforehand, or unless it is offered gratis? If so, you are to be envied. Half a hundred others better qualified are clamoring for those inches of space. How shall the young lawyer or physician secure a case, or the minister a parish, when he is drowning in the sea of competitors? A family recently advertised for a tutor at a salary of something under $500 and expenses. Twenty-five or thirty replies were received, half of them from Harvard graduates. One was from a man of fifteen months' European experience, another from a Ph. D. Yet the salary is less than was commonly given three or four years ago to an unfledged graduate of a first-class college starting out in teaching, with his powers all untried.

It may be well enough to ask the lady of your choice to share an income of $1,000, if she is devoted enough; but to divide a deficit of $300—that is another matter. And hence it comes, I believe, that the land abounds in pure-minded young men, imbued with all the sentiment and tender passion of the age of chivalry—they will not tell you, they will jest about marriage to your face, but their hearts are hot and sometimes sick unto death with longing—who would gladly inaugurate the ideal life of the home, if they could but see their way over the barriers that confront them. THUMMIM.

FROM THE ETHICAL STANDPOINT.

It would be interesting could we subject some of our Benedicts to the inquisition and find out the reasons which led them into matrimony; qualified as experts their testimony would be of great value. I am inclined to think that it would be almost as difficult for them to justify their locus in quo by pure reason as it is for the unfortunate bachelors now upon the rack. Cupid, who is responsible for so much of the happiness of life, is not always amenable to reason.

A great novelist has said, "The love of any human object is the soul's ordeal," and, as a rule, it is doubtless true that through the joys and the responsibilities of that ordeal the human soul reaches a higher development, a more complete happiness and a capacity for greater usefulness. We are all endowed with affection and are responsible for its direction. By one who is free to marry this affection may yet be lavished upon self and forever remain stunted and dwarfed by its environment of purely selfish interests; or by another it may be devoted to humanity, and, in a life of unselfish endeavor, through years of laborious study and investigation, he may deny himself the joys of domestic life, and justify his refusal to accept its responsibilities and its cares by making a noble use of the freedom thereby acquired, in the production of some life work of a literary, scientific, social or political nature, which shall help to improve the condition of his fellowmen, and be a meliorating force in the life of the community. The result of such a life is its own justification, but we are apt to admire it as we do a snow-capped, solitary mountain. Between these extremes lie modifications and matrimony.

So, if we try to reason the matter out, I am inclined to the position that every man who can afford it, who is not under the necessity of devoting his life to the care of some one other than a wife (or himself), should marry and become a partaker in those duties of citizenship and of family life which make up so much of the activity about us, unless he is convinced that, by reason of especial unfitness for the married state or a peculiar fitness for a life of devotion to a special work which will demand all his time and effort, he is not justified in so doing. This latter class is not large, and the men who have done the best all-round work for the world have accomplished it by virtue also of that inspiration which attends happy married life. Seek your best individual development, not selfishly but as a component of the striving life about you, and with the respect of mankind in general will surely come the love of some woman in particular. A LAWYER.

My friends, our Lent is here. There is no magic in its days. It is only that we have resolved till Easter to give more time and thought to our religious life. All that may come to much or it may come to nothing. I beg you let it come to much. And the way to do that is to bring your soul up to the point of whole and genuine confession. By any discontent you have now with your life, by any longing for a better heart, by the solemn responsibility you owe to God, by the great, unutterable love of Christ I beg you not to let this Lent pass without confessing your sinfulness and being forgiven and becoming a grateful servant of Jesus Christ. May God grant it for all.—Phillips Brooks.

O thou the Life of living and of dead,
Who givest more the more thyself hast given,
Suffice us as thy saints thou hast sufficed,
That, beautified, replenished, comforted,
Still gazing off from earth and up to heaven,
We may pursue thy steps, Lord Jesus Christ.
—Christina Rossetti.

Children, on this wise God entereth into the soul immediately without a veil; that is, when a man wholly renounces self—all that he has. One moment in this state were more worth living than forty years spent in doing and leaving undone what we pleased. O God! with what things are men taken up while they waste this precious, blessed season of grace and come short of that pure, exalted good which might, and ought unceasingly, to be wrought in them; and so the long years roll slowly by, and they are as one in a sleep, never coming any farther, unstirred by God's grace.—John Tauler.

O patient God, whom men forsake,
All kind, all gracious as thou art,
How soon our faithlessness would break
A human heart!

How vast must be the love so strong,
Its yearning, O how fathomless!
That sin prolonged should yet prolong Thy tenderness!
—Harriet McEwen Kimball.

Almighty God, who knowest the hearts of all men, search and try whether or no the meditation of our hearts touching thee shall be sweet; whether we can bear to meditate upon thy pureness, upon thy justice; whether our past lives, our present faults, our future intentions, can before thee give us meditation which shall be sweet. And if, O Lord God, our meditation touching ourselves be bitter, into that bitter fountain press the healing branch of thy forgiveness. Teach us of thy mercy and longsuffering, thy patience, that though weeping and penitent, yet quietly rejoicing, we may abide in thy large love. When we look back upon times that are past, upon old, familiar faces that are gone; when we look forward to the times to come and fear the heat and the toil, the weary way and the narrow path, then, remembering that thou art tomorrow as today, and today as yesterday, and the same forever, may our meditation of thee be sweet. Grant us the bread of life and the water of life and the strength of life that until our dying day our meditation of thee may be sweet. Amen.

17. TRANSPOSITION.

He traveled much in foreign lands,
Had crossed Arabia's burning sands
Until to ONE precincts he came—
This weary aspirant for fame.
He next to China shaped his course,
Ignoring aid of FIVE or horse.
His next ambition was to seek
And to ascend FOUR highest peak;
But, meeting with some learned THREE,
He changed his purpose hastily,
Departed for the nearest college,
There to increase his stock of knowledge;
And now his morals, rumor says,
Evoke the SECOND warmest praise.

19. ANAGRAM.

When writing a rhyme or a riddle,
In measures that evenly flow,
There sometimes drops in the middle
A whimsical fancy or so;
A volunteer flower in your garden,
That straggles quite out of the row;
But, then, it is—begging your pardon—
THE NICE PART, you know.

When well-polished phrases are uttered
With dignified manner and slow,
A petulant jest may be muttered
In accents provokingly low,
Not spoken with malice aforethought,
The apple of discord to throw,
But only to slip in one more thought,
THE NICE PART, you know.

The solvers, who still protest that the first solution of the "Business Tangle" is incorrect, might find the matter made a little clearer by the complete ledger record of the administrator's settlement given by Moses Fuller, Watertown, Mass. In this the total estate is $10,000, including the $1,300 note. Dividing this total among the heirs it is found that the worthless note pays the second son's share ($841.66), leaving him still indebted to the other heirs in the sum of $458.34. As he is unable to pay this indebtedness it is deducted in proper proportion from the shares of the other heirs, leaving the result as given by the shorter solution.

MANNERS AND SOCIAL USAGES.

After a dinner it is due to one's hostess not to forget to take away the little menu or name card that she has provided as a souvenir of the occasion.

At the table one should not engross one's neighbor by conversation to such an extent that he is unable to satisfy his appetite or to appreciate what has been provided for his enjoyment.

Salad should not be cut up with knife and fork. Cheese is eaten by placing a bit on a cracker or piece of bread with the knife and so conveying to one's mouth. Bananas should be eaten with a fork.

It is a safe rule never to accept an invitation to a house from a gentleman alone. He may tell you that his family are anxious to see you, but, if so, they can express this anxiety in a cordial note of invitation.

It is not polite for a hostess to press the guest to be helped "again" or to have "more" of a certain dish. She should ignore the fact of the previous helping and simply say, "Shall I help you to so and so?"

Not infrequently one sees people guilty of the discourtesy of shaking hands with one person while speaking to another. It certainly is a rudeness not to give undivided attention to the person whom one is greeting.

The art of leaving is one which many women have yet to learn. Few of us but can count among our calling acquaintances persons whose tongues seem to be loosed as they arise to go, and who thoughtlessly keep their hostess standing expectantly at the door while they linger for a final chat or prolong their good-bys.

It is a relief to read in a popular society journal that the giving of wedding gifts is by no means as obligatory as it used to be and that one must be either of the same family or a dear friend of bride or bridegroom in order to feel entitled to this privilege. Thus it is evident that a wedding invitation does not necessitate a present.

It is comforting to learn from such good authority as Mrs. Burton Harrison that the eccentric fashion of writing in unnatural sequence upon the first, fourth, second and third pages of note paper, or in some equally perplexing order, has utterly gone out. The present note or letter of good society goes from beginning to end in regular sequence, over pages one, two, three, four, etc. If there is material only to fill two pages it should be written on pages one and two, not on pages one and three as is often seen.

The Conversation Corner.

DEAR CORNERERS: I wonder sometimes if you do not get almost out of patience with me because your letters written to the Corner are not in the Corner. Do let me explain it to you. The Congregationalist is not big enough to hold them all! All I can do is to try to answer them by mail and put them in the Drawer, hoping somehow they will have a chance by and by. But the Drawer is not big enough now! One day last week it stormed hard all day, so that I had no callers, and we looked them all over and sorted them out, arranging them alphabetically in different packages. One was marked Pomiuk; another, For early use (some in that group are a year or two old!); another, Old Folks (the writers are not all centenarians—that is to distinguish them from the children, who always have the preference); and a big bundle was labeled New Members. I resolved to print a whole Corner full of them at once—specially as the Despotic Foreman has been absent a week or two and I can have my own way.

(I think I will tell you privately about the absence of D. F. When I went into the office the other day and inquired for him, they all looked curiously, and the proofreader said he was "at the courthouse." He had been summoned before the Criminal Court! Poor D. F., perhaps I could help him. I hurried down to the great new courthouse on Pemberton Square. Through long corridors and up high elevators I went till I found a courtroom. The prisoner at the bar had his back to me. He was on trial, I was told by an officer who sat near me, for burglary. But soon the judge informed him that he was allowed to testify for himself, if he wished, although he was not obliged to do so. He stepped out of his box as brisk as a bee and stood on the witness stand where I could see him plainly. But it was not our Foreman at all! I was just going out to find another courtroom when the man at the head of the jurors looked up—and, behold, that was D. F.! How grandly he appeared, especially when the clerk of the court said, after a little, "What do you say, Mr. Foreman, is the prisoner guilty or not guilty?" I did not notice what the reply was, I was so glad that the foreman was not the prisoner!)

FROM NEW MEMBERS.

DUBUQUE, IO.

Dear Mr. Martin: I am nine years old and would like to be a Cornerer. I inclose —— to help Pomiuk. I also send stamp for a picture of him. Last winter I spent in Colorado and climbed up Cheyenne Mountain to Helen Hunt's grave. I am very much interested in the Conversation Corner and like to read the letters the children write.

Your little friend, DORIS B.

Doris is an odd but pretty name; does it belong to the West? I have lately sent a Corner Scrap-book to another Doris, in Chicago, but she is a much littler friend than you!

NORWICH TOWN, CT.

Dear Mr. Martin: I would like very much to belong to the Corner. I wish I had been with the little girl who visited your study. I go to school every day. We are learning about Cuba and Spain and of the troubles in Armenia. When the teacher said that the Spaniards beat in the last news that came, one of the boys said that they got to the telegraph office first. The girls made a snow fort at school today. I think that girls can throw snowballs almost as well as the boys can.

Your friend, JENNIE B.

Next Saturday is, in old custom, the girls' day—let them throw snowballs at the boys, if they like! That was a bright boy that spoke about the Spaniards' victory.

Dear Mr. Martin: I have a Corner Scrapbook which I like very much and I wish to be a Cornerer. I am eight years old and here is some money for Pomiuk a sum of —— cents.

Good-by, your friend, RUSSELL B.

Good-by, Russell. Call again.

SOMERVILLE, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: I wish to be a Cornerer if you are willing. I like very much to read in the Corner. I am eleven years old. I have never written any letters. My papa is dead. I have been reading about Pomiuk. I would like to send a little for the Corner cot. I cannot send very much, but every little helps. Please tell me the price of the Scrap-book.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Dear Mr. Martin: I am a little boy eight years old. I love to read the Cornerers' letters and I would like to be a Cornerer too. I live very near the rock where Roger Williams landed in 1636. CHESTER C.

Does it look like Plymouth Rock? Did he come by water from Boston? Dr. Dexter in his famous book, "As to Roger Williams," thinks he went overland—a hard journey on foot in 1636!

Dear Mr. Martin: Chester received your certificate. I am nine years old and wish very much to be a Cornerer myself. I belong to the Junior Endeavor Society of the Central Cong. Church. Have you any other Cornerers from that church? Your little friend,

MILDRED C.

I do not know. Your Sunday school superintendent is an honorary member!

ROXBURY, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: I am not a Cornerer, but I would like to be. May I? I always read the little letters which the children write. I am eleven years old. I have two dolls whose names I call Rosebud and Violet.

ALICE C.

I have your sister Mary's letter, too. If the Providence children are interested in Roger Williams, you two girls ought to be in John Eliot. Both of those good men loved the Indians and understood their language very well.

DENMARK, ME.

Dear Mr. Martin: I am eight years old. I belong to the Junior Endeavor. I go to the Sunday school. I study Arithmetic and Geography and Fourth Reader and Spelling. I want to be a little Corner boy. Don't you think it nice to be a Junior Endeavorer?

Your loving friend, FRED C.

Yes!

MACHIAS, ME.

Dear Mr. Martin: I want to be a Cornerer. I am eight. I have a dog named Fido. He will sit up and cross his paws when he wants anything. I have to go a mile to get to school. My aunt gave me a big book for a Christmas present, and it tells all about animals and it has pictures of animals in it. I like to read about animals and I like to read the Corner, too. Good-by, from WILLIE D.

If you come to see me, please leave your dog Fido outside, as a boy who called this morning left his dog Rufus (who, he told me, was from Maine) on the piazza. (Why do you suppose he was called Rufus?) My Kitty Clover has a special prejudice against dogs and will not be polite to them, even though belonging to Corner guests. A little while ago he came into the library and jumped on my table, sitting on the Corner letters, so as to get a good view out the window—he thought he saw the enemy in the distance!

Mr. Martin

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK.

A Devout Dog. This is quite another variety from the five described in the children's sermon in the Home Department last week, but there seems to be authority for such a type. One instance was recently given in the London Spectator. The dog belonged to an English clergyman, and when the books were brought out for evening prayers would always retire to his corner. One evening he was occupied in gnawing a bone, but immediately dropped it and took his proper place. The undevout cat seized the opportunity to seize the bone. The dog glowered at her, but stirred not an inch. But scarcely had the last "Amen" been said when he made one spring. The Spectator does not describe the fate of the cat, but intimates that she received a fitting punishment for her double sin of irreverence and robbery.

A Church-going Dog. Many such have been known, but this case is peculiar. He was Duncan McGregor's dog and lived in a Scotch-Canadian village on the Bay of Chaleur. Like other dogs he accompanied his master to church, sleeping under the rough benches till the Psalm after the sermon. On one occasion a stranger occupied the pulpit and also occupied the time to a length greatly exceeding the regular pastor's custom. Waking to hear the preacher's voice go on and on without any sign of stopping, he at last stretched himself and solemnly walked up the middle aisle to the front of the pulpit, where he took a long and inquiring look at the preacher. Then he walked back and lay down again under the bench. The preacher took the hint and brought his sermon to a sudden close. That dog was useful as well as devout!

Dogs in Court. It was their case which was in court, for they were run over on a railroad in Tennessee and killed. The owner of the hounds brought a suit against the railroad for damages. The judge's decision was an elaborate one, declaring that as the train was going west, toward Chattanooga, and the dogs were going east, toward Knoxville, all on the same track, a collision was unavoidable. The facts showed that the road was running its train upon its own track, on schedule time, and had no other track on which it could run. The dogs were running on the railroad's track, instead of on the fox's track, which simply crossed the railroad. It was therefore held by the court that the dogs were guilty of the grossest negligence and were only entitled to such consideration as trespassers have under the law.

Dogs in London. The Boy's Own Paper says that there are 1,234,567 in that city, and that 21,728 of them were received last year, as lost dogs, into the Battersea Home. That must be a happy place, for one dog after being taken home returned twice, the second time bringing several dogs with him.

Animals in School. That is, the children in a class were each asked to describe themselves as some animal, telling its color, some part of the body, what it does, what it eats, where it lives, last of all its name. These answers were written:

I am gray. I have a tail. I can hunt for nuts. I live in tree. I am a squirrel.

I am white. I have a tail. I can run. I eat meal. I live in a barn. I am a hen.

I am red. I have two horns. I can jump. I can eat grass. I live in the barn. I am a cow.

The last child evidently described her own proper self, as a little girl, until obliged to write her animal name. In how many particulars was the description correct?

I am white. I have a dress. I can run. I can eat an apple. I live in the brick block. I am a reindeer.

LESSON FOR MARCH 8. Luke 10: 25-37.

TRUE LOVE TO ONE'S NEIGHBOR.

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D.D.

For every event that occurred in Palestine and for almost every parable a place is pointed out, and often, though the location is a mere tradition, it makes the meaning of the story more vivid. About half way between Jerusalem and Jericho a lonely khan stands on a barren hilltop, and it is pointed out to travelers as the inn to which the Samaritan carried the wounded man of this parable. Robbers today infest that road. The scene has been re-enacted often in modern times, and men still go over that road who carefully avoid taking any responsibility for those they find in trouble.

The lawyer in the lesson was an official expounder of the law of Moses. He sought to measure his wit and knowledge with Jesus, but his question brought out a revelation of the brotherhood of man in strange contrast with the sentiment of that time, which lingers even yet in many Christian hearts. Concerning this command, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," Jesus showed:

1. Its character. Even the most eminent Jewish teachers had held that it was not the duty of Jews to love any but those of their own nation. They taught that Jehovah loved only Jews. He was the God of Abraham, of Isaac and Jacob. But the prayer of the pious Israelite was, "Pour out thy wrath upon the heathen that know thee not." The idea of human brotherhood, in which all men have common rights and where each owes common duties to all the others, had not yet been conceived. Max Müller says that the word "mankind" was unknown in ancient times.

But Jesus, in the beautiful and vivid picture he drew in answer to the lawyer's question, directed attention to "a certain man." No nationality is ascribed to him, no religious belief. He may have been black or red or yellow or white, rich or poor, ignorant or cultured—any man. The one fact which Jesus mentioned about him was that he was in trouble, therefore he had the claim of a neighbor on every one who discovered that he needed help. Thus Jesus planted a seed of truth which has destroyed slavery, broken down the barriers between nations, and is melting the walls between classes.

Jesus illustrated this disposition by preaching the gospel to the Samaritans, healing the daughter of the Syro-Phœnician woman and declaring that men should come from all parts of the world, and sit down with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, with all the privileges of Jews. The apostles caught the idea, and soon advanced far beyond their race and time. The early history of Christianity is a splendid illustration of the meaning of this parable. The first Christian church was composed of Jews only. But Philip soon found his way to Samaria and organized a church of that despised race, which the Jewish Christians received into fellowship. Peter baptized the Roman Cornelius and his family into the name of Jesus. Barnabas and Paul found in Antioch a company of Gentiles who believed in Jesus and, without attempting to make them Jews, admitted them to equal privileges in the church. Then the council of leading Christians met at Jerusalem and decided that Gentiles could come into fellowship with them without obeying Jewish laws. So Paul and his fellow-workers broke over the boundaries which divided continents and proclaimed throughout Europe that Christ had tasted death for every man; inviting all men to come into a relation with each other "where there cannot be Greek and Jew, . . . barbarian, Scythian, bond or free; but Christ is all and in all." Every one without Christ is in need, and his need gives him the claim of a brother on every Christian and on Christ himself.

2. The basis of love to one's neighbor. It is love to God controlling the whole life [v. 27]. "This is the first and great commandment. And a second like unto it is this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." These two commandments cannot be separated. "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar." God has made man in his own image; and because of the possibilities in every man of being like God, every one who really loves God will in Christ's spirit seek the welfare of all mankind. No scheme for perfecting society will avail in which the great commandment is not placed first.

This is the spirit of modern missions, which sees in every Chinaman, Negro, Indian, the potential image of God, and therefore leads men to forsake their homes and country to carry to these other nations and races that which will make the potential likeness of God in them actual and visible. It is the spirit which fights off thieves and robbers from our own country and which would thrust back the bloody Turk from his grasp of the throat of the Armenian Christian, because that is the most neighborly service we can render to both. The priests and Levites who are passing by and leaving these thousands dying and dead have a fearful account against them which many of our kinsfolk must yet settle.

3. The expression of love to one's neighbor. Brotherhood seeks to satisfy in brothers the need that is already felt, whether that is greatest or least. A multitude gathered about Jesus one day beside the Lake of Galilee whose greatest need was the bread of life, but they didn't realize this. They were only hungry for the bread that perisheth; therefore he first satisfied the need they felt and then taught them of the bread which came down from heaven. He did not limit his brotherliness to his profession. The priest who passed by the wounded man would not have refused to offer sacrifice for him at the proper time and place. But his mistake was that he measured his obligation to mankind by his profession. It is too common a mistake of ministers and churches.

The Levite was less trammeled by his business, which was less exclusive. The priest ministered at the altar in behalf of men, the Levite took care of the building; therefore he had a little larger interest in men. He paused a moment in his journey, but as soon as he took in the situation he passed on in the path of his superior.

Then came a Samaritan, whom priest and Levite despised. He knew nothing about the man and asked nothing. But he had a heart which was ready to be touched by any case of need. He just met in practical fashion the sufferer's immediate want as far as he discovered it and was able to meet it. Then he went about his business. He gave to the sufferer time, money, the benefit of his acquaintance and credit with the landlord of the inn.

These were the characters which Jesus presented to the lawyer, asking him to choose which one answered his question. There was of course but one to choose, the last one he would have wished—not a church member, not of the chosen people of God, yet obedient to the law of God which they neglected.

4. What our love should be to our neighbor. Jesus taught this from the story he told and the lawyer's comment on it. "Go, and do thou likewise." Don't try to be a Samaritan, but be a neighbor. Every human being is a child of your Father. In order to make them know your common Father you must treat them as brothers. Whoever is in need whom you can reach has a claim on you. You are part of Christ's church. Your brothers are both within and without it. Every needy one appeals to it and to you. Disciples of Jesus may not stop in their aim and effort short of a renewed society from which poverty and sorrow and sickness shall have been banished, in which reigns the love that joins mankind together and to God in one family.

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM.

WILLIAM ANDERSON OF OLD CALABAR.

Year by year the ranks of our intrepid pioneer missionaries among savage tribes are growing thinner, but Paton and Chalmers are still laboring with unwearied energy and enthusiasm in their beloved fields, and along with them may be placed Rev. William Anderson who, at the age of eighty-four years, has recently returned to the scene of nearly forty years' missionary service on the west coast of Africa. The son of a stocking weaver, born at Galashiels, Scotland, in 1812, Mr. Anderson possesses all the sterling traits of the old Scotch peasant. While tending sheep on his native hills in boyhood he mastered the Shorter Catechism, and, during a later period, when earning his living in various humble lines of work, the young man resolutely educated himself. Books were his constant companions, and he had an insatiable desire to master the Hebrew New Testament.

When still a youth the call came for young unmarried men to go out to a newly established mission in Jamaica, and after a brief educational course at Edinburgh Mr. Anderson was accepted as a teacher and eventually as a minister in connection with the Scotch United Presbyterian Church. After a notable ministry near Kingston, Jamaica, he sailed in 1848 with his wife, a native of the West Indies, for Old Calabar to join the pioneers of one of the most interesting enterprises of the Presbyterian Church. Anderson and his fellow-worker, Rev. Hugh Goldie, a veteran who passed away at Creek Town last August in his eightieth year, have lived to see wonderful triumphs wrought among cannibals, similar to those associated with the names of Coan, Moffat, or Paton. Man sacrifice has been abolished, likewise the ordeal of the poison bean. The natives have been clothed and are being educated in twenty-two schools, the Sabbath is observed, the Bible and sixty or seventy other books have been printed at the mission station in the native tongue. There are now five well-organized congregations with twenty other places at which regular services are held, while twelve native teachers are engaged in spreading the glad tidings. Truly, as Mr. Anderson often says, "The dawn has broken; daylight is nigh."

With the exception of brief furloughs, he remained at his post until driven away by ill health in 1889. The farewell scene was pathetic, large numbers of the natives crowding on board the vessel crying, "Our father has gone, our father has gone." After sojourning in the Canary Islands for a couple of years he returned to Scotland, where in Auld Reekie and the border country he has stirred the hearts of thousands by his story of grace at the Old Calabar Mission. Although he has seen the jubilee year of his service as a foreign missionary — a distinction which is believed to be unique—this sturdy Scotchman does not think he has yet finished his work. With health restored he has returned to Old Calabar, that he may labor and die among his beloved children in the faith.

THE WORLD AROUND.

Shall Native Converts Come to America? One of the problems which is confronting foreign mission boards today concerns the policy of these organizations regarding native Christians who come to this country from various mission fields for the purpose of "preparing themselves to be missionaries among their own people." Important action has recently been taken on this matter by the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, which, in view of the frequent calls for aid from such foreigners, has placed upon record its conviction that native converts should not be encouraged to come to this country, or treated in such a way while here as to induce others to follow their example. In the paper setting forth the policy of the board attention is called to the fact that the bringing of a single man to America and returning him to his native land usually involves an expenditure sufficient to train a dozen on the field, and this document declares that native Christians should be made to understand that "it is quite out of the question for us to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars to maintain institutions for their training on the foreign field and then in addition to pay any part of the expense incurred in costly and unnecessary trips to America." Aside from economic considerations, the policy of encouraging these young men is discountenanced on the ground that it removes the brightest students from the humbler spheres in which they are most needed, stimulates a worldly ambition, cuts off patriotism and race sympathy, and creates discontent among the native agents.

More Reindeer for Alaska. It is interesting to note, in a recent communication from Washington, that in order to make the introduction of reindeer into Alaska a success our Government depends largely upon the efforts of workers in the missionary and Government schools to teach the natives to breed and train the reindeer, thus raising the population from the savage state of mere hunters and fishermen to the higher condition of herdsmen and teamsters. The Secretary of the Interior has approved and forwarded to Congress the recommendation of the Commissioner of Education that $45,000 should be appropriated this year for the purchase of reindeer. This sum would secure 1,500 to 2,000 animals, which, added to the 900 already in the herd kept at Port Clarence, will form a nucleus that would soon produce large herds. This matter has an important bearing on the future of missionary work in Alaska, not only from a humanitarian standpoint but because this new industry will open up the country to commerce, and the deer furnish the rapid transportation needed to make settlements in the territory safe and prosperous.

High Tide in Uganda. Letters from Uganda announce the safe arrival in Mengo of Bishop Tucker with his party, including the first women missionaries for that country. Their enthusiastic welcome was almost overwhelming. Three weeks before they reached their destination greetings began to reach them from Uganda chiefs and from that time on proofs of the interest in their arrival multiplied every day. As they approached Mengo they found every place of vantage occupied by interested spectators — Mohammedan and heathen as well as Protestant and Roman Catholic Christians. Bishop Tucker describes the scene graphically: "Still the crowd increased until the atmosphere about me was almost suffocating. It was a wonderful sight never to be forgotten as we reached the mission compound. When Waganda, in white dresses and red bark cloth, were mingled with Wasoga, in their more somber garments, and Nubians in their varied costumes, under a tropical sun undimmed by a cloud, the result must be a sight striking in the extreme. I saw great crowds come together when Sir Gerald Portal entered Mengo, but they were nothing to the crowds which welcomed the first English women to set foot in the capital of Uganda." The following Sunday an immense congregation, numbering at least 6,000 persons, gathered in and around the new church. Forty-four natives were baptized, making 2,000 souls taken into the church during nine months in Mengo and its suburbs alone.

Foreign Sunday School Association. This organization of men and women for extending and aiding Sunday school work abroad has for twenty-five years been carrying on an interesting enterprise by somewhat unique methods. Anticipating the modern modes of university extension and correspondence schools its work has been prosecuted by means of letter writing. The address of a Christian man or woman abroad who either is, or is willing to become, engaged in religious work is obtained from a reliable source and a printed circular descriptive of a simple method of organizing and conducting a Sunday school is sent this person in a language which he is likely to understand, together with a personal letter of instruction and sympathy. Schools thus formed receive financial aid, but in no case depend upon the association permanently and entirely for their support. An important feature of the work is the publication and dissemination of religious juvenile reading matter in various foreign languages. The association has Sunday schools in Spain and Portugal, Mexico, South America, Italy, France, Germany, Austria and even India, China, Japan and Madagascar.

PRAYER MEETING.

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN.

Topic, March 8–14. Heroes of Missions. 2 Cor. 11: 23–28.

Information and inspiration should characterize a meeting with such a grand topic. If the suggestion that each participant give an instance of missionary heroism is carried out, every one will go away wiser and more enthusiastic in Christ's service. The trouble with us all is we do not know enough about the personal factor in missionary work. Means of instruction are close at hand, and every Christian Endeavorer ought to know enough about the apostolic, mediæval and modern missionaries to be able to mention some one or more than one as worthy to be ranked among the heroes of the faith. The reading of biographies has often been urged in these columns. The story of the life of such a man as Xavier, of Carey, of Hannington or of James Gilmour ought to interest and fascinate a Christian as much as any standard romance or current novel.

But we want to be in touch with the missionary work as it is going actively forward in the world today, and here, again, the best avenue of approach is to become interested in certain individuals. To know Dr. Barnum in Turkey, for instance, is to become intelligent respecting the whole course of evangelism in that country. There are just as noble men and women bearing the commission of our great societies today as ever before. The London Missionary Society has in Griffith John in China and James Chalmers in New Guinea representatives whose courage, wisdom and consecration entitle them to rank with the men whose deeds are recorded in the Acts of the Apostles. Yet it seems perhaps unjust to mention a few only, for the rank and file are not lacking in heroic qualities even though we hear little of their toils and triumphs.

To learn about these personally is to gain an impetus for the service of the Master in the place where our own work lies. It would be worth all it cost to the Christian Church to sustain its missionary enterprises if nothing more resulted than the quickening effect upon Christians at home. To think of our self-denying brethren and sisters witnessing for Christ, sometimes at the risk of their lives, makes us dissatisfied with a life that has in it no element of sacrifice. The more we study these heroes the more we find ourselves asking what explains their devotion, what is the secret of their happiness. I know a missionary of the American Board who, after visiting a great many New England churches while here on a furlough, said that he hadn't seen a single pastorate for which he would be willing to exchange the field he left in China. Dr. Grenfell, who is the head and front of the missionary work along the coast of Labrador, could not be detained in Boston when here the other day as long as his presence was desired, so anxious was he to be at his post of duty.

The reality of the Christian life, the present reward of Christian service—these are the great lessons which missionaries, ancient and modern, teach us who stay at home.

BOOK REVIEWS.

TWO NEW HYMN-BOOKS.

Of the making of hymn-books there seems to be no end, and for the good of the church we trust there never will be an end so long as it is the church militant, for improvement is the order of the day and in nothing has the worship of the churches shown greater improvement of late years than in its service of song. To Dr. Charles S. Robinson more than to any other man, perhaps, our American churches are indebted for this constant improvement in the quality of its hymns and tunes, but with all the merits of Dr. Robinson's books he will need to look well to his laurels. Not long ago Dr. Lyman Abbott gave us an admirable revision of the Plymouth Hymnal; The Church Hymnary, edited by Mr. E. A. Bedell of Albany, has found its way into many of our leading churches; Hymns of the Faith, by President Tucker and Professor Harris, has many excellent features; and now comes this new Presbyterian Hymnal, authorized by the General Assembly, and in many respects in advance of all its predecessors and competitors. In its mechanical make-up and appearance it leaves nothing to be desired, while the good judgment of its editors is to be seen on every page. The committee to whom this work was assigned consisted of five men, including the musical editor, but the book is manifestly the product, in large measure, of one mind, and we congratulate the Presbyterian Church on its choice. There is a unity about the book, both in its hymns and tunes, which makes it peculiarly attractive. Here are more than 700 hymns, not including a brief collection of ancient hymns and psalms for chanting and an admirable selection from the Psalms for responsive reading, all within the compass of a volume that is handy to use and pleasing to the eye.

Many will be disposed to say here are too many hymns; 500 are better than 700 if wisely chosen. But the man who sat down to reject 200 of these hymns would have an unenviable task on his hands. We find many new hymns here and we miss some that the older books contained. But for comprehensiveness, for poetic merit as well as religious feeling, for adaptation to all the moods and phases of Christian experience and for practical use in the services of the church this book seems to us a decided success.

The test of a hymn-book is not in its hymns alone, however. We find here many new tunes, more than we think there ought to be. The book would have been better, in our judgment, if the copyright tunes, excellent as some of them are, had been fewer in number. But one finds here nearly all of the best familiar tunes, together with many others that are sure to be favorites as they become known. The modern English school predominates, as it does and should in all the best hymn-books, but not to the exclusion of any American composer whose work entitles him to a place beside Barnby, Sullivan, Goss, Gauntlett, Monk, Hopkins and Dykes. We are especially pleased with the adaptation of tunes to hymns and the unusual care, everywhere manifest, to make this a book of dignified and inspiring Christian worship, suited not for choirs only or chiefly but for congregations, and we are sure it will do much to improve the worship and educate the taste of all who use it. It is altogether worthy the great Presbyterian body for which it has been prepared. [Presbyterian Board of Publication. $2.00.]

The University Hymn-Book, for use in the chapel of Harvard University, is the outgrowth of the system of religious worship now in vogue at Harvard University, by which prominent ministers of different denominations succeed one another in the conduct of the services. To insure the undenominational character of the hymns the device was hit upon of asking several of these preachers to the university to suggest fifty hymns each for the collection. The men who are responsible for this hymn-book, according to the statement of the preface, are Edward Everett Hale, Phillips Brooks, Alexander McKenzie, George A. Gordon, Lyman Abbott and Brooke Herford, although Professor Peabody accepts the final responsibility as editor.

The hymns number 288, and have been selected with special reference to the needs and aspirations of young men, while the choice and adaptation of the tunes is the work of the choir master and organist of the university. Obviously there is very little ground for comparison between such a book as this and the Hymnal of the Presbyterian church. And yet it is strange how similar the books are in the general tone and spirit of their hymns. One would expect, perhaps, to find a good deal of Calvinism in the one and a mild form of Unitarianism in the other. But the Calvinism and the Unitarianism are alike absent, perhaps for the excellent reason that neither is very singable. It is natural that we should find a somewhat more fervid type of piety in a manual for general use in the church than in a book designed for college students exclusively. The limitations of the Harvard book justify the exclusion of many hymns that every church manual requires. But this book is a testimony to the truth that the faith that can be sung is not sectarian. The university hymn-book is gotten up in sumptuous style, and no pains or expense seems to have been spared to make it worthy of the institution for which it is designed. There is no cramping or crowding to get a certain number of hymns and tunes within a certain space. The paper is superb; the printing and binding are elegant. The tunes are, for the most part, well chosen, though taken almost exclusively from English sources. Some of the adaptations are excellent, and the musical editor has done his work with taste and judgment. Whoever goes to the chapel in Cambridge will hear good music, dignified, worshipful and elevating. He will hear, also, some of the choicest hymns of the church universal. But he will hear many that are wholly unfamiliar, and will miss many that we think ought to be found in this collection.

The trouble with the university hymn-book, in our judgment, is in the method by which the hymns were selected. We venture to say that any one of these distinguished preachers could have made a better selection by himself than all of them have made, and we think the Plummer professor would have done better without their aid. But the task was a difficult one. This book is thoroughly Christian, and we find it, also, truly evangelical. The gospel is here in its fullness. The young men who use it will find, we are sure, what Professor Peabody desires them to find in it, "masculine piety and honest aspiration." Its very form encourages reverence, and its indexes are an example of the work that should be found in every book of the kind. [Cambridge, published by the University. $1.75.]

BIBLICAL CRITICISM.

Professor Salmond of the Free Church College, Aberdeen, has much enlarged his Cunningham Lectures on The Christian Doctrine of Immortality since they were delivered. They come to us in the form of a book of 700 pages beautifully printed in large, clear type, with supplementary notes and Scripture and topical indices. The book confines itself to the witness of Scripture. "The words of Christ are to me the highest authority," the author says in his preface. By confining himself to these limits there is space for a full consideration in the six chapters of the ethnic preparation, the Old Testament preparation, Christ's teaching, the general apostolic teaching, the Pauline doctrine and a summing up of results.

This is too large a subject to be discussed in this place, but, while we express our satisfaction with the manner in which Professor Salmond has worked out his results and our general agreement with his conclusions, we may also remind our readers of the significant silence of Scripture in regard to much that we would like to know. There are burning questions involved in the discussion. Professor Salmond predicates the development of teaching in the Scripture and the full right of critical study of the books of which it is composed. He discusses the doctrine of conditional immortality and combats it, as "an artificial and makeshift answer to the questions of the end which is not likely to commend itself permanently to many minds." He considers the argument for restorationism much stronger though, it seems to him, without Scripture warrant. Upon the question of millenarianism his opinions are very decided in opposition, though he concedes that it was the early view of the church, and has no explanation to offer of the crucial passage in the Apocalypse except a vague suggestion that the passage may have been interpolated. Finally, and this is the keynote to most of the modern discussion on the subject, he rejects in toto the doctrine of an intermediate state.

With these indications of the purpose and conclusions of the book we commend it to the attention of our readers as a full and fair discussion of the most difficult subject of modern theology. [Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark. Imported by Charles Scribner's Sons. $5.00 net.]

In St. Paul, the Traveller and the Roman Citizen, by W. M. Ramsay, professor of humanity at Aberdeen, we have the handsome volume of the Morgan Lectures delivered at Auburn Seminary in 1894, together with the Mansfield College (Oxford) Lectures of 1895. Other lectures delivered during the author's American tour, at Harvard, Johns Hopkins and Union Theological Seminary, are also worked up in this volume.

Dr. Ramsay's lectures aroused much interest and not a little criticism at the time of their delivery, but he has seen no reason to modify his opinions. Traversing familiar ground, the book is notable rather for its rearrangement and new comparative estimate of materials than for any new discoveries of value, the presence of which the author expressly disclaims. The method employed is that of historical and critical examination, primarily of the Acts and incidentally of the epistles of Paul. Dr. Ramsay is not afraid of criticism. "The fire which consumes the second-rate historian," he says, "only leaves the real master brighter and stronger and more evidently supreme. The keenest criticism will do him the best service in the long run." But "the critic in his turn," he adds, "requires high qualities," and this is a consideration which we think the ordinary estimate of the critical process makes too little of. As a result of this exacting criticism he does not hesitate to place the author of Acts among the historians of the first rank. From the discussion of the material he passes to the origin of St. Paul, and follows him in his life as chronicled by Luke. The book concludes with a discussion of the earlier chapters of Acts, which Dr. Ramsay thinks much inferior to the main body of the book, because evidently made up as a compilation from inferior sources of information. There is a large map of the Pauline world in a pocket and an index of Scripture references, but the absence of a topical index is a great hindrance to the usefulness of the book and we hope it may be added in a second edition. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.00.]

POETRY.

The Hawthorne Tree and Other Poems is by Nathan Haskell Dole. Some of the poems included in this volume are familiar to the readers of The Congregationalist, as they first saw the light in its columns. Mr. Dole's muse is literary, but she is well acquainted also with the pleasant country ways. There is no very long poem in the volume, but there is evidence of a considerable range of ambition and accomplishment. In the difficult task of writing vers de société the author shows a pleasant lightness of touch, his songs are musical and free, and in his more serious moods he often strikes a note of deep and suggestive thought. Perhaps we shall take him at his best if we quote a poem which he calls A Russian Fantasy:

> O'er the yellow crocus on the lawn
> Floats a light, white butterfly.
> Breezes waft it! See, 'tis gone!
> Dushka, little soul, when didst thou die?

Most of the sonnets seem to us to lack the last touch of inevitableness which crowns the limitations of the form, but they are dignified and thoughtful. [Thomas Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25.]

We question whether William Michael Rossetti has done a real service to his sister's fame in collecting and publishing New Poems by Christina Rossetti. There is always the doubt whether a writer's own judgment as to the work by which he is to be known ought not to be respected, but here there is more than the gathering up of verses of her best work missed from previous editions—there is an inclusion which reaches down to her confessed failures, and even to sonnets written in sport in the game called Bouts-rimés, where the rhymes are given and the rest of the poem is filled up by the players at a sitting. Beautiful as are many of the thoughts, and in spite of the occurrence here and there of a perfectly finished poem, we should regret to have the book fall into the hands of one who was unfamiliar with Christina Rossetti's acknowledged work, because we fear that it would bar the way to acquaintance. For those who already know and love her, however, the book will have a real biographical value, and they will treasure the prefixed portrait, which is reproduced from a sketch by Dante Gabriel Rossetti made in the earlier days of her life, and enjoy the notes, which contain much matter of personal interest. [Macmillan & Co. $1.75.]

There is much beauty of thought and manner in the book of Poems by Ernest McGaffey. They carry us far to East and West, and they lift us at least a little way out of our common everyday surroundings. If the wish of the author that his songs may be to some other man what the songs of others have been to him fails of fulfillment, it will be largely due, we fear, to the prevailing pessimism of the book. There are gleams of faith and courage, but they are hid by many clouds of doubt, and the courage is too often merely that of the stoic. Let the author read the first stanza of his own False Chords, and ask himself whether he cannot find in God's world some nobler and more cheerful themes of song than he has usually chosen for this book. [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25.]

Miss Catharine Aiken's little book, Methods of Mind Training, deserves the careful attention of teachers and parents. It develops a method of work which is to the whole intellectual progress of the pupil what the preliminary sharpening of the tool is to the day's labor. By training and fixing the power of attention Miss Aiken has wonderfully stimulated the memory of her pupils, and, if we may judge by the remarkable letters at the end, secured large results with much economy of time and labor. Her methods are detailed, and selected examples for practice are appended. We commend the book to the attention of educators. [Harper & Bros. $1.00.]

The Religious Training of Children is a book of talks about life and its purpose as the conditioning environment of the child's religious growth, reprinted by request from the Metaphysical Magazine. With many of Mrs. Diaz's conclusions we are in sympathy, but we wish she had not made it so hard for us to say so by her discursive and minatory excursions across the whole field of polemic theology.

An Outline Study of United States History by Harlow Godard might be described as a conspectus of the subject fitted to the Procrustean bed of the legal forty weeks of the New York school year, with added directions for study, lists of books for reference and reviews at the close of each study. A pupil who works out this plan will have a good grasp of the subject, but we fear that it will require an enthusiastic teacher, or unusual mental activity of mind in the scholar, to make the study interesting. We dislike the salmon-colored boards in which the book is bound. [C. W. Bardeen: Syracuse, N. Y. 50 cents.]

The Reader's Shakespeare is the first volume of an edition of the plays, "condensed, connected and emphasized for school, college, parlor and platform." We have in this volume the historical plays, and the work of excision and expurgation seems to be very well done. There will be differences of opinion as to the choice of what is to be cut out, but there is less room for debate here than there will be when it comes to the comedies. We hope those who use this book will be sure to let their pupils know that this is not the whole of Shakespeare, but, with that caution, are disposed to commend the book for the purposes for which it has been prepared. [Funk & Wagnalls Co. $1.50.]

Two books for the younger children come from Ginn & Co., Little Nature Studies for Little People, a primer and first reader from the essays of John Burroughs, and All the Year Round, a nature reader by Frances L. Strong. Each will help children to a knowledge of the beauty of the earth as well as to a mastery of their mother tongue. [30 and 35 cents.]

In Maynard's English Classic series the latest is The Conquest of Mexico, by William H. Prescott, with biography, critical opinions and notes. While prepared especially for school reading, the convenient form of the book and the brevity of the narrative will make it available for many who would not venture upon the complete work. A good portrait of Prescott is used as frontispiece. [Maynard, Merrill & Co. 36 cents.]

MISCELLANEOUS.

A History of Money and Prices, by J. Schoenhof, is an interesting and important contribution to the economic discussions of the day. The writer's thesis is that prices are "not to be considered as simple units, but as the results of all the factors involved in the processes of production and distribution including the action of government in the exercise of its political prerogative," but a large part of the book is given to the support of the contention that the quantities of gold and silver in circulation have had little to do with the rise and fall of prices. This belief aroused much criticism in earlier publications by the author, and all the more because the contrary opinion is one of the commonplaces of much of the current discussion of the so-called silver question, but the author finds it justified by his historical researches. If it be true that the course of prices is nearly independent of the amount of metal money in circulation, the problems of political economy are much simplified. The book is in pleasant contrast to many treatises which treat of the same problems in being optimistic throughout. Incidentally it makes light of many popular bugaboos, including that of Japanese and Chinese competition. There is a good, but not quite comprehensive enough index. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.]

What may be called unconscious autobiography has an interesting example in the Letters and Verses of Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, which has been edited by Rowland E. Prothero, M. A. This is supplementary to the Life of Stanley, which has been some time before the public, and those who knew him or have an interest in the work he did and the period of English church life of which he was a part will find here material of great interest. The book begins with glimpses of his school and college life and contains many specimens of his power of graphic description in letters written in the course of foreign travel. A few letters from Jowett to Stanley are included and are among the most significant in the book. The editor has done his work well and the brief explanatory notes prefixed to the letters are real helps toward intelligent reading. Dean Stanley's verses are rather of personal and biographical than literary interest. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $5.00.]

Head Waters of the Mississippi, by Capt. Willard Glazier, consists of two distinct and independent parts, each occupying about half the space of the book. The earlier comprises brief sketches of the explorers to whom is due our first knowledge of the river, from De Vaca and De Soto to Schoolcraft, Nicollet and Lanman; the rest is made up of the journals and accounts of the two expeditions in which the author determined and verified the true source of the Mississippi in the little lake just south of Itasca, which is called by his name, together with answers to criticisms, confirmatory testimony, etc. The first part is very well written history, the second loose material for the future historian. There are maps, portraits and illustrations, but no index! [Rand, McNally & Co. $2.50.]

A memorial volume of the late Rev. Chauncey Giles, with biography, portrait and twenty-one discourses, is Progress in Spiritual Knowledge, which is the title also of the first of the original papers included in the book. Mr. Giles's activity as a minister of the New Church and his other writings in exposition of the teachings of Swedenborg are well known to students of the subject. [Am. New Church Tract and Publication Society. $1.50.]

Thomas H. Speakman's Divisions in the Society of Friends comes to us in a third and enlarged edition. This is a polemic book, stating the view of the divergent (or Hicksite) party, who are called "Friends" invariably throughout the volume while the regular body are called "Orthodox Friends." The book is too peppery in tone, we fear, to have much value either as a contribution to church history or as an overture toward reconciliation. [J. B. Lippincott Co. 50 cents.]

NOTES.

— E. A. Abbey has just been elected an associate member of the Royal Academy in London.

— The publication of the Life of Cardinal Manning has raised a storm about the ears of the author.

— A new three act opera, founded on Longfellow's Spanish Student, was recently produced in Dublin. The composer and adapter were both Italians.

— The Century Company offers three prizes for designs for posters suitable for its midsummer number. If the unsuccessful designs should be of sufficient interest to warrant an exhibition, the company proposes to retain them long enough for that purpose.

— We congratulate the Prospect Union of Cambridge upon the fine appearance and high quality of its periodical, The Cambridge Magazine, in the first number of its new series. If it can maintain its initial high standard of interest, it will be one of the periodicals which students of modern life cannot afford to neglect.

— It is proposed that there shall be a Federal register of copyrights to relieve the librarian of Congress of work which has grown beyond his power of following it. From the literary point of view this will be one of the most important Government positions, and it should be put and kept beyond the reach of the spoils politicians.

— In an article in the March Scribner's Richard Whiting, an English newspaper writer, says of the President's famous Venezuela message: "President Cleveland has builded better than he knew with the famous message. He has compelled us on both sides of the Atlantic to revise our judgment of each other." This is true of England; we question whether it is true of America.

— The Boston Public Library has received as a gift from Col. T. W. Higginson his valuable library of books relating to the history of women. This is the result of fifty years of collecting, and is to be kept by itself as the nucleus for a library of research upon this question. While containing many curiosities, the collection is especially rich in books which treat of the social, political and economical extension of woman's sphere.

— In the February number the Yale Review announces a change of scope and of editors. Leaving the field of general history to the new American Historical Review, it will give especial attention to the scientific and historical treatment of questions relating to the distribution of wealth and related sociological topics. Professors G. P. Fisher and G. B. Adams retire from the editorial board, and their places will be filled by Professors Blackman, Bourne and Irving Fisher, all of Yale.

— At a recent meeting of the American Authors' Guild in New York the president, Gen. James Grant Wilson, announced the formation of the Associated Authors' Publishing Company. This is to be a purely mutual organization of and for authors in close affiliation with the guild, publishing approved books at the author's expense. The writer will be entitled to all the profits of the sale less a small percentage for handling. We shall watch this experiment, new to America, with great interest, and hope that it may be of use to authors.

— The Christian Leader (Universalist) and the Christian Register (Unitarian) each print an address of Prof. George Harris of Andover Seminary on Ethical Modifications of Theology. It is in substance a chapter of a forthcoming book entitled Moral Evolution. This chapter includes an able and interesting account of changes which have been taking place in religious belief during the present century, since the time when the creed of Andover Seminary was formulated, which the seminary professors are obliged to sign once in every five years.

WHAT MEN SAY.

I know of no worse sign of the times than the prurient curiosity just now so rife about the petty details—if scandalous, so much the better—of the lives of eminent persons. I know no more ignominious occupation than those who minister to it.—W. S. Lilly.

We Episcopalians have had a good deal to say lately about Christian unity; but, if you look at us real hard, you will find out that our unity means that we want you all to believe as we do. I believe that Christian conduct is the first and ultimate ground of Christian unity.—Rev. Dr. David H. Greer.

It is one people which goes by the name of the United States of America, and long will it continue to be that if we continue to remain homogeneous. If we take into it unassimilable elements, if we make into citizens great numbers of persons who have no understanding of things which we have for a hundred years studied and wrought for and inherited to be of us, we shall then make a great mistake.—Ex-Senator George F. Edmunds.

If a man takes a stand and declines to surrender it for considerations of money, convenience or preference, he is twitted with being handicapped with Plymouth ancestry and Mayflower associations. I am proud of my New England and Puritan ancestry, and I wish there were a Plymouth Rock in every blessed State of the Union, and a whole ledge of them running from the battery to Westchester. We believe in breadth, but some of us are getting sick of a breadth that is so diffusive that it starts everywhere in general and ends nowhere in particular.—Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, D.D.

I believe I have grown to the point where I can love a white man as much as a black man. I have grown to the point where I can love a Southern white man as much as a Northern white man. To me "a man is a man for a' that and a' that." As a race I believe that we strengthen ourselves at every point by extending this sympathy, for no race can cherish ill will and hatred toward another race without its losing in all of those elements that tend to create and perpetuate a strong and healthy manhood. I propose that no man shall drag me down by making me hate him.—Booker T. Washington.

We need general assemblies of the people in the smaller civil subdivisions, to be held regularly once or twice a year, town meetings in which two questions only shall be considered: First, are the public officers faithfully and honestly transacting the public business? Second, are the laws—not this law nor that, but all laws—enforced and obeyed? All questions of law reform should be excluded, left to parties or societies organized to promote them. The enforcement of the law, whether we opposed or aided the making of it, the strict accountability of public officers, whether we opposed or aided their election, should be the objects and the limits of these meetings. There should be no distinction of persons.—Ex-President Harrison.

There is no part of the college career of greater moment than that which teaches with right rubrics the fundamental principles of political science and of those things which go to make good citizenship. It is quite possible that we may have more chemists and other scientific men than we want, but there is always an ever-increasing demand for men who come with trained intellects to the study of the practical problems of the concrete politics of the land, where in simple manhood is all that is necessary for enfranchisement. Patriotism is not a matter of reminiscence, a matter of brass bands, of fireworks, or of Fourth of July orations. Patriotism is a matter of the present tense, indicative mood. In its composite idea and in its manifestations you will find faith in God, reverence for the right and a stern devotion to the commonweal.—President Patton of Princeton.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM THE INTERIOR.

The Chicago Y. M. C. A.

The reports at the annual meeting, Monday night, Feb. 10, were both interesting and encouraging. The building occupied by the central department, half of which is rented out, is valued at $1,665,000. There is an indebtedness on it of more than $600,000, which it is hoped rentals and pledges yet to be realized will in time obliterate. West Side property, valued at $50,000, has on it a debt of $6,000 only. There are reading-rooms at nine different points in the city, open every day. There are gymnasiums at eight different points in the city. As in years past, the employment bureau has been of great service. The religious work has been made prominent, but much attention has been given to the educational department. Seventy-four different classes have been held every week. With an enrollment of 1,050 in these schools, there has been an attendance during the year in all the classes of 43,125. All instruction has been given in the evening to young men who have completed their day's work. As a college for the people this Y. M. C. A. is proving very successful. A dormitory for men out of work is greatly needed and perhaps will soon be obtained. The work on the West Side, though less in amount, is hardly less important than that done in the central department. The fees paid by members is not far from $24,000 annually. The association has now completed thirty-eight years of service in the city, but is only just equipped for its duties.

The Drainage Canal.

This great work is approaching completion. This seems almost incredible when we remember that the first shovelful of earth was removed Sept. 3, 1892, and that now there is every prospect that all contracts will be finished before the end of the present year. The invention of machinery for the removal of rock and gravel has been something extraordinary. The main channel from Robey Street to Lockport will cost not less than $28,000,000, of which $19,000,000 has already been paid out. It will cost about $5,000,000 for the city to make the necessary connections with the canal. Then we shall have one of the best drainage systems in the world. If at present the city is the healthiest city of over two hundred thousand in the world, what will it be then?

Chicago as a Shipping Port.

Last year there entered the harbors of Chicago and South Chicago, which is now as large as Duluth, 9,051 vessels of 6,284,511 tons, while there left these harbors 8,591 vessels of 6,336,672 tons. This is nearly two thousand more vessels than entered the harbor of New York, and is a suggestion of the importance of our lake commerce and the necessity of abundant protection for it.

A Bible Manual for the Public Schools.

For nearly a score of years the Bible has been excluded from the public schools of the city. Many have seen in this fact a reason for the alarming depravity which it is sometimes thought prevails here. For many months a large number of Christian women have interested themselves in having selections made from the Scriptures by men representing the different denominations and sure to exclude all passages which might seem divisive or difficult of explanation. The selection forms a basis for the teaching of ethics and has been made by such men as Drs. Goodwin, Barrows, Bishop Cheney, Rabbi Hirsch and the Roman Catholic W. J. Onahan. Years ago Dr. Thomas, Professor Swing and several of the liberal ministers sought to have a selection of this kind urged upon the schools, and it may be said that the present selection is the outcome of Professor Swing's suggestion and of the desire then expressed that the manual thus formed be used as a basis for the teaching of ethics.

It is doubtful if the Board of Education show the manual any favor. It is hardly probable that a vote for its use in the schools could be obtained were it submitted to the people. It is understood that the Roman Catholics will oppose it. The Jews approve it. Agnostics and professed unbelievers are bitter against it. It has all along been taken for granted that labor unions would be a unit against it, but at the meeting last Sunday they refused to go on record against the measure, it being a matter of indifference to them what the Board of Education might decide provided their pet measure of free text-books be carried. Some speakers thought it might be well to become somewhat familiar with the teachings of the Bible, and some doubted very much if many present could quote correctly from its pages.

A Noble Organization Equipped with an Edifice.

Friday afternoon and evening the elegant building belonging to the Young Women's Christian Association on the lake front was formally opened to the public. It is seven stories high, has three hundred rooms and every modern convenience. Mrs. Leander Stone has been the leading spirit in the enterprise. She has been ably seconded by her board of trustees and by a generous public. Women alone have served on its board of trustees and are alone responsible for what has been done. They are pointing with pride to their accomplishment, and well they may. They have borrowed $125,000 on their land, which is worth with its improvements more than $200,000, and, paying only five per cent. interest, they see their way clear in a few years to meet all their obligations and have their property free from debt.

Political Upheavals.

We are to have a very important municipal election this spring. Half of the members of the common council are to be chosen, and it is the hope of the best class of our citizens to secure enough good men in the council to render it possible for a mayor who, like our present mayor, is desirous of doing his best for the city to be supported in his vetoes of improper measures. It surely is time that the reign of the "boss" should cease and that honest, tax-paying people should have something to say as to the kind of men who represent them in the council. It looks as if some of the bitterness of partisan warfare might be laid aside, and that in our municipal affairs Democrats and Republicans might unite on men whom all can trust and respect. Several good men have consented to run as aldermen, and if the campaign is wisely managed something may be done to bring about a better city government.

Monday morning the Civic Federation invited the ministers of the various denominations to listen to a report of their work and to express themselves in reference to the coming political crisis. As usual this union meeting was badly managed. The program was far from acceptable, and although Miss Jane Addams of the Hull House and Mrs. McCullough spoke admirably, the one on the benefits of friendly visiting in connection with the giving of charity and the other on the problem of social purity, and one or two men made a few good points, on the whole the meeting was not what it easily might have been. There is no doubt, however, that the coming campaign is going to be lively.

The Congregational Club.

At the last meeting of the club, the first under the presidency of Mr. N. S. Patton, we had the good fortune of hearing an earnest and well-considered plea for the establishment of a court of arbitration for all difficulties between English-speaking nations from Dr. Reuen Thomas. His subject was England and America—their place in the civilizing forces of the world, their common language, heritage and history, their recent disagreements and the probable best solution of their difficulties. Sunday morning he preached an admirable sermon for Dr. Noble and in the evening spoke at Central Music Hall.

Combine of the Clothing Manufacturers.

Nearly all the larger clothing establishments of the city have agreed no longer to pay the prices demanded by labor unions, or to submit to their methods of procedure. They say they do not object to unions as such, but to the tyranny which they seek to impose on those for whom they work. The manufacturers claim the right to pay men what they are worth irrespective of the decision of a labor union and to employ non-union men and as many apprentices as they please. They do not propose, they say, to continue to pay twenty dollars to a man who can earn only eighteen dollars a week nor will they buy tags to put on their clothing of the unions, or open their rooms to walking delegates. In a word, they declare it to be their purpose to manage their business as the times demand and not as the unions demand. If there be no oppression of labor and no injustice shown the strikers it is probable public sentiment will favor the manufacturers, but the least attempt to reduce wages to a starvation point, or to abridge the personal liberty of the men, will meet with prompt disapproval. We are threatened with a strike of large proportions. It is unfortunate that it comes in this terrible weather when, with the thermometer five or six degrees below zero, thousands are suffering for coal, food and even shelter. More than 1,300 persons, Wednesday night, were cared for by the police alone.

There was some contention just after Browning's death whether he was a Christian. To those who feel it necessary to reassure themselves on this point a little book by Dr. Berdoe, just issued, entitled Browning and the Christian Faith, will prove valuable, for no one has higher rank as an interpreter of Browning than Dr. Berdoe, who, by the way, confesses in this book that Browning converted him from agnosticism to Christianity. Commenting on this book and Dr. Berdoe's frank recognition that Browning is the typical Nonconformist poet, just as Tennyson is the typical Anglican, The Methodist Times truly says: "Those who wish to know what are the characteristics of the faith held by the majority of the English people, and yet more of the English-speaking world, may be referred to John Milton in the past and to Robert Browning in the present."

The Christ-Help in Temptation.

A Sermon by Rev. Matthew C. Julien.

"For in that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted."—Heb. 2: 18.

It is true, in the most literal sense, to say that no two persons ever saw the same rainbow at the same time. Though there is only one and the same set of conditions necessary for the production of this phenomenon, and though the visible effect to each man is precisely similar, yet there are in fact as many rainbows as there are observers. The material fact is alike to them all; the difference lies simply in the points of view. And yet that divergence is so radical that it is a different set of rays which, after refraction and reflection from the drops of rain, enters the eye of each man and makes the image upon the retina. The nature of light is such that the rainbow which one man sees is different from that of his neighbor, who is viewing it from another standpoint.

I think that this familiar physical fact has its analogies in the experiences of human life. The sameness of circumstances—so far as the outward fact is concerned—does not imply that they are identical in each man's experience. Personal peculiarities, the nature of a man's previous experience, and the like, so radically modify the influence which contact with any given circumstances on earth may have upon us that they are in fact different, according as the standpoints of men differ. Now this law of the relation of men's own peculiarities to their circumstances would preclude all possibility of real sympathy between man and man had there not been special provision made in human nature itself to meet this need. Without this provision, however profoundly a man might be able to know the history of his own heart, he would not be able to appreciate the experience of his neighbor. Though there may possibly be affection, there certainly cannot be sympathy without actual knowledge—or, what is essentially the same thing, genuine fiction of knowledge—of the experiences of others. To sympathize is, for the time being, for one to take the place of another and to think his thoughts and feel his emotions. And the comfort and strength which make us prize sympathy, especially in our hours of weakness, or sorrow, or loneliness, spring from this consciousness that another is with us, not only in the mere outward and physical sense, but in the inner sense of participating with us in our own circumstances. But were it not for a special faculty of human nature, of which I shall immediately speak, there could be none of this sympathy between men, not even between those who had been in precisely similar circumstances, since the necessary difference in their points of view would actually make their experiences essentially unlike. How widely, for example, do men differ in their impressions of foreign travel, not because the facts are changed but simply because one man's point of view is so unlike that of his comrade.

And when, in the providence of life, a man is called to walk a path of trial, of sorrow or of temptation, which is afterwards trodden by another, he would be unable to give his successor full sympathy, except as they agreed in their point of view, were it not that there is in the constitution of man a faculty which enables one to lose himself in the thought of his fellow. This is one of the main and most sublime offices of the imagination—to make sympathy possible. The ethics of the imagination has hardly begun to be understood yet, it seems to me. For not only is it the means by which faith brings God near to men, but it is also the faculty by which men are brought near together in Christian love. Faith, hope and charity, alike, rely upon the imagination for bringing their several objects to fulfillment. Now the fact that the imagination is the essential means by which sympathy is made possible does not conflict with the further fact, already stated, that there must be a greater or less measure of knowledge of another's circumstances in order to make sympathy both real and helpful. And, indeed, the extent and intensity of one's sympathy for another are modified by the amount of knowledge we possess of their experiences. I may best illustrate the thought perhaps by the example of the ancient Christian martyrs. Now, although I was never burned at the stake, I can, in a measure, appreciate what such a horrible experience must be. And this I do by giving to the imagination such knowledge of the pain from fire as I have experienced. The imagination takes the memory of the pain of the blistered finger and constructs an image of the torture of the stake. So, also, one man has lost a child. Afterwards he comes to offer his sympathy to a friend who mourns the death of a brother.

There is, of course, a wide divergence in the character of these two sorrows. Yet the first experience offers essential materials out of which the imagination (consecrated and stimulated by affection) creates a real sympathy. It is not full and complete, because the points of view are still somewhat apart; nevertheless, it is a real sympathy. The nearer the points of view coincide, of course, the more complete is the sympathy between man and man. Now, if you rightly understand and keep in mind the essential nature of true sympathy, I think that you can readily see a purpose in that sublime fact of history—the incarnation of God in Jesus the Christ—which is too often lost sight of. It is a part of our Christian faith that it was the fact of sin on earth which made this human manifestation of Deity necessary. But I think we have dwelt too exclusively on the purpose of the incarnation to deliver men from the guilt and effects of sin, when, in fact, it was also just this revelation of God which was needed to free men from the present power of sin. And I have spoken on the nature of helpful sympathy in opening this subject, not only because I think it offers us the real philosophy of the majestic fact of the Incarnation, but still more because it is in this law of human sympathy that we may find the answer to the question how Christ saves men from the power of sin on earth today.

It is the distinct declaration of Jesus himself that it was love for his earthly children, in spite of their unworthiness, which moved the infinite God to send the Christ to deliver them from the power of evil. The advent of Christ is explained by the divine purpose to supply to men, who were in bondage to sin, the strength they needed to break the accursed chain. To accomplish this purpose there was a necessity, in the very nature of things, that the Saviour should comply with the conditions of all true human sympathy. To help us he must come down to us—not merely in the outward sense of visiting the earth, but in the sense of standing on our level and seeing earthly life and the struggle with temptation from our human point of view. To give help to men he must comply with the necessary conditions of help-giving. His compliance is his advent as the man Jesus.

The doctrine of the incarnation means vastly more than that Christ took on him the physical form of man. It means that he took upon himself, as his personal attitude, the inner experience of our human nature, and that, also, in our earthly environment of evil. From the standpoint of present human experience the whole Christian gospel is stated in these words of the text, "In that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted." The writer of the epistle to the Hebrews here clearly recognizes that law of human sympathy which makes coincidence of standpoint an essential condition of help-giving to those in moral peril. I need only remind you here that to be tempted (in the sense of knowing the pain which the effort of resisting evil involves) is an altogether different experience than to sin. Even the archetypal, the ideal, Man could be tempted, tried, by evil clothing itself in good on earth, yet he was sinless.

But this lesson, suggestive and important as it is, is not the special one which the writer of this text was at the time seeking to teach. That lesson is the message of the divine offer of help to the tempted in the struggle to break free from the power of evil on earth. The ground of that offer is not only the revelation that he who comes as Saviour is clothed with the powers of God, but also that he has complied with the conditions of finite human experiences. The assurance of his help is based on the tangible, earthly fact that "he hath suffered being tempted." He not only wore the human form, but he accepted our human nature and knew our human experiences. So far as the fact of facing temptation is concerned, his standpoint essentially coincides with ours.

Now we are not to suppose that we are justified, from this point of agreement, in the attempt to construct from it the full inner consciousness of the Christ. We cannot do such a work even for our earthly neighbor, however fully he may assist us by attempting to reveal his inmost thoughts. Such a work passes the highest human power. Yet men have often tried to do this in regard to Christ which they would not dream of doing for their fellows. The stupendous folly of attempting the complete analysis of the Christ-consciousness is too apparent, it seems to me, to need further discussion. Nevertheless, though we necessarily wait for the full and harmonious conception of the Christ until the revelation of the larger life above, we are not to withhold ourselves from making those evident and natural inferences from this statement, without which it would only be a dark saying, impractical and meaningless so far as our present needs are concerned. The word is given us for our present moral uses—not for the purpose of constructing a philosophy of the nature of Christ, but for that of enabling us to meet the actual temptations of life.

It is sad to think how much of the most directly practical and helpful utterance of Scripture has been obscured in the popular mind by many of those human speculations and traditions which we call theologies and liturgies. Dogma and rite together—one in the field of thought and the other in that of visible action—have too often conspired to rob men in moral peril of the means of help which God himself has offered.

In this spirit, then, of seeking for the meaning of the text in its application to the moral experience of fighting temptation, for which it was written, let us consider what message the divine Spirit has sent to tempted men in declaring of the sinless Christ that "he hath suffered being tempted." It is a luminous word—bright not only with the revelation of the divine love, but also with hope for this world where evil seems so mighty and a life of righteousness so beset with trials and self-sacrifices. "He himself hath suffered being tempted!" Ah, then this divine One, at whose birth-hour the very sky rang with angelic song and in whose sepulcher white-robed angels sat proclaiming that he had risen triumphantly, he—the sacred One of history—saw, from my poor, human, earthly standpoint, the attractiveness which sin can so often wear. The voice which bids me resist the temptation—whatever it may be—which seems so alluring, is not simply that of incarnate righteousness, but the voice of One who knows the fascination of the tempter to my human heart, whose own heart throbbed in acknowledgment of the beauty of that disguise which sin is often permitted to wear on earth. He knew how difficult it was for one to shut out the sight of the apparent pleasure of self-indulgence, and keep the eyes of the spirit fixed on the invisible but only real joy of moral integrity. And more than this is involved in this declaration of Christ's earthly experience which we may and ought to draw from it, without fear of wandering into the foolish mazes of a philosophical analysis of the Christ consciousness. We are to remember that "he who was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin," did not win his integrity without effort. It cost Christ personal endeavor—the exercise of the power of will—to resist and overcome temptation. O, how often have men kept their divine Helper afar off from them in their hours of direst need by an artificial reverence which made his righteousness a mysterious white cloud of innocency lifted far above all earthly experiences! There are more cold white marble statues of Christ carved in human minds than were ever set above cathedral altars, more wooden crucifixes of dead Christs resting on human hearts than were ever held in the hands of superstitious devotees. His righteousness was real; He conquered temptation, and not simply drifted beyond it as the fleecy sunlit cloud sails unharmed above the field of battle.

Nay, even more than this does this sacred word assure us: "He himself hath suffered being tempted." The effort of will required in order to resist the allurements which sin is allowed to present in the entanglement of our earthly life cost Him that same experience of pain which I—which you—feel when to do right involves self-denial. Men tell the young, "Virtue is its own reward!" While there is indeed a sense in which the words are true, the proverb in its common acceptation is the most puerile nonsense. The best that can be said for those who maintain its truth is that they are revealing the desire of their hearts to justify by present material evidences the voice of their consciences. As a matter of fact, the reward of moral fidelity in this world has too often been neglect and poverty, when it is not even the faggot and the rack. And you befool your own reason if you do not recognize that the nerves of martyr flesh respond to the touch of wrenching iron and blistering flame just as keenly as the flesh of criminals.

Hunger and cold and social ostracism are just as real an experience to the man of moral loyalty as to the time-server. You can make your modern crucifixes of gold with nails of silver, but the real one was of wood and iron. The Christ who comes to "succor them that are tempted" is "he who himself hath suffered being tempted."

And, still further, this inspired message to men in the battle of earthly life declares that the kind of help which Christ brings to us is that which grows out of his actual experience with temptation. Love wears its most omnipotent form when it has become sympathy. Until then it has force in regard to human needs only as the yearning of pity. It lacks a fulcrum of fact and so wastes its energy in sentimental grief. At best it is but the helpless mother on the beach wringing her hands in impotent agony while the child is drowning in the water beyond. But the fulcrum of sympathy is the common standpoint of actual experience. Love then becomes effective as a saving force. It meets the real need of the human soul. The power of Christ to save men from the devouring waves of temptation is applicable, because he himself is in the midst of the waters with us, battling the billows for our sake and bidding us rest on him for support, while his rescuing arms lead the way to assured safety. It is not some incarnation of ideal spotlessness which is the Saviour of men, but the actually tempted yet triumphant Jesus of Nazareth—the Christ of God.

I have said that there was a necessity resident in the very nature of existence itself which made help-giving possible—even to God—only by compliance with those conditions which are the factors of sympathy. And all the more is it true that help-receiving has likewise its own necessary conditions. Love can be rejected. The aid of even the divine sympathy can be spurned. Nor are we left to grope in the dark for knowledge of what these conditions are without which we may lose all gain or benefit from the offer of the Christ to aid us in the struggle for freedom from the enthrallment of temptation. Jesus has himself stated those conditions again and again, not as arbitrary regulations, such as earthly monarchs prescribe as the requisite manner of receiving their benefits—as has too often been the representation—but as conditions inherent in the very nature of man. And we may sum up these necessary conditions in the phrase—the personal acceptance of him as our Saviour. One would suppose that this is so self-evident that there could be no possibility of misunderstanding. But, unfortunately, the perverse ingenuity of men in obscuring the simplicity of the gospel, under the plea of reverence and awe for the majesty of all God's acts, has created a widespread impression that to give one's self to Christ means some occult kind of experience which cannot be understood and acted upon as other human determinations are made. I frankly admit that God's acts are indeed mysterious. Yet when, with the divine hand of gravitation, he pulls the apple from the bough and places it on the ground, I do not scruple to raise it from the soil and eat it.

Physical life is a marvel of the divine activity, before which the wisest of earth bow in bewilderment and awe. Every motion I make is more God's work than mine, so majestic is this physical body with the wondrous adaptation of its organs. This mind and heart and moral nature which compose my very being are a marvel beyond all comprehension, glorious as the very image of Deity. And all these facts are themselves so engirt with the majesty of God that it is declared that "in him we live and move and have our being." So likewise is the act of giving one's self to Christ, marvelous, majestic, divine. But how have folly and superstition outdone themselves that men and women, who scruple not "to live and move and have their being in God," should hesitate to give themselves to the Christ that they may receive the benefit of the help he offers to enable them to resist temptation.

And this is the simple gospel condition with which we must comply in order to receive the divine help, even as he complied, for our sake, with the conditions necessary to the giving of this help. We come to him by accepting him as our helper. We are to come to him in just as real and human a way as we come to our fellowmen. We make him our companion, our friend, our Lord, our Saviour, by receiving his message to us, by consecrating ourselves to his service, by using the same means of acquaintanceship with him that we employ when trying to know any human being on earth whose fellowship we think worthy, by loyally obeying the method of recovery from evil which his recorded words and the experience of life teach us, and by daily habitual communion with him, so that in frequent personal, loving fellowship with him who came to save us we may grow more and more into his spirit.

But if Christ is to remain to us only a historic vision, looming up white and mysterious from the hoary past, and not a present, living personality—if he is to be to men only a poetic ideal or a projection into space of one's own higher self—we may as well frankly admit that the promise of strength to tempted men in this very real world is an illusion. So long as men keep themselves away from the real, living Christ, their expectation of divine aid in temptation will be the vain hope of some mysterious experience by which suddenly, without personal effort, the attractiveness of temptation will vanish from their minds. Such a hope is folly. To expect it is to be the victim of idle superstition. The help of Christ is a real help, yes, a real human help, although it is also divine. As the teacher helps his pupil to acquire the power of reading or writing—guiding, explaining, inspiring—so our Saviour teaches us the lesson of victory over temptation. But more than this also. He is brother as well as teacher, and love quickens where instruction fails. And more than this also, for he has taken our own standpoint, closer than teacher or brother or any human companion. He has entered into our very spirit according as we have opened our hearts to him and made it possible. And so he becomes the life of our life. Then, in the hour of battle with temptation, when we will to choose the right, though it cost us the pain of self-denial, we will find our hearts turn to him saying, "Master, thou hast done this!"

Here is the visible assurance of the reality of our faith in him as the Saviour in the hour of moral trial, "In that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted."

DR. ABBOTT AT ANDOVER.

In his address to the students at Andover Seminary recently, Dr. Lyman Abbott said in part: We must have a great deal to give people if we expect them to come to church. Men come to church for God, and if you cannot give them God you are a misfit in the ministry. There is a heart-hunger for God, and the minister must answer it. The power of your ministry is in your own personality. The influence of the newspaper editor may be wider, but it is not deeper, for the editor's power is not personal. The less personal the editor, the stronger the paper. An editorial may be greater than the editor, but a preacher is always greater than his sermon. You are to kindle the life of God in the souls of other men, and you cannot give them what you do not possess. The first requisite is absolute sincerity. The greatest danger to the church in America today is that people think ministers preach, not what they believe to be true, but what they believe their congregations believe they ought to believe to be true.

You are not to be teachers of theology, but preachers of religion. Theology is to teach you to preach religion. Men want life—not scientific descriptions of life, but life. Yet your preaching must be theological in that it must treat of man's duty to God. The preaching that deals wholly with man's relation to man lacks a fundamental element and cannot succeed. There never was a time when the ministry was such a power as now; never was the minister so free as today. Congregations want leaders. American people want a minister to be brave, and they are not content to find him a mere echo of their own ideas. To take the hand of God in one hand and to take the hand of humanity in the other, to bring them together, to clasp the hands, and to be unseen the while yourself—this is the splendid work of the Christian ministry. ## PASSING COMMENT.

The means which a new pastor in Worcester, Mass., took for finding out just how his parishioners are engaged during the week was successful in affording that information and securing a generally instructive and novel social occasion. The interest which is thus directed to the personal lives of one's associates will often reflect an equal sympathy in return.

What more encouraging sign could follow a revival than that in a Massachusetts town of late: the new converts are said to be "at work."

That was quite an extraordinary confession lately heard from a wrongdoer by a Massachusetts pastor.

The Armenian troubles, though remote, have struck home with severe force in individual cases in our own country. Should many churches be so afflicted by the sorrows of its pastor as one in Maine, we would see more generous aid forthcoming.

An Iowa city knows what it is to be thoroughly shaken by the convicting gospel message.

A blackboard thermometer is a hint from a Rhode Island church for assistance in stimulating interest in raising a certain sum of money for a given purpose. The "benevolent temperature" will be found to have degrees and extremes quite as varied as any other.

HOPEFUL ASPECTS IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Not gentle showers, but a downpour has been ours. We needed it. Farmers with grain already in the ground were growing alarmed, and in the dryer sections all signs were seeming to fail. But at last the clouds opened, and now hopes are brightening. With it all there have been disasters—one railroad wreck, more or less of flood, and, strange for California, lightning struck an electric plant, almost completely demolishing the building. When the clouds break and the sun appears the grain will soon give signs of promise—a prophecy, we trust, of a prosperous year. Already there is some indication of this in lines other than agricultural. Some of our mining camps give evidence of more life than for years. This is due, it is said, to the low condition of the silver interests. It being no longer profitable to search for the white metal, prospectors and others have turned their attention to gold, with the result as above indicated. Let us hope there will be a verification of a business man's remark when considering the matter of benevolence: "There is promise that 1896 will be a better year in which to get hold of money."

In celebrating its forty-third anniversary our Y. M. C. A. listened to an impressive address by Bishop Goodsell of the Methodist church. Reminiscences revealed that the building purchased in 1864 was the first owned by a Y. M. C. A. in the United States. The present modern structure, central in its location, elegant in its equipment, finished one year ago, affords every facility for effective work, the only drawback being its $100,000 debt. Fortunately this is soon to be met, over $70,000 being already pledged.

Though but an infant, the City Church Extension Society of San Francisco and vicinity is seeking to put on strength. At its approaching second annual meeting it is planning for something more than the mere "election of officers for the ensuing year." Rejoicing in the impetus given Market Street Church, Oakland, and the help afforded Bethlehem of this city, it is looking forward to putting Park Church in possession of suitable material equipment should such assistance be needed. As a means thereto effort is being made to more largely interest prominent laymen, and if possible prevail upon one of them to assume the duties of president. Pressed with the cares of the churches, as so many of our older men are, we are hoping to enlist some of the younger, who, already wise in counsel and prosperous in business, will with added years find one of their delightful experiences in thus advancing the interests of the kingdom.

Rev. Dr. G. H. Wells of Minneapolis was present at a recent meeting of the Monday Club. Stranger though he was to most of us, we were soon drawn near him by the charm of his address. Had we not learned by the papers or heard from his lips that he was in quest of health our suspicions of any illness would not have been aroused, so earnest his words, so vigorous his manner and so hopeful. Particularly noticeable was this as the paper of the day had been rather pessimistic. But whatever the depression Dr. Wells's optimistic outlook bade us be of good cheer. His stay was short. On the following day he sailed for Honolulu, to go thence to Japan and around the world. OCCIDENT.

FURTHER RETURNS FROM CANADA.

Outside of the larger cities reported in our columns last week are many evidences of some of the best work of the year. Truro, N. S., entered upon 1896 reaping the harvest of a successful series of union special meetings, conducted by Evangelist Gale. Rev. John Wood welcomed twelve new members on the first Sunday of January and expects soon to welcome as many more. Margaree, C. B., closed a vacancy by the return of a much honored former pastor, Rev. James Shipperley, but this gain meant a loss to the churches at Hall and Maitland which has not yet been met. From the long report of Sheffield, N. B., interesting facts are gathered touching the connection of absent members, financial encouragements and missionary endeavors. Coming westward to Quebec, at Granby were reported twenty-two new members, a clean balance sheet and $1,700 expended on a new organ. At Danville the year was saddened by loss of the pastor for many years, Rev. J. G. Sanderson, whose work has been taken up and carried on by Evangelist A. W. Main. Melbourne, too, has had a change of pastorates, occasioned by the removal to the United States of Rev. W. J. Watt and the coming of Rev. Sampson Nicholls of Toronto.

Going westward to Ontario, Bowmanville is seen to have had a successful year under Rev. E. E. Braithwaite, late of St. Louis, who has been supplying the pulpit for some time. The leaving of one of the members for India gave a deep missionary coloring to the Pine Grove annual meeting. Paris reported a revenue of $2,195 and a balance on hand of $163. About $400 were expended during the year on improvements. Scotland had a good meeting Jan. 22, when interesting reports were read from every department of the church. Listowel recorded nine new members and a balance of $50, and Turnberry, a near neighbor, reports certain much needed improvements, which have added greatly to the comfort of the church. Such are some of the facts gathered from reports already declared, and in them may be seen indications of the work of the year outside of the cities.

But attention has not been wholly absorbed in the annual meetings of the churches. The Toronto District Association has just placed on record one of the best meetings ever held. Concord Avenue was the place of gathering, and the attendance and interest were all that could be desired. The union of the denominational societies was discussed in a thoughtful paper by Rev. Charles Duff, but action was deferred until the April meeting. Rev. William Johnston followed with a clear, vigorous paper on the Evils of Church Competition, which in common with the previous paper was generally discussed. The work of the London Foreign Missionary Society was told by Mr. H. O'Hara, who recommended that the churches take some practical part in the centenary of the society. The matter was left in the hands of the missionary committee of which Mr. O'Hara is chairman. At the evening meeting Prayer was the general topic of the addresses. Righteousness was set forth as the one great requirement by Rev. J. A. C. McCuaig, who spoke on the Conditions of Prevailing Prayer. Rev. Hugh Bentley followed, speaking on Prayer and Divine Healing. Rev. J. P. Gerrie spoke next on Prayer and Individuals, after whom Rev. A. Secord discussed Prayer and Revivals. The chairman, Rev. T. B. Hyde, then led in prayer and Dr. Sims closed with the benediction.

No less interesting was the meeting of the Eastern Association of Ontario, which was held at Ottawa near the end of January. The occasion was of special interest because it meant the resuscitation of a body which has been dead for years. One of the first and most necessary duties of the association was the arranging of a schedule for the systematic visitation of all the churches within its bounds. The carrying out of it will give new life to the churches, and, as a consequence, regular meetings in time to come for mutual help and fellowship. J. P. G.

CONFERENCES AND ASSOCIATIONS.

D. C.—The Washington Conference was held with the First Church Feb. 18. At an interesting meeting of the Ladies' Home Missionary Society of the First Church the address was by Miss Emerson of the A. M. A. At other sessions Rev. W. H. Ballantine read a paper on The Christian in Politics, Dr. W. A. Duncan spoke on The Work of the Sunday School Society. The coming C. E. convention was discussed by Mr. J. B. Sleman, Jr., while Mr. M. M. Shand, the district president, brought the needs of the convention before the people, followed by Dr. S. M. Newman, who spoke earnestly of the results hoped for from the convention. The sermon was by Rev. E. T. Root on God's Present Presence in the World of Christ.

CLUBS.

MASS.—Church Relationships was the topic at the February meeting of the Newton Club. The mutual relations between Church and Church were presented by Mr. C. A. Haskell, between Member and Member by Rev. A. A. Berle, D. D., between Adults and Youth by Rev. T. P. Prudden, D. D., between Pastor and People by Rev. E. M. Noyes. Many practical suggestions were made on each division.

At the February meeting of the North Bristol Club in Taunton, Rev. C. L. Morgan read a paper on The Enlargement of the Usefulness of the Church.

N. H.—The Central New Hampshire Club held a Washington's Birthday meeting, Feb. 19, in Manchester with good attendance. The address was by Rev. I. J. Lansing of Boston on The Climax of Culture, which was so suggestive in thought and so eloquently rendered that it elicited hearty applause. Resolutions of sympathy for the persecuted Armenians and recommending arbitration, by formal treaty, between the United States and Great Britain were unanimously passed.

The Pascataqua Club met in Dover, Feb. 21. The address was by Rev. J. L. Barton on Christianity and New Japan.

R. I.—The Providence Club at its February meeting had about 140 members and guests present. Dr. E. L. Clark was the speaker on the theme Ethics and Religion. The names now enrolled and proposed as members of the club just fill the number suggested by the resolution of limitation.

O.—The Cleveland Club, at its February meeting, listened for an hour and a quarter with unflagging attention to an address by Prof. H. C. King of Oberlin upon The Spiritual Life—the Manly Life. It was a rare address in which profound truths were presented in simple language but with great force. It was agreed that the club had never held a meeting which was intellectually and spiritually more stimulating and helpful.

ILL.—At the last meeting of the Chicago Club, on ladies' night, Dr. Reuen Thomas spoke on The Relations between England and America.

NEW ENGLAND.

Massachusetts.

CAMBRIDGE.—At Shepard Memorial Church last Sunday evening a union rally was held in favor of stricter Sabbath observance, under the auspices of the Sabbath Protective League. The speakers were Dr. McKenzie, Dean Hodges, Dr. Plumb, Mayor Bancroft and Rev. Messrs. Cruthers and Kneeland.

SOMERVILLE.—The social gathering of Congregationalists at the Winter Hill meeting house last week Wednesday represented six churches and was held under the auspices of the Congregational Union of this city. About 200 persons were present in spite of a severe storm. Refreshments were served, and orchestral music added pleasure to the evening.

HAVERHILL.—North. At the annual meeting about 300 members were present. The total membership is 510, nine having been added during the past year by letter and nine on confession. The expenses were $8,425, the benevolences $2,901. The pastor is giving a series of Sunday evening talks to the young people on The Fundamental Doctrines of Christianity.——Center. The annual reports show a gain of 10 in the membership, missionary collections amounting to $528 and a Sunday school attendance averaging 230. At the Thursday evening meeting a penny collection is taken for the poor of the church. About $1,000 have been spent for repairs, an amount raised by the women's society, now in the sixty-seventh year of its existence.

LOWELL.—First. The difficulties between the church and society have finally reached the courts, towards which they have steadily tended for some time. The lessees of the church property having made oath to the statement that Rev. G. F. Kenngott had interfered with and prevented their enjoyment of their property rights and that his conduct threatened to lead to a breach of the peace between the factions, Judge Morton of the Supreme Court issued a temporary injunction forbidding Mr. Kenngott from any action as pastor of the church until his right so to act has been established before the court. The case comes before Judge Morton the present week. Meanwhile the church party have petitioned the legislature for the passage of a special act, constituting all properly qualified pew holders of a legal age members of the society. A hearing on this petition will be held this week Thursday.——Eliot. Some time ago two cans of ice cream were stolen during a church sociable and the matter was nearly forgotten, when recently the guilty party called upon the pastor, Dr. J. M. Greene, and, declaring that remorse of conscience was too great to be suffered longer, asked to have full reparation accepted.——Highland. The pastor, Rev. C. L. Merriam, is an enthusiastic believer in the Boys' Brigade and is especially successful in work along this line. He has recently organized a third brigade among the Sunday school boys, thus giving the school a whole battalion.

WORCESTER.—Summer Street recently contributed $60 to the A. M. A. to make two of her young men life members, also $25 to Rev. A. A. Myers for the school at Cumberland Gap. The church has expended $1,500 the past year in much needed repairs and is now collecting funds for a new organ.——Pilgrim. The business men's social, in the form of an industrial exhibit recently given, developed into a miniature world's fair of two days' duration. Forty-six exhibits, some quite elaborate, of the trades and manufactures engaged in by men of the congregation were displayed. It gave the new pastor an opportunity to acquaint himself with the occupations of his people and also established closer relations between the church and the business interests of her people.——Union and Salem Street. Both churches voted unanimously last week to adopt the report of the joint committee on consolidation. Each clerk will furnish a list of members in regular standing and these will be enrolled as the membership. Committees were elected to call a mutual council to consummate the union and recognize the united church. The name, Union, of the older church will be adopted. All officers of the two churches will pass in their resignations to take effect when their successors shall be elected for the united church. Each church appointed committees to act jointly in securing a pastor.

MILLBURY.—First. At an adjourned meeting, Feb. 20, largely attended, it was decided to raise money for the church expenses by the usual plan of pew rents and subscriptions. It was voted to retain Rev. G. A. Putnam as pastor.

PITTSFIELD.—South. An interesting and highly successful feature of the work of this church has been the "laymen's meeting," held monthly on Sunday evenings. Large congregations have been attracted to these gatherings, under the management of the lay members of the church and at which live current questions have been discussed. Rev. I. C. Smart is pastor.——Second. This the only colored Congregational church in the county is remarkable for the fact that it has enjoyed a pastorate of over forty years with Rev. Samuel Harrison. Though at an advanced age he is zealous and tireless still.

AGAWAM.—Rev. J. D. Potter has just closed a successful eight days' meeting here. The community has been moved, the largest meeting house has been filled and business has been suspended to a large extent. Christians are revived and at work, and many men, women and children are hopefully converted. Mr. Potter preaches the good old truths of the Bible in clear, fair and persuasive words.

GREAT BARRINGTON.—The home missionary field day was a successful rally though considerably interfered with by the inclemency of the weather. The secretaries of the national and the State societies were present and kindled enthusiasm by their addresses. Rev. L. D. Bliss is pastor.

SHEFFIELD.—The three years of the present pastorate of Rev. William Carr have been highly blessed, numerous accessions, new church parlors and a strengthening for the work being the report. Mr. Carr is to close his labors here in April.

DALTON.—A handsome 26 page pamphlet containing the annual report of this church has just been issued. Some of the items are: accessions 16, total admissions for five years 156, total benevolences for five years $37,409, Y. P. S. C. E. 104 active members. Rev. G. W. Andrews is pastor.

NORTH ADAMS.—A Sunday Evening Club has been established. Besides arranging the Sunday evening services it holds weekly institutes on Tuesday evenings. Under the auspices of the club classes have been formed for the study of various subjects: history, literature, philosophy, etc. Rev. W. L. Tenney is pastor.

Maine.

SOUTH PORTLAND.—Bethany. A gracious work of revival has been in progress, more than 40 persons having professed conversion, at least 35 being adults, many of them heads of families. A lot has been given the church by a earnest friend and building operations will be inaugurated in the near future. The church was organized last November with 15 members and it is expected that the result of this work will nearly or quite quadruple its membership. The field is in charge of Rev. C. E. Andrews, pastor of the Free Church, Deering, who has preached nearly every evening for four weeks.

WOODFORD.—The Maine Missionary Society was represented by Secretary Hatch recently, and a collection of $100 taken. Feb. 9 was interestingly observed as Christian Endeavor Day. This society was among the earliest formed and recalled the beginning of the movement.

GREEN'S LANDING.—Rev. S. A. Aprahamian has been quite overcome by the distressing news from his native Eastern Turkey home. His sister with her five children are in utter destitution, her husband and brothers being killed before her eyes. Two younger sisters are robbed of everything but were protected from death.

ASHLAND.—An effort is being made to obtain a meeting house for the newly-formed church. There is good attendance at three places where meetings are held, also at Marsardis and Garfield. The W. C. T. U. holds monthly meetings and a C. E. Society has been formed lately.

CRANBERRY ISLES.—About $200 more is needed to complete the purchase and repairs on the meeting house so long unused. The people do all possible to raise funds and keep up the services.

Sec. E. M. Cousins has completed the collection of the statistics for 1895 and finds a net gain of three churches, five new churches having been added and two organizations dropped, making a total of 242 exclusive of the five home missionary churches which belong to the Maine conferences. The additions to membership have been 958 on confession, a total of 1,422; removals by death were 390, by letter 366, by discipline or revision 307, total 1,063, leaving a net gain of 359, which is reduced to an actual gain of 314. Owing to extensive revision of rolls, there has been no gain in Maine churches for the previous four years, and it is encouraging to find after quite large revision this year that the tide has turned so decidedly. The benevolences amount to $71,436, considerably less than the unusual figures of last year but about the average of recent years. The Sunday schools show a slight falling off from the marked gain of 1,500 last year. The C. E. Societies report 186 in number with 9,737 in members, a gain of eight societies and about 1,500 members, the latter partly accounted for by the total of junior members being definitely called for by the question of this year's report.

New Hampshire.

NASHUA.—On Thursday the ministers responded to the call for a convention at Concord in the interests of temperance. It was an enthusiastic meeting, and it is earnestly hoped much good will come from the united efforts of the 150 ministers present and their people in sustaining the laws of our State. ——First. Last Sunday evening the pastor, Dr. Cyrus Richardson, preached to a large and interested congregation on The Home and the State, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. The pastor's class in good citizenship is growing in interest.—— Pilgrim At a full meeting of the church and society, Feb. 10, it was voted to raise the pastor's salary $500, beginning with the current year. The last missionary concert was of more than usual interest, the subject being Turkey. Excellent papers were read by different individuals. The pastor, Dr. R. A. Beard, closed the meeting with a stirring address. His class of young men in the study of the life of Christ increases in numbers and in interest.

GILSUM.—The King's Daughters, organized in 1893 in memory of Mrs. Adams, widow of a former pastor, has held a prayer meeting once in two weeks before the Sunday evening service. Efficient help was given by them in a recent renovation of the vestry, and financial aid has been furnished from the treasury for the current needs of the church.

CONCORD.—South. A renewed movement has been inaugurated for the building of a much needed chapel, including parlors and kitchen arrangements and conveniences adequate for the work of the society. Several thousand dollars have already been pledged and the prospect is favorable. The pastor's salary has also been raised.

At the present time there are over 20 vacant pastorates in the State. Most of them are home missionary churches, but offer hopeful fields to consecrated workers.

Vermont.

ESSEX CENTER.—The church has received much profit from four weeks' gospel meetings, in which the other churches have co-operated. Of the students in Essex Classical Institute all but eight have now expressed a desire to live for Christ, including 11 of the 12 Seniors. The interest is universal and the meetings will be resumed at a later date under the direction of the same evangelist, Mr. Hollis Jordon of Rochester, N. H. He began meetings at Westford, Feb. 20. Rev. L. B. Tenney is pastor here.

NEWFANE.—Following the Week of Prayer, special services were held for three weeks. There was preaching nearly every evening alternately by the pastor, Rev. S. Norton, and his wife, Rev. Mary E. Norton. Christians have been greatly blessed and several of the unconverted have confessed Christ.

HARDWICK.—The new edifice was opened last week Sunday for services. The floor is inclined, the seats arranged in a circular form and the windows are of stained glass.

Rhode Island.

PROVIDENCE.—Pilgrim. The Sunday school is collecting money for one share in the General Howard Honor Roll by the steady giving of one cent a week-day by each member until March 29. A blackboard thermometer notes the weekly rise of the benevolent temperature toward the $100 mark. The Ladies' Social Circle has been busy for several weeks earning a dollar each, and more, if possible, for the treasury. At the "labor experience" social, earnings to the amount of $108 were brought in and more is yet to be reported. Two women made and sold over 200 pounds of peanut candy, thus raising over $27.

Connecticut.

NEW HAVEN.—The committee in charge of the recent revival has decided to continue indefinitely the mass meetings which have been held on Sunday afternoons. The Grand Opera House will be used, and the local pastors will preach in turn.——At the preachers' meeting held last week Rev. W. J. Mutch was elected president for the ensuing term. ——On Tuesday of last week the New Haven Branch of the McAll Missionary Association was addressed by Dr. L. S. Chamberlain.——The C. E. Union of the city has started an evangelistic campaign as a permanent part of its work. Meetings are to be held with weak societies with missions, among railroad men and in any other places where such services are desired and would be helpful. A union of Junior Societies has also been started in the city. ——Howard Ave. In order to encourage benevolent offerings in the Sunday school the amount of the collections after the classes have contributed to the school a sum equal to one dollar for each member may be given to any missionary object agreed upon. ——United. The Men's Club service on last Sunday evening was addressed by Rev. E. G. Porter of Boston on The Armenians and Their Oppressors.

DANIELSON.—A quiet work has been progressing since Jan. 1. Services have been continued for over five weeks. The resident pastors and churches have co-operated and during the final two weeks the help of two evangelists, Rev. W. C. Stevenson and his singer, Mr. J. R. Bell, was secured. They proved themselves sincere, manly and earnest. Christians have awakened to responsibility, and, not satisfied with their own work, nearly a score of persons have given their names to the pastor, Rev. H S. Brown, as desiring to study the Bible together. Steps have been taken looking to the organization of a Y. M. C. A. The work has been to a large extent among the young people.

THOMPSON.—First. The first numbers of Vol. I. of The Monthly Record, just started by this church, are devoted to news items of general and local interest and good material, original and selected. The reports of last year appear, showing 10 additions, eight on confession, home expenses $1,640 and gifts of $844. During Rev. G. H. Cummings's pastorate of eight years there has been a contribution every year to each of the denominational benevolent societies.

MIDDLE STATES.

New York.

NEW YORK.—Broadway Tabernacle made its annual offering for home missions Feb. 16, after an address from Sec. J. B. Clark. The pastor, Dr. H. A. Stimson, preached the seventh of a series of discourses on The Acts of the Apostles. He spent Feb. 9 in Hanover, N. H., preaching before the Dartmouth students.

In response to an invitation issued to the women of the Congregational churches of this city and vicinity a good company met on Friday, Feb. 21, at the Bible House, to hold a missionary prayer meeting. Miss S. H. Ward led, and Miss Margaret Leitch spoke of the urgent need of prompt help for the missionary boards. Hereafter a meeting will be held every Friday and the home and foreign work will be equally represented.

GARFIELD.—Rev. I. H. B. Headley of Roslindale, Mass., a well-known and successful evangelist, has been laboring here for three weeks past with marked power. Christians have been greatly stimulated and quickened spiritually, and sinners have been almost daily converted. Mr. Headley's preaching is peculiarly searching, faithful, tender and true, and his methods of personal work are of the best.

HOMER.—This old church is prosperous under the pastorate of Rev. F. A. S. Storer and 44 new members have been added to the Sunday school in the last year. The prayer meetings have doubled in size. This church has joined with other churches in the town in six weeks of union services, conducted by the pastors, and a considerable addition is expected in consequence.

JAMESTOWN.—First. Rev. A. L. Smalley, the new pastor, is growing in favor with his people. His preaching and social qualities are highly appreciated after only a six weeks' acquaintance Dr W. A. Farnsworth of Cæsarea, Turkey, and D. M. B. Thom, M. D., of Mardin, Turkey, spent Feb. 9 with this church, deeply interesting their congregations in the trying experiences of the missionaries in that field.

New Jersey.

PASSAIC.—The pastor, Rev. W. I. Sweet, was recently surprised by the gift of a fine bicycle. The giving of it was made the occasion of a pleasant social evening, various literary exercises, not omitting an original poem on the gift, being included. The C. E. Society recently conducted the regular evening service, the Junior Society giving an exercise of its own.

EAST ORANGE.—Trinity. The pastor, Dr. F. W. Baldwin, has been made superintendent of the Sunday school. The church has just succeeded in raising the remaining $2,000 of the floating debt on the new building. This makes over $10,000 that have been raised for home expenses and beneficence during the past year.

CHESTER.—Rev. A. L. Shear, pastor here since 1894, has been engaged by the Industrial Institute of Springfield, Mass., as instructor and lecturer, director of the publishing department and editor of the publications of the Christian Industrial League.

Pennsylvania.

PITTSBURG.—Puritan, Rev. John Edwards, D. D., pastor, held its annual reunion and roll-call recently. The church engaged in union meetings in January with seven other churches, with good results. It has three C. E. Societies, one being an Intermediate Society between the Seniors and Juniors.

EDWARDSDALE.—Bethesda, Rev. D. L. Davis, pastor, celebrated its tenth anniversary, Jan. 27. A delightful social reunion occupied the evening and a "birthday gift" from every one made up a good sum for the church.

OLIPHANT.—The church has just held a two-days' jubilee, having removed all incumbrances, with a balance of $150 left. Its Band of Hope, now a year old, has induced 300 persons to sign the pledge.

BLOSSBURG.—Second, Rev. J. I. Matthews, pastor, received 23 on confession last year and reports a gain of five in spite of many removals on account of the hard times.

THE SOUTH.

North Carolina.

SOUTHERN PINES.—This church was organized in April, 1895, with thirty-five members. Eleven others have been received since that time. The first offering for the A. B. C. F. M., Feb. 16, was $43.

Florida.

TAMPA.—Refugees from Cuba are pouring into Key West and this city, fleeing from oppression and scenes of cruelty. Over 300 are coming here weekly. Rev. E. P. Herrick recently held a Spanish service in his church, the addresses and hymns being in Spanish and English. Forty Cuban children sang in their native language. The service was largely attended.

Alabama.

LANETTE.—Superintendent Bassett and Missionary Stallings organized a church, Jan. 27, of 36 members in this town of 2,000 inhabitants. This is an extensive manufacturing place and closely connected with the important town of West Point, Ga. The prospects are good for a strong church. A wealthy manufacturer has promised the new enterprise large assistance in the erection of a house of worship.

Texas.

PALESTINE.—First. During the two years' pastorate of Rev. J. H. Dobbs, who is to be settled over the church at Sherman, 32 persons have become members, not a communion having passed without accessions, and the contributions have more than doubled.

THE INTERIOR.

Ohio.

SOUTH LORAIN.—A church of thirteen members has been gathered here, where Rev. J. A. Siebert, now studying in Oberlin, has supplied since last September. The neat chapel, built last summer, is crowded at church services and Sunday school, and the use of it has been generously granted to the Methodists for services at hours which do not conflict with regular services. The work is aided by the Ohio H. M. S. and is under its care, with substantial financial and personal help from members of the neighboring church in Sheffield, the oldest in the county and one of the oldest in Ohio. South Lorain is growing rapidly, and this enterprise, the first of any denomination on the ground, has been cordially welcomed by the people, many of whom have removed there from Johnstown, Pa., with the Johnson Steel Works.

CLEVELAND.—Lakeview. The cost of the improvements being made on the chapel will be about $1,200. Rev. A. B. Cristy, in addition to his pulpit and pastoral duties, is instructor in elocution in Adelbert College.——Archwood Avenue is aiding a Sunday school started by one of its members in her own house in a neighborhood some distance from the church. The attendance is above 40, none of whom attend Sunday school anywhere else. The work is to be aided by the City Missionary Society.

BRECKSVILLE.—Rev. C. W. Carroll assisted the pastor, Rev. W. C. Rogers, in special meetings for one week. At the last meeting nine persons expressed a hope of conversion. The pastor's class preparing for membership now numbers 13 and there are more to join it. The church is in an excellent spiritual condition.

SPRINGFIELD.—First. A council held at St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 14, decided unanimously to release Rev. E. A. Steiner from his pastoral connection with the Pacific Church. He accepts the call of this church, to commence his labors here early in April.

FINDLAY.—Rev. L. G. Herbert, the pastor, has conducted a series of special meetings this month, which greatly quickened and united the church and resulted in 20 or more conversions.

GARRETTSVILLE.—Rev. A. T. Reed aided Rev. G. R. Berry in special meetings for two weeks in February. Congregations were large and attentive. Church members were greatly edified and there were a few conversions.

PALMYRA.—The pastor, Rev. Benjamin Harris, has been aided in special meetings by neighboring pastors and the whole community has been deeply moved. There were 40 conversions including some opponents of Christianity.

UNIONVILLE.—The church parts with Rev. W. H. Morton regretfully. In his three years' pastorate 47 members have been added and the congregations are more than doubled.

WAKEMAN.—In Rev. C. A. Gleason's three years' pastorate, just closed, over 45 persons were received to membership, the Sunday school was more prosperous than ever and all departments of the church were brought into excellent condition.

Illinois.

AMBOY.—First. In December union gospel meetings were held in the rink, Methodists, Baptists and Congregationalists uniting. An unusual interest was developed. Nearly 600 persons attended the meetings every night. There was no evangelist, but William Smith of the Salvation Army assisted. Over 150 persons professed conversion. At the close of the meetings 39 united with this church, and more than that number with each of the other churches. Rev. C. F. Van Auken and a singer, Mr. J. R Bunk, began meetings with this church, Feb. 2, with excellent results. Twenty-seven persons became members recently, making 66 since Jan. 1, and others are to come. The past year has been prosperous. The church building has been painted, a new furnace put in and some indebtedness paid. The weekly offering plan in the place of pew rentals has been used to advantage. Rev. W. J. Warner is pastor.

Indiana.

ANDERSON.—Hope, Rev. A. H. Ball, D.D., pastor, has just closed a campaign of Bible study under the leadership of Rev. J. B. Koehne. The new evangelism which he represents is the full recognition of modern processes, while underneath is the elemental power of the heart process. From his opening lecture interest and attendance steadily increased and finally people were turned away. The attendance of professional and business men was large.

TERRE HAUTE.—Second is having excellent congregations, larger than ever before. The pastor, Rev. W. F. Harding, is delivering evening lectures on the Evidences of Christianity. Money has been raised for papering and revarnishing the meeting house and a new piano is to be purchased.

FORT WAYNE.—Plymouth. The Union Missionary Society has just given $50 to create a life membership for Rev. J. S. Ainslie, the pastor.——South is engaged in making improvements on the house of worship. Electric lights, new carpets and a pulpit are being put in and the house will be repainted and decorated inside and out.

The State executive committee met at Indianapolis, Feb. 18, and wrestled with the difficult task of making a reduced apportionment answer the needs of a growing work. For the last three years there has been a steady call for retrenchment and it has been with great difficulty that new work could be provided for. Strenuous efforts are being made to bring about a greater degree of self-support. A number of important new enterprises claim sympathy and aid. The apportionment for the year in home missions is $8,500. Dr. N. A. Hyde entertained the visiting members of the committee and presided over its sessions.

Michigan.

KINDERHOOK.—Rev. N. D. Lanphear has resigned his pastorate here and in East Gilead. During his period of work a fine meeting house was erected, and the membership has been increased largely in both places.

Wisconsin.

EDGERTON.—At the annual meeting of the church, Rev. H. O. Spelman, pastor, full reports from all departments were read. The church has a membership of 137, 30 persons being received during 1895, all but two on confession. The membership of the Sunday school is 153 and of the Endeavor Societies 80. The benevolence was $151 and home expenses $1,626. The Men's Club is vigorously at work. The women cleared $53 at a recent fair.

THE WEST.

Iowa.

DECORAH.—This church is now nearly 42 years old and has had seven ministers, the longest pastorate being that of Rev. Ephraim Adams, D. D., one of the Iowa Band, who served the church from 1857-72 The first house of worship, completed in 1861, has been used for nearly thirty-five years, but has now given place to a fine structure of granite brick, the estimated value of which, with lots and furnishings, is $18,000. The auditorium has 268 sittings; the lecture-room will easily seat 130 persons; the parlor will accommodate 100 more. At the dedicatory service 850 people were crowded into the building. The furnishings are complete, the chief item being a fine Moline organ, the gift of a Mr. Phelps of England, a former resident, who has business interests here. In the dedicatory services the pastor, Rev. D. L. Hilliard, was assisted by Dr. Adams, who was pastor when the first building was dedicated, by Secretary Douglass and Rev. C. A. Marshall. The subscriptions and contributions of the day amounted to $3,009.

OTTUMWA.—First. The semi-centennial, just celebrated, was a veritable jubilee of reminiscence and gratulation. Rev. Dr. Salter, friend and colaborer of the first pastor, delivered a strong address full of present day thought on The Lessons of the Last Half-Century. Supt. Harmon Bross of Nebraska, the third pastor, added interest by his genial presence and hearty words. Toasts were responded to by honored members and the pastor. A new manual was placed in the hands of the people, containing the history, polity, by-laws, articles of faith, form of admission and list of members. Over 300 names are on the list, mostly resident, 91 having been added during 1895. The church enters upon its second half-century rich in history and inheritance and well equipped for its promising future.

DUBUQUE.—Some of the best evangelistic work ever done in this city has been going on at the Munhall meetings, which began Jan. 30. The services taxed the utmost capacity of the Y. M. C. A. auditorium, which seats nearly 1,000 persons, and on Sunday evenings overflow meetings were held. Over 200 places of business were closed, Feb. 13, that proprietors and clerks might attend a special service—a suspension of business hitherto unknown in the history of the city. Dr. Munhall, who excels as an expositor of Scripture, came at the invitation of six of the leading churches, representing four denominations. Over 500 conversions are reported.

RICEVILLE AND MCINTIRE.—A special effort in McIntire produced good results. Ten members were received Feb. 9, seven on confession, and probably as many more will be admitted at the next communion. The new members are all adults and among the substantial people of the community. The Riceville church has united with the Methodists of the town in a series of meetings now in progress. Rev. L. M. Pierce is pastor.

MANSON.—The work is prospering under the leadership of Rev. George Marsh. The Sunday audiences fill the auditorium, including the lecture-room. During the last month there have been seven accessions to the membership, making a total of 22 persons who have united with the church during the present pastorate. The Center church, also under Mr. Marsh's charge, has had seven accessions in this time.

AURELIA.—A two weeks' campaign of special meetings at Aurelia, under the leadership of Evangelist Tillitt, resulted in 21 professed conversions. Of these 13 were received into membership and others will follow. Junior and senior Endeavor Societies have been organized and are prospering, and the Sunday school is increasing in attendance and interest.

WEST BURLINGTON.—The people are showing substantial interest in both home and foreign missions and the enthusiasm for Endeavor work is unabated. The young people gave an anniversary and temperance program, Feb. 9, to a crowded house. Temperance pledges, quietly circulated among the young people, have received over 50 signatures. Rev. C. R. Shatto is the pastor.

BERWICK.—As a result of special meetings, conducted by Evangelist Packard, ten members were received into fellowship Feb. 16. There seems to have been a real quickening among Christians, and a number of backsliders were reclaimed and unconverted persons gathered into the fold. Mr. Packard is now holding special meetings at Lake View.

SALEM.—The most successful revival season ever held in this town closed Feb. 16. The meetings were in charge of Evangelist D. M. Hartsough and his singer, Mr. C. R. Handenschield, and were characterized by earnestness, depth of feeling and absence of excitement. As a result 137 persons have already been welcomed to membership.

GRINNELL.—Miss Ellen G. Starr of Hull House, Chicago, spoke Feb. 16 on the subject of Social Settlements and the Church. Miss Starr gave a course of lectures to the students of Iowa College on Art in Its Relation to Social Evolution.

DES MOINES.—Plymouth. During 1895 the benevolences amounted to a little over $6,000 and the local expenditures were nearly $6,800. Over $150 have been raised by subscription as a special contribution for the American Board.

HUMBOLDT.—The new pastor, Rev. R. L. Marsh, preached, Feb. 16, on the Situation in Armenia, and the congregation contributed $50 to the Red Cross relief fund.

Minnesota.

MANTORVILLE.—Through the labors of Evangelist Pratt the community has been deeply moved and the spiritual life largely increased, with a number of hopeful conversions. Over 50 accessions to the membership are expected and the religious outlook is more hopeful than for years. The church has become self-supporting through the able efforts of the pastor, Rev. Howard Mudie.

VERNDALE.—As the result of a series of meetings four persons have united with the church and 10 others have expressed the intention of doing so. Spiritual life has been strengthened, some difference of opinion removed, the Sunday school membership increased and the church is in a better state than for a long time. It is recovering from two pastorless years.

FREEBORN.—Rev. Wilbur Fisk, who has been on this field for 20 years, preaches at five different stations, traveling over 100 miles to make the circuit. At Byron much interest recently developed and a gift of $40 was made to the pastor.

APPLETON.—The edifice has been papered, congregations are increasing and conversions are reported. Rev. E. C. Lyons preaches at three outstations, in all of which conversions have resulted A church is in prospect at one of these points.

LAKE CITY.—The union meetings have closed. The attendance was large, crowding even the opera house, and the large number of conversions indicate that the religious life of the town has received a strong impetus.

NORTH BRANCH AND SUNRISE.—Evangelist E. E. Rogers held meetings at these points, resulting in conversions. The churches are weak financially but interest is increasing.

MINNEAPOLIS.—Lyndale. Evangelist C. N. Hunt is holding a series of meetings in the eighth ward, seven other churches of different denominations uniting.

Nebraska.

OMAHA.—Plymouth. The council which assembled a few weeks ago to aid this church in its financial difficulties has been informed that the necessary amount has been pledged by the congregation, and is asked to join in an appeal to the Church Building Society. This has really been a heroic achievement. Under great depression the members have sacrificed and subscribed to secure the $2,500. The owners of the mortgage have agreed to discount all the interest and the C. C. B. S. is asked to provide $5,000. This would clear up the entire debt and put the work upon a firm basis. Should this appeal be refused, the field and property will doubtless pass into other hands. The pastor has shown great self-denial and remains only in the hope that the C. C. B. S. will come to the rescue.

LINCOLN.—The board of directors of the Nebraska H. M. S. met, Feb. 18, at the Y. M. C. A. rooms to adjust the reduced apportionment for the State to the needs of the work. It was found necessary to give up all general missionary work and to sustain an evangelist during only a part of the year. The estimate for many fields is cut down, and in other cases three or four churches are yoked together. Every member of the board was present at the meeting.

BLADEN.—A successful series of special meetings closed Feb. 16. The pastor, Rev. W. A. Davies, did most of the preaching, but was efficiently helped one week by Rev. Samuel Williams of Riverton. Several persons professed conversion and nine united Feb. 16, all on confession, six being baptized. Mr. Davies has begun services at Upland, another point on his wide field.

WISNER.—Rev. John Foster had a special service Lincoln Memorial Day, Feb. 16. The G. A. R. post of the town attended in a body and the house was packed both morning and evening. Mr. Foster is making many friends among the business men of the town.

URBANA.—The pastor, Rev. R. S. Pierce, preached Feb. 9 at Keystone, where a church has lately been formed, and received 10 persons into membership, eight on confession. Mr. Pierce has commenced a series of meetings at Rock Falls, another of his outstations.

BURWELL.—Rev. H. M. Evans has held two weeks of special meetings at the Wood Schoolhouse, arousing deep and widespread interest. A Y. P. S. C. E. has been organized with 22 active members.

North Dakota.

GRAND FORKS.—This church has been nearly two years without a pastor, yet has maintained its services, being supplied by Professor Woodworth of the State university and Secretary Van Vranken of the local Y. M. C. A. The Sunday school and the C. E. Society are especially successful and the church is in a hopeful condition. When it succeeds in securing a pastor this church should go forward to aggressive work. It has an undoubted field and the long waiting without a leader has tended to draw the members together, developing latent resources and self-reliance. While divine co-operation has been marked, this church is a good example of the apostolic injunction to work out one's own salvation.

GLEN ULLEN.—Rev. F. C. Emerson has been exploring the religious needs of the towns along the line west of the Missouri River. He proposes the organization of a church at Hebron, which has for a long time been connected with Glen Ullen as a preaching station. He has also preached at New Salem, a German town. The interest in the Glen Ullen church is growing and the work along the line of the Northern Pacific is prospering under his direction.

ABERCROMBIE.—Revival meetings are in progress, conducted by the pastor, assisted by Rev. Mr. Deale. Forty-three persons have already signed cards expressing a purpose to lead the Christian life. It is hoped that this series of meetings will infuse new life into the church and that the work which has been crippled for so long will henceforth progress successfully.

DAWSON.—This church, where Father Thurston has for several years been doing excellent work, "although in the dry drought" the last year, has made one of the best home missionary offerings in its history. The patience and faithfulness of the pastor have won the hearts of all and held the church together during times of depression and hardship.

WAHPETON.—This strong and spiritually aggressive church is prospering under the lead of the pastor, Rev. G. B. Barnes. It has decided to take contributions for the six benevolent societies. A short prayer meeting is held at the close of the Sunday evening service and there is evident indication of the Spirit's presence.

INKSTER.—Rev. C. Y. Snell reports all the churches of the place as engaged in union meetings. The Congregational organization has established a Sunday evening service with excellent attendance.

The church at New Rockford, Rev. N. W. Hankemeyer, pastor, is having excellent congregations, and the work is gaining strength in the town.—— Superintendent Stickney is holding a series of Sunday school meetings with the churches north of Jamestown, spending a day each at Carrington, Oberon, New Rockford, Fessenden and Harvey. The workers are helped by his suggestions, and a deeper interest and improved methods result.

The home missionary work in the State has never been in a more healthy condition than now. The financial stress upon the C. H. M. S. has prevented entering many new fields so that most of the new organizations have been in places where they could be yoked with other churches without extra appropriations. The home missionary contributions have been excellent as a whole, notwithstanding the low price of grain and produce and the general financial difficulties.

South Dakota.

HURON.—The South Dakota C. H. M. S. has been in session here two days struggling to apportion the reduced missionary grant. It has been found necessary for the present to sacrifice the work of both general missionary and evangelist, commencing with the expiration of their present commissions.

Evangelists Thomson and Gamble are holding meetings at Parker.——Rev. Thomas Thompson, pastor at Winfred and Freedom, is holding special services, assisted by Rev. Micajah Doty.—— The pastor at Belle Fourche has opened a free reading-room in the meeting house to be used week evenings.——The Bible Study Club at Howard, led by the pastor, uses Dr. M. C. Hazard's Outline Studies and is increasing in interest.

Montana.

BILLINGS.—At a meeting of the State home missionary committee, held here Feb. 7, to consider what shall be done in view of the diminished appropriation, it was decided to sustain all the work now in hand, if possible. The necessary reduction in salary is willingly made, not only by the missionary committee, but by all other pastors in the State so far as heard from. The excellent Sunday school here has an average attendance of 140 and is managed by a board composed of the pastor, Rev. P. B. Jackson, who is superintendent, and of the officers and teachers. This board chooses all teachers, holds monthly meetings, at which reports are made by each teacher, and attends to the needs of the school. A weekly teachers' meeting is also held.

LAUREL.—This new and enterprising country church is showing great interest in the meeting house which is about to be erected. The pastor, Rev. Joseph Pope, recently gave a lecture in the schoolhouse on The Function of the Church and the Public School in the Prosperity and Development of the Community. Mr. Pope also has charge of the work at Columbus, which is prospering.

HELENA.—The outlook is brightening since the coming of the new pastor, Rev. Carl Kelsey, who is winning many friends throughout the community. A recent series of practical sermons on social questions has been much enjoyed.

RED LODGE.—The Sunday school, now six years old, has been since its formation under the leadership of one superintendent, and is in excellent condition, the attendance averaging over 100.

LIVINGSTON.—Union meetings, led by Rev. Mr. McGregor, are in progress, and much interest is felt throughout the town. There have been a number of accessions to the various churches.

PACIFIC COAST.

California.

FRESNO.—After years of distressing debt, at times threatening the sale of the property and the very life of the organization, the church is rejoicing over the payment of $3,250 to the bank. This result was reached by self-sacrificing gifts on the part of the members, together with help from outside churches and the C. C. B. S. Much credit is due to the efficient leadership of the pastor, Rev. H. E. Banham, recently of Etta.

ADIN.—Rev. J. A. Jones, after a few months' work, is greatly encouraged. In a town of only 300 inhabitants the Sunday school membership has grown from 25 to 50. At a recent prayer meeting 50 persons attended and on Sunday evening 125. Bethesda Church, Utica, N. Y., has sent $10 toward the purchase of a much needed communion set.

WEAVERVILLE.—Rev. H. H. Cole has organized a Temperance League, which promises to unite the temperance forces in the county for effective work. The attendance on Sunday services is large, the business men being well represented.

SAN FRANCISCO.—Olivet. Rev. J. A. Cruzan has just issued the initial number of The Olivet Index, an attractive monthly of excellent make-up. Mr. Cruzan was "a good printer before he became a good preacher."

Washington.

SNOHOMISH.—Special meetings have just closed, of which Mrs. L. T. Bailey had entire charge during the last week. As a result of these meetings, thirty cards were signed, and more than 40 persons have expressed the purpose to lead Christian lives.

New houses of worship are soon to be erected at Pleasant Prairie and Springdale.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

Members of the Chicago Union are seeking to give employment to those out of work by setting them to clearing the paths in the suburbs, keeping them free of snow in the winter and of weeds and rubbish the rest of the year.

The subject of prayer for the World's Christian Endeavor Prayer Chain in March will be, "For pastors and preachers the world around, that they may be filled with power from on high, and that their people, young and old, may co-operate more effectively in Christian work."

The recommendation has been made by the Australasian United Society that each colonial union appoint a superintendent to have charge of the work of good citizenship, and that a banner be given at the next Australasian convention to the union reporting the best work done.

The Massachusetts State Union has issued a little pamphlet telling of the work done by a Sunday school committee of six selected to make a model committee. In the district in which they worked they started Sunday schools, canvassed to obtain new scholars, started home departments, and in many other ways illustrated what can be done by Sunday school committees.

Historical pilgrimages like those in connection with the Boston convention are to be made a feature of the Scotch national convention in Edinburgh in April. The places visited will include St. Giles's Cathedral, Greyfriars' churchyard and John Knox's house, and an open meeting will be held in the Grassmarket, where the last Scotch martyr died.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Plymouth district held its annual convention Feb. 21 at Marshfield. Rev. J. M. Dutton, N. S. Greet and J. N. Dummer, with several local workers, carried out an interesting program day and evening.

Indiana has wiped out an old debt of $1,100. The Awakener, a 24-page pamphlet, is published monthly as the official organ ——In Ohio over 300 pastors agreed to preach sermons on Association Day upon the Sunday school.

Newburyport District held its third local meeting since the annual convention, Feb. 20. Previous meetings were held in Salisbury Point and at Prospect Church, Newburyport. An evening program only is arranged and two or three practical questions are considered.

Encouraging reports come from Rev. Mr. Piggott, the president, and Signor Ernesto Filippini, the secretary of the central Sunday school committee of Italy. The latter is visiting schools in many parts of the country and the committee is endeavoring to improve the monthly publication.

While International Field Superintendent Reynolds was delivering an address in the Hanover Presbyterian Church, Wilmington, Del., Mr. Joseph Pyle, president of the State Association and member of the international executive committee, who was in the audience, was stricken with paralysis and died.

A Sunday school hymn-book was published in Madrid in Spanish several years ago through the liberality of some New York ladies. It was used not only in Spain but in Central America as well. A young converted priest said lately that a sheet of paper picked up on the street contained a hymn that made him wish to learn more of the religion which it expressed. On the sheet was one of the hymns from that book.

Barnstable Central District Convention met Feb. 19 in the Baptist Church, Barnstable, which has no Sunday school. These topics were considered: How to Make the School Attractive to Young People, Aggressive Work, The Use of the Bible in the School, How to Prepare the Lesson and a symposium on The Ideal School, in which many took part. Although a stormy day a number of persons drove many miles in order to be present.

The New England delegations to the International Convention, in accordance with the revised apportionment of the executive committee, will consist of 16 each from New Hampshire, Vermont and Rhode Island, 24 each from Maine and Connecticut and 60 from Massachusetts. The nine provinces will be entitled to 139, New York 144 and Pennsylvania 128. The only other States that will outnumber the Bay State are Illinois 94, Ohio 92 and Missouri 68.

OTHER CHRISTIAN WORK.

The League for Public Good in Buffalo, though young, has proved itself an efficient organization. Some weeks ago it held a meeting for the purpose of bringing the condition in Armenia before the people and to arrange special meetings which were held last week Sunday evening in the various churches. The Episcopal churches joined in a meeting at their cathedral church, the Lutherans also united their congregations, and other denominations fraternized.

We desire to call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of E. P. Gates of Minneapolis, Minn., formerly of Grand Forks, N. D., which appears in another column. He will be at Young's Hotel, Boston, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week (March 3 and 4), where he will be glad to meet any parties who have funds for investment, or who have lands or loans in the Red River Valley or other sections of North Dakota, giving such information and advice about the same as an extended residence in the West and twenty years of experience in the loaning business has placed at his disposal.

HEREIN.

In your office chair you plan, write, confer, order, bargain and trade for your living. You earn your money in this chair. You spend one-third of the entire twenty-four hours upon this single chair.

Now the idea of putting all this responsibility upon a cheap $5 cane seat is ridiculous. Is it not of some importance to you whether your body is rested and refreshed for eight hours or left without such refreshment?

Think of the value of a quiet, calm serenity in your office perplexities. Surely a comfortable bank chair conduces to such a feeling. The advantage of a single day or a single hour in such a chair is worth its entire cost.

We say nothing of the added dignity which such a chair gives to your desk.

Our Department for Bank and Office Furniture is one of the most extensive in this country.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

Last week was broken by a national holiday, and naturally operated to reduce the volume of trade and speculative transactions at the stock exchanges. However, the business week closed with visible signs of improvement in the world of trade, and a confident tone in Wall Street. The extreme cold has checked the movement of merchandise at interior points and the Southwest.

The boot and shoe and leather trade seems to be the most busy relatively, although it is understood on good authority that the enormous sales of leather which the Leather Trust has recently made have been made not only at a loss, but at prices at which the goods could not be replaced with hides at their present value. The supply of hides in the world is comparatively rather light, and it is stated that the Leather Trust is quietly buying all the hides it can without rushing prices upon itself. The outlook is for higher prices both for hides and leather.

The woolen industry is rather flat. Reports come of several more shut-downs and profits are said to have been slight for the season. The blame is laid on the present tariff law. A fair spring business is anticipated in the wholesale clothing trade, with a better demand in May or June than at the opening.

Some of the large business centers are already reporting the progress of a satisfactory spring business in the various branches of trade and prices are denoted as firm. Favorable mention should be made of our increasing exports and decreasing imports. Should this continue for any length of time the balance of trade would soon be very largely in our favor. Our growing shipments of wheat and flour to South Africa and Australia are among the pleasing factors of the general situation.

The bank clearings for the six days ending Feb. 20 furnish indisputable evidence of the improvement along all lines of trade, the total being $1,093,000,000, an increase of 17 per cent. over the total of the week previous and of 31 per cent. over the total for the third week of February, 1895. Railroad earnings continue to show good gains, and the general feeling in Wall Street is that security values will continue to advance through the spring and summer. London has recently been quite a large buyer of American bonds and stocks, and this foreign buying has done much to convert many, hitherto on the speculative fence, to the bull side of the stock market.

HOME MISSIONARY FUND.

FROM A GRATEFUL FRONTIER WORKER.

——, Wn., Jan. —, 1896.

I wish to thank you for the pleasure and profit derived from your paper in the past year. I would like to have the opportunity of reading the many numbers for the present year. I see my label is marked "Feb. '96." I am very grateful to the dear friends who contribute to the fund to send The Congregationalist to home missionaries. I would gladly pay for it if I were able to do so, for it is the greatest help that I have in my work. I sincerely hope that I may be amongst the fortunate few another year, if not, I can only thank you and all who have contributed so much towards my mental and spiritual growth in the past. I am fortunate in having a wide field, plenty of work, good health and a numerous family; my income only is limited. I like The Congregationalist better than all other papers that I am permitted to read, and if it is stopped I do not know how I shall get along without it. $15

The Best. The Rest. The Test.

There are two kinds of sarsaparilla: The best—and the rest. The trouble is they look alike. And when the rest dress like the best who's to tell them apart? Well, "the tree is known by its fruit." That's an old test and a safe one. And the taller the tree the deeper the root. That's another test. What's the root,—the record of these sarsaparillas? The one with the deepest root is Ayer's. The one with the richest fruit: that, too, is Ayer's. Ayer's Sarsaparilla has a record of half a century of cures; a record of many medals and awards—culminating in the medal of the Chicago World's Fair, which, admitting Ayer's Sarsaparilla as the best—shut its doors against the rest. That was greater honor than the medal, to be the only Sarsaparilla admitted as an exhibit at the World's Fair. If you want to get the best sarsaparilla of your druggist, here's an infallible rule: Ask for the best and you'll get Ayer's. Ask for Ayer's and you'll get the best.

WOMAN'S BOARD PRAYER MEETING.

CONGREGATIONAL HOUSE, BOSTON, FEB. 21.

Mrs. Capron presided and took the Scripture lesson from Haggai, a prophet unknown except for this little book of prophecy, and whose recorded service covers a period of only three and a half months, and yet who has given a message of great power, a message which applies to the conditions which exist to-day and which includes a record of seven failures, seven commands and seven promises.

It was Miss Alice F. Stillson's day upon the calendar and Mrs. Capron spoke warmly of her, asking, "Where is she today? What are her perplexities and crying need?" and then recalled a rattan chair in a simple frame in her own India home, where she had often knelt when weary and perplexed and asked for the divine help which should make up for lack of the preparation which she had not had time to make for the instruction which she was to give, speaking also of the assurances which she has received since returning home of the frequent prayers of hitherto unknown friends.

Miss Kyle gave an account of an interesting revival some months ago in the Umzumbe school, which is under Miss Stillson's care, when many of the girls seemed to enter upon a new life. At last accounts thirty were candidates for church membership.

Miss Lamson gave Miss Laura C. Smith's description of the Ireland home for kraal girls; and Miss Stanwood reported Miss Mellen's welcome to her old home in Zululand, where she is to take up work in Esidumbini with Miss Hance, occupied now in recalling the language which she learned in childhood, glad to find she has not forgotten the "clicks."

Mrs. J. K. Browne read a letter from Miss Seymour of Harpoot, reporting the reopening of the girls' school, saying almost pathetically, "We are comfortable," while she presented a dark picture of the misery around them, and Mr. Gates had "not a lira of relief money." Mrs. Barton read a letter from Mrs. Barnum, who spoke of Mr. Gates and Mr. Ellis "in the bread business," and longed for the bag of pieces which she had saved to give away, while Misses Seymour and Bush are giving women cloth to make up. In the midst of the trouble the women's prayer meeting is well attended, crowding the sitting room where it is held.

Miss Fay said that the old artists often portrayed a striking contrast of expression upon the same canvas, as in Raphael's Transfiguration we see the agony of the lunatic and the glory of the transfigured Christ; so the promises of God are over and above the darker places in life. Miss Stanwood spoke of the great pressure upon the American Board in the face of its debt and the effort to liquidate it by the first of March; and Mrs. Capron, from the missionary standpoint, spoke of the "tremendous shock" which comes to a mission with the announcement that appropriations must be reduced, an announcement sent out from the very walls of the Congregational House.

All available space in the rooms was packed, and every minute of the hour was crowded, the prayer element holding its appropriate place.

An English clergyman, quoted in the Churchman, makes a good point with reference to parishioners who find fault and withdraw their co-operation. "It may not be tact, but it is truth, if I say to each of these aggrieved persons, From your own point of view you are going the wrong way to work. . . . The more you withdraw, the more I shall be able to have my own way." But, under the American voluntary system, no Congregational clergyman will be able to go on and say with him, "And, mind you, if everybody withdraws from everything . . . what then? I shall have little or nothing to do; and I shall get my pittance all the same." There is a point at which withdrawals by the congregation become the plainest kind of a providential hint to the preacher.

THE AMERICAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION has been at work seventy-one years for the retired rural districts. Its union methods specially commend it to communities of sparse populations divided in religious sentiments. Its missionaries visit families, distribute religious literature, hold evangelistic meetings and organize Sunday Schools. Probably no evangelizing agency has larger results for the amount expended. 11,000,000 children are yet out of Sunday School. Will you help to save them? Send to Rev. Addison P. Foster, D. D., New England Secretary, 1 Beacon St., Room 40, Boston.

JAPAN ONCE MORE.

At the Boston Ministers' Meeting last Monday Rev. J. L. Barton, D. D., gave an interesting address on Personal Observations and Experiences in Japan. He began by speaking of the advantageous location of Japan, there being no first-class Power on the Pacific Ocean which exercises any control over that ocean. The navy of Japan, therefore, both commercial and war, is to be the dominating power in the Pacific. Commercial, intellectual and political growth must not be confounded with Christianity. Referring to the three religions of the Japanese Dr. Barton said none is exclusively followed, as has been commonly supposed, but a Japanese is born a Shintoist, lives in his maturer life by the principles of Confucianism and is buried with Buddhist ceremonies. This mixture of beliefs made it seem a simple thing to many Japanese to embrace Christianity as a fourth religion.

In considering the life of the people Dr. Barton said that the Japanese minister of public instruction, himself not a Christian, admitted in conversation that unless something could be done to supply the lack of public integrity among the Japanese their standing among the nations of the world would be gravely endangered. Drunkenness is rife and polygamy exists in the most influential circles, while at least 37,000,000 of the people are still idol worshipers.

In regard to theology Dr. Barton said that the Japanese are as a nation fickle, and very sensitive to new ideas. Some of them criticised the missionaries for teaching only the Bible and not giving as well all the newer criticisms and doctrinal controversies, and felt that they must, therefore, cut loose from the missionaries and study for themselves. This movement is not, however, general among the churches, and instances were cited where churches had dismissed their pastors because their sermons were not evangelistic. There are great fields in Japan still untouched, and there will be no miracle worked there. The nation can become Christian only by the conversion of individuals, and this will be brought about by patient, persistent effort on the part of the churches of America.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

E. PORTER DYER.

Mr. Dyer, who died on Feb. 9 after two weeks' illness, filled a large and influential place in Springfield public life. As managing editor of the Union, with which he had been connected many years, he represented conscientious and worthy newspaper work. As a member of the North Church he was considered one of its pillars, discharging faithfully many important trusts reposed in him. In outside enterprises, like the Young Men's Christian Association, the Congregational Club and missionary causes, he took a leading part. His father, Rev. E. Porter Dyer, was a well-known Congregational minister and the son graduated at Amherst College in 1861. Several years of early young manhood were spent in the South, but the main work of his life has been in journalism, where he displayed qualities that made him useful and successful in various branches of the profession. Personally he was unusually attractive and winsome.

ELISABETH G. SARGENT.

Died at the home of her son, Rev. Clarence S. Sargent, D. D., 4,338 Delmar Boulevard, St. Louis, Mo., Mrs. Elisabeth G. (Spalding) Sargent, wife of Rev. Roger M. Sargent, born in New Hampshire, March 27, 1824, deceased Jan. 30, 1896. Her useful and sweet life culminated in peace. As teacher, pastor's wife, forty-five and one-half years in New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Illinois, hospitable, helpful, faithful, loved everywhere, her remembrance is precious, fragrant as flowers and ripened fruit. She endured patiently feebleness and trials; submissive and uncomplaining under consumption, grip hastened inevitable result. During the last years she was carefully cherished in the home of her only surviving child. Last words were Scriptures, hymns and praise.

DEACON ELBRIDGE CLARK.

Deacon Elbridge Clark of Millis, Mass., died Feb. 6, after a long and faithful life. He was born Sept. 11, 1812, on the estate in Millis occupied by four previous generations. His ancestors came from England in 1640. Deacon Clark joined the Church of Christ in Millis in 1837, and was ever active in behalf of her interests. In 1853 he was chosen deacon, which office he faithfully filled till his death. For over fifty years he was a leading member of the choir. He was twice married, and at his death left a widow and four children, with a large circle of friends to mourn his loss.

MRS. MARY WALCOTT COWDREY.

The death of Mrs. Mary Walcott (Emery) Cowdrey, wife of Arthur H. Cowdrey, M. D., of Stoneham, Mass., on Feb. 9, overwhelmed the whole community with sorrow. Not only her bereaved husband, two daughters and brother mourn her loss, but hosts of friends to whom this large-hearted Christian woman had endeared herself. Like her Saviour she lived for others, doing good wherever she was. Unselfish, generous, sympathetic, unassuming and devoutly Christian, her loss to the church and to her home is irreparable. Born at Bedford, Mass., she was the daughter of Francis W. R. and Mary Walcott Emery of Boston. Age 54 yrs., 10 mos. and 28 dys. "She hath done what she could."

BOSTON CONGREGATIONAL CLUB.

At the meeting Monday evening local municipal affairs was the general subject which the new president, Hon. A. H. Wellman, announced in brief, crisp remarks. The speakers of the evening discussed special topics before the usual large attendance. Touching local interests, Mr. E. D. Mead forecasted from his experience with the Municipal League some of the necessary steps toward A Better Boston. The present inter-racial population and governing boards of the city were compared most unfavorably with the early Puritan Boston, full of the united spirit of independence, so that even in this era of municipal reform the existing conditions, like those of many great American cities, seem almost too low for correction. But the bettering of the community was shown to depend merely on organized attention and action, on the line of the inner civic life of the city, while advance in regulating the beauty of outward appearances would also stimulate the general movement.

The thread of the first speaker was taken up directly by Rev. F. B. Allen in his address, The Moral Protection of Youth. As superintendent of the Episcopal City Mission, he had reason to believe that the home and the public schools were the places where opposition to increasing evils among the young as to be concentrated. The work of leading form societies in what they are doing and have accomplished was heard with gratification by the club.

As one who has paid special attention to the subject, Mr. L. D. Brandeis of the Suffolk bar spoke on Some Pending Problems in the Treatment of the Dependent Classes. His few numerical statements gave his hearers a definite idea of the condition of 10 per cent. of the city's population, wholly or partially dependent on others. The study of their circumstances is increasing and has resulted in the classification of these persons, all of them being considered and treated as if diseased, and each case calling for individual care. Such developments really constitute a new profession, and a further step is a proposition to divide the management of the various institutions which care for the dependent among several governing boards.

PRESIDENT HARPER AT THE OLD SOUTH.

For the past five years Rev. G. A. Gordon, D. D., as a way of signalizing the Lenten season, has provided for his Old South congregation in Boston a special series of Sunday evening discourses. Previous courses have been notable both as respects the eminence of the speakers and the quality of their work, Dr. Gordon either giving the addresses himself or summoning to his aid some of the leading thinkers and preachers of the country.

This year's course on the Old Testament and Modern Scholarship, inaugurated last Sunday, bids fair to equal in value and interest any of its predecessors, and the first lecturer, Pres. W. R. Harper, was greeted by a splendid congregation in which were many young men and women, evidently representative of Boston's large student population. It is a number of years since Dr. Harper has been heard on a Boston platform, and his many friends, made in other days, were re-enforced by the throng naturally drawn by the reputation which his administration of Chicago University has brought the distinguished scholar. He spoke with his usual force and with rather more than his customary speed, which under ordinary circumstances would hardly be considered sluggish.

It was a great task to condense into fifty minutes material relating to The Beginnings, and a vast stretch of time was covered in Dr. Harper's masterly survey. He dated the beginning of human history of which we have any knowledge at about forty centuries before Christ, when there was in the Arabian peninsula a restless, seething mass of people. Two centuries later there began the migrations in different directions, the current in due time flowing into Palestine. The authentic history of Israel dates from Abraham, and Dr. Harper intimated his substantial acceptance of the records that relate to the patriarchs. The Hebrew religion gradually gained distinction from other branches of the Semitic faith with which in its roots it is allied. Dr. Harper showed how in the three particulars of history, literature and institutions the religion of Israel may be considered peculiarly divine.

WHY ARE WE CONGREGATIONALISTS?

These words from Dr. Joseph Parker may well be read by any who need to have their faith in the Pilgrim polity re-enforced:

If Congregationalism were only a polity it would have no martyrs. No man can die for a polity. But the polity of Congregationalism is itself a doctrine. When polity means framework, as thus, a line drawn from point A to point B, or from point C to point D, no man would die for such poor geometry. But when the framework comes out of conviction and revelation and sound doctrine, it is for the doctrine that men may die. Hence Congregationalism is rich in imprisonments, in dungeons and in martyr flames. The fear which I have, and which many of my brother ministers must have, is this, that a man supposes he is a Congregationalist because he goes to a Congregational chapel. That is a sophism, a delusion. Why do we go to this church or that church? We must find the reality of this matter in the underlying and governing conviction. I would to heaven that some men did not go to a Congregational chapel, and I would to God that some men made no profession of Christianity. They are infidels, and they can do more harm to Christianity than all the infidels that ever lived, and if very narrow and mean and selfish men would only renounce the cross, we would feel that the kingdom of Christ was making progress on the earth. The Christian Church is often kept back by some of its own members and professors, who do not know that the church is founded upon the cross, and that the cross is not a Roman gallows but the symbol of the living God. We have as Congregationalists to testify to a distinct conception of the kingdom of Christ upon the earth. We do not say that all our people are wrong, but we do recognize the fact that there are conceptions of the kingdom of Christ which cannot be harmonized one with another. They are separate; there is an infinite distance between them. They may be right, or we may be right, but we cannot both be right.

Now, I hold that religion is a matter between a man and his Maker, and, being a matter between a man and his maker, the civil law can have absolutely nothing whatsoever to do with it. I hold that the state means law. I hold that the law has and must have at the heart of it the action of penalty, and in relation to religious conviction of any sort or kind it is out of harmony with the thought and purpose of Christ. I would therefore tolerate—if I may use so mean and so suggestive a term—all faiths that wish to live in simplicity and in modesty and in spiritual activity without interfering with the life, limb or property of men. What is our conception of the Church of Christ upon the earth? It is the conception of regenerated men, saved men, meeting together in Christian fellowship and co-operating in Christian service. Christ Jesus in the midst, always in the midst, inspiring every soul, ruling every thought, directing every policy. That is our conception of the church. Our conception of the church is not a nation, a nation baptized, a nation nominally called Christian. That may have its own important bearings and fruits, but our distinctive conception of the Church of Christ is that it is a family of Christ, the purchase of Christ, the inheritance of Christ, the very kingdom and glory of the Saviour.

THE DIGNITY OF MAN.

I decline to surrender my dignity in the presence of material immensity. The tides rise and fall by an eternal necessity, but the passions which ebb and flow in my heart I can check and control. The planets are bound by irreversible forces to the orbits in which they travel, but I am often conscious of perplexity as to the line in which I should move; and, instead of being irresistibly swung by a force over which I have no control, I choose for myself the rough path of duty which leads to mountain hights where I breathe the air from heaven and see its glory, or the smoother path which descends to darkness and death. I am greater than the planets; I am greater than the sea. They are subject; I am sovereign. They submit; I rule. They are bound; I am free. My own consciousness assures me of this, and it is confirmed by the voice of God. From behind and above the forces of the material universe there reaches me a word which recognizes my unique prerogative, isolates me from all material things, imposes on me the responsibility of my moral action. The living God, who is above nature, tells me I too am above nature and that I must give account of myself to him.—Rev. R. W. Dale, D. D.

A pastor in New England who had just come to his new field found the first collection scheduled for the Home Missionary Society. He told his people that they ought to give $100, but the collection, after the usual custom, amounted to only $18. The pastor said little but his looks were so significant that the people made the contribution up to $100 by private solicitation. The next collection was for the Church Building Society, to which for the last three years the people have given from $12 to $17 a year, but this time the offering was $85, and the Endeavor Society took up $25 more. Here is another illustration of the fact that the condition of our missionary treasuries depends largely on the pastors.

We celebrate this year our 80th anniversary—the special number of the paper commemorating the event being issued in March. Before that time we wish to secure 40,000 new names, so as to place The Congregationalist, and that particular number, in the hands of as many new readers. We therefore propose that each of our present subscribers shall secure for us one or more names for "12 Weeks' Trial Subscriptions," 25 cents accompanying each name. This payment will entitle the old subscriber to a copy of Ian Maclaren's "BESIDE THE BONNIE BRIER BUSH" for each new name sent, and The Congregationalist will be mailed for twelve weeks to the new subscribers.

The Paper for 12 Weeks & The Bonnie Brier Bush for 25 Cts.

For the purposes of our special offer we have purchased an edition of this remarkable classic by Ian Maclaren from the authorized publishers, Messrs. DODD, MEAD & CO. It is a reprint from new plates of the complete copyrighted edition, which is issued at $1.25; making a dainty volume, cabinet size, bound in cloth, with a unique cover design.

Why We Do This.

WE WISH to signalize the completion of our 80th year by introducing the paper to a multitude of new readers.

WE BELIEVE that our old subscribers will appreciate this unusual offer and will recognize in it an attempt on our part to show our appreciation of any effort they may now make in our behalf as well as their past interest in the paper.

WE ARE WILLING to send the paper for 12 weeks at a loss, believing that twelve such arguments presented weekly will convince the most skeptical.

CONDITIONS—THESE ONLY:

☞ The "12 Weeks for 25 Cents" subscriptions must be for bona fide new names of persons able to subscribe for a religious paper on their own account. The new subscribers must be sent by a present subscriber of the paper, but the former may in their turn send other new names.

☞ We deliver "The Bonnie Brier Bush" at our office in fulfillment of this offer; or we will send copies, postpaid, to any address for 5 cents additional—30 cents for the paper, the book and postage on the latter. An old subscriber sending us trial subscriptions in accordance with this offer has the privilege of ordering ONE additional copy (not more) of "The Bonnie Brier Bush" at 20 cents, which price includes postage on the book.

☞ This offer is made for a limited time only and the publishers of the paper reserve the right to discontinue it with one week's notice. Send stamps, silver or bills at our risk. Packages of books will be sent by express, if desired, at the expense of the person ordering. We expect to fill all orders within two weeks of the date of their receipt.

Proportional Representation.

By JOHN R. COMMONS, Professor of Sociology in Syracuse University. One vol., v. + 298 pp. Diagram, Maps, Appendix, Index. Cloth, $1.75. (Library of Economics and Politics, Vol. VIII.)

Professor Commons argues forcibly and eloquently in favor of the plan adopted and recommended by the American Proportional Representation League, of which he was the founder.

He believes that proportional representation will do away with the spoils system, and will be an effective agent in municipal and social reform, and will finally result in freedom from the rule of the party machine and in the purification of our politics.

The REV. E. MERVIS FERGUSON, Editor of New Jersey Sunday-School Messenger and Superintendent of the State S. S. Association, says (January 1896): "If you are going to get a new hymn-book for the Sunday-school, get one that the organist can play, the chorister can teach, and the school can sing. If the organist and chorister are all right, you need not worry about the school. If you want a well printed, cloth bound book of moderate size and price, edited with rare wisdom and taste, and full of rich, sweet tunes, with strong harmonies and singable melodies, get a sample copy of 'Carmina for the Sunday-school.' The writer has played the book nearly through, and if there is a worthier collection in the market, he has not seen it."

NEXT WEEK'S ISSUE.

A Notable Anniversary Number.

The issue of March 12th, commemorating our eightieth birthday, will be in many respects the most valuable number ever given to our readers, and one eminently worthy of preservation. Among the striking features will be:

A review of the political progress of the world during the last eighty years, by Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart of Harvard University.

A resume of the Christian history of the same period, by Bishop John F. Hurst of Washington, D. C.

A survey of the progress of Congregationalism, by Prof. Williston Walker, D. D., of Hartford.

Eighty Years of Temperance Reform, by Rev. T. L. Cuyler, D. D.

The Educational Advances of the Century, by Hon. John Eaton.

Signposts in the Pathway of Woman's Progress, by Frances J. Dyer.

A broadside on religious journalism, by leading religious editors of the country.

An illustrated history of the founding and development of the Boston Recorder, its merging with The Congregationalist and the subsequent history of the united papers.

These and other appropriate articles, combined with the regular features of the paper, will make a rich and attractive feast. The issue will be generously illustrated.

THAT was a splendid testimony to the value of Y. M. C. A. work for railroad men which ex-Governor Beaver gave at the Y. M. C. A. banquet in this city last week. He quoted Mr. Roberts, the president of the Pennsylvania Road, as having said recently that the thousands of dollars which that company puts into buildings and equipment for railroad Y. M. C. A. work is the best investment it makes, steel rails not excepted. Everywhere there is keener appreciation of the actual returns in better service when the spare hours of employés are utilized properly and made seasons of true physical and mental recreation. It ought never to be hard to raise money from the business men of the country for this particular phase of association endeavor. The results are large, immediate and from every point of view satisfactory.

In just a year, in the ordinary course of events, a new president will be inaugurated and we shall all be speculating upon the course of his administration. Whether he is to be of one party or the other it would be idle for us to guess, in fact in the present condition of affairs the real lines of political cleavage do not coincide with mere party lines; but that he should be a man of character seasoned by experience, but open to the teaching of new truth from whatever quarter it comes to meet him is of importance to us all. A dull man may be led astray, a selfish or obstinate man may work great mischief, a man who thinks for the people and moves with their ripening judgment, as Lincoln did, can have no loftier place and wield no greater influence. An American president wields more power than the queen of England or the president of the French republic. We, whose security and honor are to be largely in his hands, need to keep cool heads in choosing our nominating delegates and in weighing the questions of the election. Faith in God in these matters will be best expressed in faithfulness to our political duties and obligations.

Immediate obedience to the will of God when we have clear evidence of it is a prime necessity of Christian living. But our influence may easily be weakened by our reference of our actions to such obedience when other motives less disinterested suggest themselves. Dr. A. T. Pierson, after being privately immersed in England recently, preached the next Sunday on immediate obedience and illustrated his theme by reference to his own act of submitting to immersion as soon as he had been convinced of his duty. But a Baptist minister has publicly testified that Dr. Pierson told him three years ago that he regretted that he had not asked Dr. A. J. Gordon to immerse him before he preached at Spurgeon's Tabernacle. We have no right to suppose that Dr. Pierson is aiming to supplant Rev. Thomas Spurgeon, though English Baptist papers plainly intimate this. We are quite willing to admit that his one motive in entering the Baptist denomination is the fulfillment of honest conviction as to the form of baptism. But in view of his relations with the Tabernacle and his written and verbal admissions of his willingness to be immersed when he was a candidate for that pastorate, the wiser course for him at present would be to let the deed speak for itself without comment. The habit of obedience to the divine will is expected of a minister of the gospel, and for him to point conspicuously to such an act of his own as an example is to raise questions as to its genuineness.

The Westchester Presbytery not long ago made public statements which reflected severely on the financial management of the Presbyterian Board of Publication. That organization replied, showing plainly that the charges were founded on a misapprehension. The presbytery had formed its judgment and made its deliverance without full knowledge of the facts. We mention this as an illustration of too frequent attempts of religious, and especially of ministerial, bodies to right wrongs without adequate information. We have repeatedly known such bodies to pass resolutions condemning other organizations after having heard only one side of the case, and that side presented, perhaps, by one whose sympathies and antagonisms were evidently stronger than his judgment. Not seldom, when there has been good reason for some action, the effect of a hasty and one sided deliverance has been to weaken rather than to support movements to right genuine wrongs. In the case to which we have referred nothing would have been lost had the presbytery delayed action and invited a representative of the Board of Publication to present the facts from his point of view; and even when the doings of non-religious bodies are being considered it is often wise to ask some one to speak for them who knows more about them than do those who would formally censure them. The influence of deliverances of ministerial bodies depends much on the evidence of fairness in judgment concerning political, social and other movements which they condemn.

DECLINE IN MERCANTILE HONOR.

One of the most distinguished and successful merchants in Chicago is reported to have said recently that in that city there has been a steady decline within the last five years of mercantile honor. On being asked if the report were true he said that, although he did not intend his remarks for publication, he did not mean to limit them to Chicago. Several prominent business men in the same city have been interviewed and, with few exceptions, admit that this degeneracy in business morals has taken place. Probably, with many honorable exceptions, the judgment is substantially true and applies to the whole country. What, then, is its cause? For Chicago we might, perhaps, trace its beginning to the determination on the part of the World's Fair directors to keep the gates open Sundays against the will of the people and in spite of their agreement with the Government not to do so. Notwithstanding the fact that this decision proved both unpopular and unprofitable, it nevertheless marks a moral decline on the part of men from whom better things were expected.

Other reasons for this moral degeneracy in business life may be suggested. One of them is possibly found in the exclusion of the Bible from the public schools. While this is not universal it has taken place on such a large scale as to have had considerable influence on the younger business men of today. Undoubtedly many teachers continue to exert a strong moral influence over their pupils, but it will hardly be denied that on the whole the moral influence of the public school is less strong and healthful than it was a quarter of a century since.

Since the close of the war there has been an increasingly strong desire for money and the pleasures and position which money will bring. We care less than formerly for plain living and high thinking, far more for equipage, dress, palatial homes and social prestige. Temptations to obtain money by measures which would not bear the light of day have not infrequently been employed, and although wealth has been increased it has not always been accompanied by a corresponding increase of the moral virtues. The ease with which great fortunes have been acquired, and the rapid increase in some which were large before the war, have not been without effect on the moral standards of the times. Where social standing is made to depend almost entirely on wealth, and where one's family feels that social standing is everything, a fond husband and father will often yield to a temptation to accumulate wealth by means which once he would have scorned. Even where the returns are not large in themselves, but still mark a considerable increase over the former gains of a strictly honest business life, dishonest measures to make them larger than they once were are not always set aside. Combinations of capital, the formation of trusts, which are often nothing but monopolies, the employment of political position for self enrichment, are simply signs that the conscience of the people is at least sluggish in its movement. Even when we know that a fortune has been dishonestly made, we do not often brand its possessor as a thief and shun his society. Sometimes we show him honor, and do not hesitate to form matrimonial alliances with his family. How few of those who are convicted for taking bribes, for selling their votes or for violating in some way the rights of society, even if sent to prison, are left to serve out their time! Governors are found to pardon the condemned criminal and to plead his cause against a judge who in view of the evidence and under his oath to be true to the law and the best interests of society could do nothing less than send him to prison! The old love and reverence for law have diminished. Criminals now calculate their chances of being caught, their chances of conviction when caught, their chances of pardon if condemned when caught. They have no other sense of sin than the inconvenience which it causes them if obliged to pay its penalty.

Nor would it be strange if the growing disregard of the sanctity of marriage and the indissolubility of the marriage bond had contributed somewhat to a lowering of the standards of integrity in society at large. After the sanctity of the family has been destroyed, we can hardly expect those affected by it to have that delicacy of conscience which is granted those to whom the family always remains a reminder of heaven's purity, peace and love.

The church has not been quite as outspoken in all cases against the danger of moral degeneracy in business as it once was, or sufficiently earnest in condemning the theory so many seem to hold that business and religion, in the way of morality, have nothing to do with each other.

In our revivals has not too much stress been laid on the mere acceptance of the grace of God, and too little upon the duty of showing that it has been received by a new and especially an upright and absolutely honest life? In other words, have not many evangelists presented the love side of the gospel to the exclusion of the law side, made prominent the readiness of our Heavenly Father to forgive, and said little about the duty of striving to be perfect as He is perfect? Have we not often substituted emotion for principle, and failed to paint in its true horrors the nature and consequences of sin? Have we not somehow separated, even in our preaching, the experience which we encourage men to recognize as a proof that they are Christians from that morality of conduct which in business and political life often costs a very great deal of self-denial to maintain?

But, whatever the reason, careful observers seem to be of one mind that in our commercial life the standard of integrity is not as high as it was five years ago. These same men tell us that the standard is steadily becoming lower. What shall be done to prevent its further decline? What can we do save to call attention to the fact, to emphasize more earnestly than ever the principles which underlie the righteousness of God as it is revealed in the New Testament, and to make it clear that even for this world this righteousness is better than any pecuniary success without it.

May we not encourage our younger business men to seek for subjects connected with our public life, perhaps with the government of our cities, which will require them to take sides and discuss them from a Christian point of view, and thus again, as in past eras when great moral topics have occupied public attention, develop conscience and create in the community in which they reside standards of thought and conduct which will be satisfied with nothing less than the standards of the gospels, and which will visit on those who violate them, whatever be their excuse, the condemnation which they merit?

THE NEXT GREAT REFORM.

An important hearing was held last week before the metropolitan committee at the Massachusetts State House on the petition of the Municipal League of Boston for further changes in the city charter. They ask (1) for a single legislative chamber of twenty-seven, to be chosen for three years, nine each year, to take the place of the present board of aldermen and common councilors. (2) They urge that this body shall be chosen by proportional legislation, according to the Swiss free list system. (3) They ask for a board of apportionment as a guide to just expenditures by the various departments.

We hope the legislature will grant the petition. As stated by Mr. S. B. Capen, the president of the league, proportional representation is the next great reform and the fitting sequel to the two which have preceded—civil service reform and the secret ballot. It provides the way by which good citizens can vote together all over the city and have their votes effective by just representation. It will insure representation by ideas instead of by representatives of national parties, chosen simply because they are Republicans or Democrats. The changes which the league advocated last year and which have become law were steps in the right direction. We believe that for which they now ask will be equally of advantage to the city.

This gives us the occasion to add our tribute of sympathy with the grand work this league is doing. One of the first of bodies of this character, the simplicity of its organization has been universally commended. It is a federation of the moral and philanthropic interests of the city, no organization being allowed over seven representatives. It has already created a new interest in public affairs and civic pride is on the increase. Its public discussions command attention and its literature is sought for all over the country. We believe it is setting an example to other cities which they may wisely follow.

The problem of America and of the world today is the problem of the city. To overthrow municipal corruption is next in importance to the overthrow of slavery. We are glad to see the Christian men to the front in all these movements. Mr. Capen said truly in his address to the league at the opening of the year which has been published as Tract No. 3: "The problems of the next century are to be more and more the problems of human brotherhood. We have not a common ancestry or a common religion, but are of many nations and many religions. We want to cement all interests together under the mighty inspiration and purpose to have a city in which there shall be no slums to contaminate and destroy, but where schools and public institutions of every name shall be the best in all the world." To such sentiments all the people will say, Amen.

THE BOARD'S DEBT PAID.

It will bring to many hearts a great and joyful sense of relief to learn that the debt of $115,000 of the American Board has been raised. At the annual meeting in Brooklyn last October Mr. D. Willis James offered $25,000 toward the debt on condition that the entire amount should be pledged by March 1. Committees were appointed in different sections of the country, and the attempt has been successful. New England, as usual, has done more than was allotted to her.

Most of this money has come from individuals and much of it in large gifts. By raising it in this way the Prudential Committee and those who have co-operated with it have hoped to interfere as little as possible with the regular contributions. If these should continue and substantially increase the committee would feel far more jubilant over the payment of the debt. But it is feared that one result of the extra effort will appear in the falling off of the regular receipts. This would be especially disastrous for the reason that the recent reductions in the appropriations have been so heavy as to occasion the severest distress and discouragement in the mission fields. Some time ago the Prudential Committee sent to the churches a statement of the heavy reductions of necessity made in the appropriations for 1896, together with letters showing the distress occasioned by these retrenchments and the disaster certain to follow. These letters, impressive, urgent heart cries sent by the writers to the churches, were placed in the hands of every Congregational pastor in our land, with a request that they be laid in some form before their people.

Word has been received that many churches have heard this message. But in some cases it has been ignored by the pastors. A well-known woman visiting the ministers in one of our cities was amazed to find that the waste-basket had received a number of these important statements. A deacon in one of those same churches, on hearing the story of need from this woman, was astonished at not having heard it before and exclaimed, "The people ought to know these things." A good pastor lately wrote, "The ministers' waste-baskets will have a good deal to answer for in the Day of Judgment."

In the belief that many of our readers who are in sympathy with the work of the American Board desire to know "these things," we publish elsewhere in this issue further extracts from more recent missionary letters. These are but fragments of a few out of many. It is noticeable that scarcely a word of complaint is expressed for reduction in salary, except as this forbids them to make the sacrifices they have rejoiced to make in Christ's name, and thus give to the work from their own purses. The note of grief is for the arrested progress of the work, the work which means souls saved, ignorance enlightened and churches of Christ established.

The Prudential Committee stands between the churches and their missionaries as agents to carry out directions, to pass on such gifts as come into the treasury, to plan as wisely as possible for the management of the world-wide undertaking. Though their sympathies are stirred, though their hearts may be weighed with a load of sorrow, they are powerless of themselves to relieve the stricken work. They may, however, and must, lay all their burden before our churches. They are moved to ask, "Is it, indeed, too late?" Can not you, reader, who have taken to heart these burning words, become the means of bringing them home to your own church, your own friends? For the sake of keeping faith with those whom we have sent, for the sake of Christ's kingdom in the world, for the sake of the King, our Saviour, cannot each make an effort?

The message which has brought our missionaries near to the borders of despair may yet be recalled if the churches so will. The cut has actually been made. Work has been arrested. Nevertheless, if the forces rally, if each church will plan for and pledge an increased offering for 1896 over last year's, and if those as yet offering no help will join in the ranks of "giving churches," though even in a humble way, a gladder note shall speedily echo and re-echo through every mission field of the American Board. With the united strength of the whole Congregational body, the deliverance may be certain and effectual.

HENRY C. BOWEN.

The career of this veteran editor, who died last week at the age of eighty-two, illustrates many of the most interesting features in the development of religious journalism. The New York Independent was started in 1848, one of its prominent aims being to exert political influence in behalf of righteousness. Its projectors were among the ablest of the younger leaders of the Congregationalist denomination—R. S. Storrs, J. P. Thompson, J. T. Leavitt, pastors in New York and Brooklyn. Others, like Leonard Bacon and Henry Ward Beecher, who wrote often for the paper, were also men of strong convictions, in advance of the public sentiment of their time. They were enemies of slavery when slavery had more defenders and apologists than foes. Mr. Bowen furnished money for the enterprise while they made it their mouthpiece. It at once was recognized as an influential newspaper, but for a considerable time it was financially a losing venture, and a large part of its deficiencies were made good from Mr. Bowen's purse. Religious newspapers have rarely been started for the purpose of making money, and not a few of them have swallowed fortunes before they have paid their running expenses. Able editing alone does not make a religious newspaper successful. Not less important is able financial management, and the less known publisher is not less essential to the power of the press than the editor.

Other interests and duties after a time led to the withdrawal of the other founders and earliest associates from the Independent, but Mr. Bowen, who was not at first conspicuous in its management, continued in its support and, when he threw his business energies into it, made it a valuable property. He chose to be not only its publisher but, after experiments with a ministerial syndicate and later with individuals as editors under his supervision, he became its editor. Though he was not trained for that office and never, we believe, wrote extensively for his paper, he shaped its policy till his death. It stood for the Republican party in its infancy and advocated the platforms of that party from a moral standpoint. It has consistently held to this position, and has had much to do with the movements which have made the Christian church so great a power in the political life of our country.

Mr. Bowen was a Congregationalist and for many years exerted a large influence in the denomination. He was responsible, perhaps more than any other one person, for the founding of the Church of the Pilgrims and Plymouth Church, and for bringing to Brooklyn Dr. R. S. Storrs and Henry Ward Beecher. Though the Independent has not been a denominational paper, the predominant religious influences in it have been affiliated with Congregationalism. The work and problems of that denomination have always had prominent place in its discussions. When Mr. Bowen opposed Mr. Beecher in his famous trial, the paper suffered heavy losses in its subscription lists, but he did not abate the vigor of his hostility.

The Independent is a conspicuous example of the power of a man untiringly persistent, combining business skill with such a keen foresight of the religious and political interests of the people as to marshal able thinkers in guiding those interests and in holding public attention. The paper has originated new features of journalism, such as the symposium idea, and has adapted to itself features originated by others. It has kept well abreast of the times. Yet in doing this it has changed its positions and outward appearance less than any of the other leading religious journals. Its editor has had strong friends and bitter enemies. He has done stalwart fighting for causes which he believed were righteous and needed defense. He has sometimes stood in the way of progress and declared that it must stop, but when its movement did not halt he has joined the procession with no evidence of any change in his opinions. He has taught many valuable lessons in religious journalism, and has prepared the way for changes in the Independent, in which his influence will still be potent, though it may not be perceived. To have lived so intensely as he has done and so long, through the most exciting and significant periods of American political and religious history, is to have fulfilled a high ambition.

HOW TO HELP OUR PASTOR.

That is the strongest church whose members have learned best how to help the pastor. Other churches may be much larger, wealthier, more widely known, and able to make greater contributions to the benevolent societies, but that is the strongest, most useful church which is most of a unit because of the intelligent, helpful loyalty of its laity to its pastor. If such a church be studied several things are evident.

One is that the members seek to be active, each in his own way. Some have natural gifts qualifying them to serve in counsel, others are best adapted to relieve the needy, others to teach in the Sunday school. Each has examined himself and has given himself to that branch of work which he can do best—not always, however, that which he prefers. But each also seeks to be active in the pastor's way. That is, he accepts the pastor as leader and guide, consults with him, accepts his suggestions and thus promotes the harmony of the whole church work, which some one mind, naturally the pastor's, must organize and control.

Another is that differences of opinion are not allowed to subtract from mutual efficiency. Those who do not agree with the pastor nevertheless credit him with the best aims and the noblest spirit. They will co-operate with him loyally, even when they are not as confident of results as he. In a certain church the pastor desired a change of policy and method in respect to an important department of work. He consulted a leader in the church who felt strongly that the change must be mischievous. But after a thorough discussion he said to his pastor, "I see that you have studied this matter carefully, are convinced that the proposed change will be wise and safe, and are very desirous of having it made. I disagree entirely with you at present. But in such a matter it is right for you to have your way, and I will do my best to co-operate with you and make the change a success. If it fails, you will be convinced, as I shall be if it succeeds." When this man's spirit exists in a church, what can hinder its usefulness, in spite of any mistakes by the way?

Is it necessary to add that every Christian should pray earnestly for the pastor, should hold his honor dear, and, if possible, should defend him faithfully, when adversely criticized? One word more—help your pastor when you are sure that he has made some mistake, not by condemning him in your family or before others but by going straight to him for a frank, brotherly, prayerful talk. Whether you part on terms of entire agreement or not, you will separate with a truer and better mutual understanding.

At the missionary meeting in the Academy of Music, New York, last Tuesday evening, the boxes—not for contributions but for sittings—were sold for $10 each. When people are willing to pay such prices for the privilege of attending a missionary meeting, it shows an intense popular interest which ought to sweep away these burdensome debts, or else it shows a great curiosity to see the President of the United States preside at such a gathering.

CURRENT HISTORY.

The National Legislature.

While men with presidential bees buzzing in their bonnets are busy plotting, manipulating politicians and arranging their deals with partisan bosses, Congress is contributing its full share toward creating an issue that will make the next national electoral battle clean cut and of unusual importance, one that will make the platform of more importance than the man who stands on it. As Secretary of the Treasury Carlisle said in an address to New York bankers last week, the Democratic party is facing the question whether or not it will declare in favor of a monetary standard which will put us on a level with China and Mexico, and the action of the Senate last week makes it equally clear that when the Republican delegates assemble in St. Louis their chief duty will be to declare in unequivocal terms the position of the party on the future place of silver in our monetary system. More courage in dealing with the situation must be shown than any of the Republican candidates for the nomination, save Governor Bradley of Kentucky, have yet shown. The day has passed for platitudes and generalizations. If the senators from Colorado, Utah, Nevada, Montana and Idaho correctly interpret the feelings of their constituents, and delegates holding similar views come to St. Louis and threaten to bolt the Republican ticket, rather than vote for a candidate standing on an honest money platform, then the makers of the platform and the selectors of the candidate must make a choice as unequivocal as that made in the Senate last week, when the five Republican senators from the States just mentioned killed the tariff bill "as dead as Julius Cæsar," to quote Senator Frye of Maine, because they held that the free coinage of silver was paramount to the necessity of making national income equal outgo, or—looking at it from the party standpoint—permitting the Republican party to reap the credit of rescuing the nation from its present disgraceful plight. Since the Civil War we have been cursed with inflationists under various names; politicians have cared more for party success than for sound finance; compromise after compromise has been made. The time has come now for a square, standup fight at the polls, and the party that dodges, straddles or names a trimmer as a candidate is doomed. The people are getting weary and angry.

The United States and Cuba.

The United States Senate, after a notable debate in which Senators Morgan, Gray, Lodge and Sherman participated, has passed by a vote of sixty-four to six the following concurrent resolution:

> Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in the opinion of Congress a condition of public war exists between the Government of Spain and the Government proclaimed, and for some time maintained by force of arms, by the people of Cuba, and that the United States of America should maintain a strict neutrality between the contending Powers, according to each all the rights of belligerents in the ports and territory of the United States. Be it further
> Resolved, That the President is hereby requested to interpose his friendly offices with the Spanish Government for the recognition of the independence of Cuba.

The House, practically without debate, has passed resolutions essentially the same, by a vote of 263 to 16, the Massachusetts delegation protesting against such precipitancy and inconsiderate action tending toward war. The Spanish populace are much wrought up over this expression of opinion; our legation in Madrid is under guard, and at Barcelona the consular headquarters have been attacked and "Old Glory" treated contemptuously, but for these acts Spain has voluntarily apologized and offered reparation. Were these joint, rather than concurrent resolutions, Spain might with reason be annoyed or enraged, and both countries might be justified in preparations for war, but so long as President Cleveland and Secretary Olney maintain their present attitude of conservatism a concurrent resolution of Congress on this subject has no more weight in determining our foreign policy in Cuba than the Armenian resolutions had in shaping our attitude toward Turkey and European Powers respecting Armenia, those resolutions, so it is said on reliable authority, never having been forwarded to the signatory Powers. President Cleveland holds, and we think justly, that the revolutionists in Cuba have yet to establish a state of affairs entitling them to recognition as belligerents. Recognition of their belligerency under present conditions would establish a precedent likely to cause us trouble in the future and sure to bring disaster to American interests in Cuba and American commerce, and at the same time would cause no very marked gain to the interests of the revolutionists. But if, as a protector of humanity, a punisher of the oppressor, the United States deems it necessary to compel Spain to cease misgoverning Cuba or treating Cuban revolutionists in a barbarous way, then Congress should act openly, declare its position squarely in whatever resolutions were passed, and then prepare to accept the logical consequences of such a declaration. As it is we have to live up to the requirements of international law and make such seizures of suspected vessels and cargoes as were made in New York city last week; we have to content ourselves with resolutions that are ambiguous, and Cuba gains naught.

The Salvation Army and the Ballington Booths.

To the credit of Mr. and Mrs. Ballington Booth be it said that they have refused the proposition to lead a revolt in the army; nor do they intend to retain for their own that which legally is theirs but morally speaking is the property of the army. Before they transfer it, however, they will do well to impose such conditions as will prevent the property in this country from being perverted to producing an income for the army's work in other lands. Any legal complications that may arise to plague the army are likely to grow out of the unwillingness of members of the Auxiliary League whose money is invested in the New York building to permit the English officials to inhabit it. Many of these gave or loaned with the understanding that the Ballington Booths were to administer the army's affairs, and they do not take kindly to the idea of the authorities in London or the British leaders in this country controlling their investments. Whether such as are disaffected in this way have any legal redress is yet to be determined. It is useless to deny that the rank and file in this country are more loyal to the military idea and discipline of the army than they are to the Ballington Booths. Nothing more conclusive on this point can be cited than the present attitude and utterances of American born soldiers, like Major Brewer of New England, who insist that, however much they may love the Ballington Booths and mourn their departure, they are in duty bound to obey the new commander loyally and joyously. There are not a few in the army who refuse to take this position, and already a number of the privates and officers have resigned and many of the members of the Auxiliary League have sent in their resignations. Mr. and Mrs. Ballington Booth have sent out from their home in Montclair, N. J., a statement to the public asserting their complete severance of relations with the army, and their determination, as soon as physically recuperated and divinely instructed as to method, to establish an organization which will seek out "the unchurched and unchristianized people" of the country, and reveal in its spirit "Scriptural plainness and self-sacrifice of life and the simplicity and distinctiveness of dress." The American people are likely to give the Ballington Booths most of their sympathy and money in the future, and the army as such has received a blow from which it never will recover. The work of disintegration has begun. The democratic people of a republic like ours have little or no use for autocratic methods, especially in religion, and a Booth dynasty is no more winsome than a Roman hierarchy.

Legislation Respecting Liquor Selling.

The legislature of New York is about to vote on the Raines Bill. Modeled originally on the Ohio law, it has been so transformed that little likeness to that can now be found. The chief objection to it, if it shall be passed, will be its creation of a vast machine with a salary list of several hundred thousand dollars a year, to be used by the party in power as an instrument for poisoning even more the politics of the State. In Iowa the lower house of the legislature, by a vote fifty-two to forty-one, has defeated the proposition to submit to the people an amendment to the constitution prohibiting the manufacture or sale of all intoxicating liquors. This action is generally interpreted as remanding to the rear, for a time at least, the question of prohibition in Iowa. In Boston the Board of Police Commissioners, failing to secure from the city of Boston the increased appropriation necessary to man and enlarge the department in the best way during the coming year, have decided to secure the revenue by increasing the license fees in the city, all new hotel licenses to be raised from $1,500 to $2,000, those of retailers of the first class from $1,000 to $1,100 and those of grocers from $300 to $600.

The repeated successes of no-license campaigns in large cities like Cambridge and Somerville, in the vicinity of Boston, have naturally led residents of out-districts in the city itself to ask why they may not rid themselves of saloons even if they cannot be at once banished from business sections. Sentiment of this sort has this year crystallized in an effort to secure from the legislature the privilege of local option by wards. The issue was first made on the Brighton ward alone, which constitutes a distinct and largely residential section. The liquor committee, however, we regret to say, has given the petitioners leave to withdraw and their only hope now is to secure attention directly from the House. The matter will be brought up there this week and we look for vigorous, and, we trust, successful championing of the proposition. The Dorchester Ministers' Union, representing all denominations, is active in its behalf, and prominent laymen are lending the strength of their names to the worthy movement. There is certainly no reason other than the self-interest of the saloon power which should deny citizens of these outlying wards to treat the liquor problem at close range.

NOTES.

Attorney-General Harmon rules that certain kinds of bond and investment companies are lotteries and not entitled to the privileges of the mails.

The friends of Gen. O. O. Howard, with his approval, are endeavoring to induce Congress to secure him the rank of lieutenant-general on the retired list.

Refusing to apologize or resign after having been found guilty of misrepresentation—to put it mildly—the Earl of Dunraven has been expelled from the New York Yacht Club.

The London populace look upon Dr. Jameson as a hero and so do not a few of the "classes." But his trial bids fair to be a just one and its effects far-reaching and precedent-making.

The new South Carolina lynching law may be a good one, but juries of the vicinage are not yet willing to punish white lynchers of Negroes. Hence the outrageous verdict in the Broxton Bridge case.

The British case in the Venezuela controversy has been completed and an advance copy, transmitted through Ambassador Bayard, is now on its way to our commission, which, by the way, is beginning to settle down to deliberative work. Mr. Justin Winsor of Harvard is its chief cartographer.

Meetings in the interest of Anglo-American arbitration have been held in Washington and Boston during the past week, and the faculty of Dartmouth College has formulated an impressive expression of opinion favoring such a settlement of all disputes. In England preparations are being made for a most remarkable demonstration to further the same beneficent end.

The committee on legislative affairs of the school board of the city of Boston has reported in favor of that body's petitioning the legislature for a law prohibiting the selling or giving away of pictures with cigarettes, and punishing violators of the law. Evidence brought before the school board by the agents of the Watch and Ward Society and the Children's Aid Society as to the pernicious effect of the pictures which now circulate so freely among the youth of Boston went far toward inducing the committee to so report. It is a fact easily demonstrated that the street gamins of Boston—and all other towns—collect these pictures with all the avidity and discrimination shown by men and women who ride nobler and more æsthetic hobbies, the relative value of their collections depending upon their suggestiveness and the degree of nudity displayed. Let the legislature have regard for the youth of the commonwealth.

IN BRIEF.

Several requests have come to us to put the prayers in Closet and Altar in plainer type. We use the Old English partly that the mind may move more slowly over these petitions than it might if they were expressed in plain Roman letters.

The Ohio woman, Mrs. S. M. Scott-Slauson of Piqua, who has so generously offered to all who desire it the leaflet by Mrs. C. L. Goodell entitled A Month with Jesus, is obliged by unavoidable causes to withdraw this offer after March 15.

Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott began last Sunday a course of evening sermons to his church on The Theology of an Evolutionist. These, doubtless, will supplement his interesting Lowell lectures in Boston and give him an opportunity to fortify his argument.

Lent is not too far advanced for the deriving of suggestion for immediate action from Mr. Patton's article in this issue. The plan outlined could be carried out in the privacy of one's room or in a small group of congenial spirits as well as in the lecture-room of a church.

Mansfield College, Oxford, honored Rev. G. A. Gordon, D. D., in 1894 by asking him to preach before the Summer School of Theology. It now expresses its esteem of him by an invitation to spend several weeks this spring at the college, in the course of which he will preach and lecture. He will sail from New York early in May.

A new religious denomination has been started in Chicago. Its leader is Dr. Dowrie, of fame as a faith healer. Its articles of faith are thoroughly orthodox and it is called the Christian Catholic Church. With the addition of a few more adjectives to its name it might consistently invite all denominations to come into its fold.

We have space this week only to chronicle the death, last Monday at his Brookline home, of Hon. Charles Carleton Coffin, to whose golden wedding we referred last week. His sudden passing on, at the age of seventy-two, to the larger life leaves a great void in many hearts, but death under such circumstances and to such a man is little short of a translation.

One of the noblest men of Toronto, Hart A. Massey, who died recently, has left to charitable, educational and religious institutions $650 000. Of this sum Mr. Moody's schools in Northfield are to receive $10,000. Mr. Massey's life was fragrant of good deeds, and he has left behind him the memory of an example of far greater value than these bequests of money.

If we are to have an inter-society journal, representing the six Congregational societies, editors must be selected who will avoid writing "Jingo" editorials or posing as Wall Street speculators. The Evangelist, Presbyterian and Mid-Continent at last have awakened to the scandal which we exposed Jan. 30, and The Interior continues to belabor the editors of The Assembly Herald.

It is good news that the contest over the will of Mr. Joseph H. Stickney, who died in Baltimore, seems to be approaching an end. The bequest to the Congregational Home Missionary Society of $150,000 has been paid. This sum, with the amounts subscribed to the General Howard Fund, will not suffice to free the society from debt, but will lift from it the heaviest part of its burden and will greatly cheer its officers and workers in the field.

The Armenian troubles have served to clarify ideas respecting the geography and history of the region in which the outbreaks have occurred, but there are still some persons whose minds seem to be confused on certain points. For instance, the old lady who said that the massacres were the judgment of God upon the false Armenian theology was bound to score a point for her beloved Calvinism, even though she had to strain a little the facts in the case.

Few weeks in the official life of the men now connected with the management of the American Board have been so exciting and eventful as was last. Letters were sent flying hither and thither. Pledges for the debt came in by post and wire to the extent of from three to seven thousand dollars a day, and, when it began to be certain that the debt would be paid, the weary, anxious look on the faces of secretaries and Prudential Committee men changed to one of joy and hope.

Joseph Cook, we are glad to learn, is recovering from his illness. Before leaving Japan last December, he addressed a note to the missionaries, closing with these choice sentences, which do not appear at all like the thoughts of a sick man and which are as well worth circulating in America as in Japan:

Only a religion that saves souls is worth saving.

It is as certain that the Bible comes from God as that it leads to God.

The sight of the cross makes it no cross to bear the cross.

The London Independent says of our Pilgrimage to England next June, "Not only Congregationalists, but members of the Church of England have promised to do all in their power to make the visit as pleasant as profitable." Our London correspondent in another column mentions Ambassador Bayard's interest in this visit in connection with the address he has promised to make at Gainsborough while the Pilgrims are in that town. We are glad to be able to announce that our party is being filled up as rapidly as we anticipated, and by persons who will fully appreciate its rare opportunities.

The spectacle of the czar engaged in presenting costly gifts of precious vases to the sultan at the moment when his Christian subjects are starving or being dragooned into the denial of Christ is one which the future historian of civilization will look upon with utter amazement. Either the czar is a dupe or a partner in the massacres. If he knows about the slaughter of his fellow-Christians, he—and he only, apparently—has the power to compel the sultan to put a stop to it. If he does not know, he must certainly be allowed to pass for the most ignorant man in Europe or America, always excepting the Turkish ministers, who do not want to know anything about it until it is all over.

We have no desire to take any part in the differences which have for several months disturbed the peace of the First Church of Lowell. But we feel compelled to protest against the bill introduced into the legislature providing that any one who hires a sitting in the meeting house of that church shall be enrolled as a member of the legal society or corporation which owns the property upon filing a claim thereto. This would be in exact contradiction to the by-laws of that body. This appeal to the legislature to take part in the dispute seems to us very unfortunate. But if the bill we have referred to should be passed it would be a menace to every church in the State. The Revised Statutes of Massachusetts declare that "a religious society may make by-laws not repugnant to the laws of the commonwealth, and may in such by-laws prescribe the manner in which persons may become members." The act sought from the legislature by members of the First Church of Lowell would take from religious societies the rights belonging to them, and the application of such a principle would be a danger to any and every corporate body in the State which holds property.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM THE INTERIOR.

Roosevelt in Chicago.

Feb. 22 was celebrated with even more than its accustomed fervor in Chicago. As the years go by it seems as if people were coming to understand and appreciate Washington better. The significant event of the day was the addresses of Theodore Roosevelt. He made it evident that the danger which threatens the American people is their indifference to law, their willingness to have legislative enactments passed which by common consent are to remain a dead letter. He insisted that no more such legislation shall be allowed, that every law now on the statute-books shall be enforced, guilty persons punished as they deserve, and that over criminals no more senti mental sympathy shall be wasted. The applause his words called forth indicated the feeling of his auditors.

The Cutters' Strike.

Unfortunately this is not yet settled. It seems just now as if the manufacturers were responsible for the delay, inasmuch as the cutters are willing to arbitrate. At first the manufacturers agreed to arbitration, although they said the men would not consent to it. Now that the men have consented it seems strange that the manufacturers withdraw their consent. Members of the State Board of Arbitration are not without hope of yet effecting a satisfactory settlement. The manufacturers say they are perfectly willing that the arbitrators should investigate the grounds of their action. If this is done and it appears that arbitration ought to take place the manufacturers' consent to it may possibly be won.

Plymouth Church, Minneapolis.

This noble church is receiving the congratulations of its friends on its success in persuading Rev. D. N. Beach of Cambridge, Mass., to become its pastor. Difficult as the care of a down-town church in one of our growing cities has come to be, it would seem as if Plymouth never had a brighter outlook. With the energy which has hitherto characterized Dr. Beach one can but predict for him a most useful pastorate in this historic church of the Northwest.

Illinois Branch W. B. M. I.

The annual meeting of the missionary women connected with the Chicago Association was held Thursday in the Union Park Church. The day was pleasant and the attendance good. Reports were full of encouragement. Addresses were interesting and instructive. They were on such topics as Heroism in Missions by Mrs. T. P. Stanwood, on work in Japan by Miss Howe of Kobe and on Turkey by Miss Webb of Adana. It does one good to see the enthusiasm of these Christian women for missions, and leads one to ask how can some of it be imparted to men?

The Waifs Mission.

There is trouble in this now famous mission. Mr. T. E. Daniels, for many years its earnest and, with the waifs, very popular superintendent, has by vote of the managers of the mission been asked to resign. The reasons given are loose methods in bookkeeping and general inability to keep expenses within the income. There are no charges against the moral character of Mr. Daniels. It is not thought that he has enriched himself at anybody else's expense. But he has not been able, and some say has refused even, to put his accounts into such shape as to render them intelligible. It is not strange that a man who has given $1,000 a month to this charity should wish another superintendent, or that the public should wish the same. And yet few men have ever wrought more earnestly or apparently with greater success. Were it possible for Mr. Daniels to reform his methods it is not likely that he would have been asked to give up a work for which he has so many excellent qualities.

Gifts to Central Church.

This church has already received $55,212 from Mrs. Celia Wallace towards the $100,000 she proposes to give it for a permanent endowment. Through this, and other expected gifts, it is hoped that this independent organization, called into existence by the lamented Professor Swing, will be made permanent, and that the income from their investment will enable the society to do a great deal of benevolent and Christian work hitherto neglected. The church is now seeking to raise several thousand dollars with which to build a chapel at the university settlement in memory of Professor Swing and to establish certain scholarships which shall bear his name. Mrs. Wallace is a native of New Hampshire and is the youngest daughter of Dr. Thomas Whipple, formerly a member of Congress from that State. Since her husband's death in 1878 she has devoted her life to charity.

The Lewis Institute.

This institute will be opened in September. Examinations for the classes then to be formed will begin at the Chicago Academy, 552 West Madison Street, March 7. The courses of instruction are to be known as the preparatory, academic and collegiate. Special facilities will be afforded boys and girls whose opportunities for education have been inadequate, and arrangements made for evening classes. The money left for this institute by Mr. Allen C. Lewis of the New England Church, Nov. 1, 1877, was estimated at $550,000. Nov. 1, 1895, it had increased to $1,600,000. It is now under the control of a corporation, with such men as President Harper, Thomas Kane and Albert G. Lane on its board of trustees.

The institute is at the corner of West Madison and Robey Streets, and is therefore easy of access from every part of the city, especially from every part of the West Side, for which by the terms of the will it has been erected. The buildings, which will cost $230,000 aside from furnishings, are 195 feet on Madison by 125 feet on Robey Street. Instruction will be thorough and extensive. It is proposed to have the teacher work with his pupils a part of every day in order to show them how to study, i. e., the laboratory method of study is to be applied to all branches taught. No class will contain more than twenty-five pupils. FRANKLIN.

FROM LONDON.

Theological Tendencies.

There have lately been several plain indications in both England and Scotland of a marked tendency towards a change of attitude on certain points relating to the person of Christ. One expects "advanced" views in the writings of rationalistic theologians, but it is somewhat startling to find men in the regular ministry relinquishing positions which have hitherto been regarded by the average believer as part of the very foundation of Christianity. To mention only one point, it is now obvious to the most casual observer, as it has long been to one who is in personal touch with a large number of ministers and gets beneath the surface, that the virgin birth of Christ (to use precise terms) is not now tenaciously and universally held in the Congregational and Free Church of Scotland ministry—to speak only of the two denominations with which the writer is most familiar. This question is rarely specifically dealt with in pulpit, conference or religious journal, but it is the subject of much anxious thought and private discussion. A few ministers have openly disavowed belief in the virgin birth; others say that it is not essential to Christianity; many, especially among the younger ministers, are in a state of uncertainty. Of course, it is the old question of the miraculous over again. If the "nativity story" is rejected, can the process stop there? Can Christ's resurrection—his physical resurrection—and his miracles then be retained? But the present duty is simply to indicate the tendency, not to suggest difficulties. As might be expected, some of the older men cling to the traditional view all the more firmly that it is being discredited or at least regarded as an open question by others. It should in fairness be added that the breadth of view of some ministers is only matched by their evangelical fervor and passion for souls.

The Evolution of a Baptist.

Quite a sensation has been caused by Dr. Pierson's immersion. What it precisely means is the subject of much speculation. The circumstances under which it took place were somewhat peculiar. The rite was privately administered by Dr. J. A. Spurgeon at his church on a Saturday afternoon in the presence of a few friends. On the Sunday Dr. Pierson preached twice from his friend's pulpit, and on the following day a reception was held "to give Dr. and Mrs. Pierson a hearty welcome," when the two doctors swore eternal friendship and Dr. Pierson expatiated at some length on the reasons that had induced him to go down into the water. It was all a process of evolution. Certain texts made him uncomfortable; then he came to the conclusion that infant baptism was wrong, and next that adult immersion was right. Honest conviction, and especially action on conviction, deserve respect and admiration, but it is marvelous that so close a student of his Bible and church history as is Dr. Pierson should have been so long in making these discoveries. A curious feature of his speech was his emphatic and reiterated protestation that he had no designs on the Metropolitan Tabernacle pulpit. He would rather have his left hand cut off than do the Tabernacle church a damage in any way whatsoever. In a sentence that has in it quite a Spartan ring he told his "dear friends" who came down from the Tabernacle that, "It is our duty to stand by the man who is called to be our pastor, and we ought to be his helpers in every possible way." "If the people cannot support the pastor they should go to another."

And so on. One cannot help wondering why Dr. Pierson did not go to the Tabernacle to be baptized, and noting that "its dear pastor," for whom he prays daily, had no part or lot in the proceedings at Croydon. As to his present visit, Dr. Pierson dwelt on the sacrifices he made in leaving America just now, explaining that he has come, "under the plain and manifest leading of God, to undertake to visit the churches of Great Britain at large." It may be insular prejudice, but we stolid Britishers do not take kindly to these imported American divines who are, ecclesiastically, everything by turns and nothing long. It is curious that the unkindest cuts at Dr. Pierson have proceeded from inside the denomination he has entered—the Baptist, for instance, broadly hints that the two Doctors are hatching a conspiracy against the peace of the Tabernacle church, where Thomas Spurgeon is doing a brave work, winning general sympathy and admiration, except when he breaks out, as he occasionally does, into lamentations, in true Spurgeon style, about the prevalence of heresy in these degenerate days. Dr. Pierson's conversion to Baptist principles has put an end to the absurd rumors that he was likely to be invited to Westminster Chapel. Whatever may have been the Doctor's disposition, the deacons never had the least thought of asking either him or John McNiell, whose name has been mentioned in the same connection. The probability is that some little known earnest evangelical worker from East London will be chosen.

The Free Church Federation Movement.

What Mr. Price Hughes calls "the most important ecclesiastical movement that England has known since the sixteenth century" continues to spread with astonishing rapidity. Local councils are being formed all over the country. Every week sees the birth of a new one, and there is promise that at no distant date we shall have what many have long ardently desired—a united Nonconformity, without interference with existing forms of Free Church government. The avowed objects of the National Council of Evangelical Free Churches are to facilitate fraternal intercourse and co-operation among the evangelical Free Churches; to assist in the organization of local councils; to encourage devotional fellowship and mutual counsel concerning the spiritual life and religious activities of the churches; to advocate the New Testament doctrine of the church and to defend the rights of the associated churches; to promote the application of the law of Christ in every relation of human life. Much good work has already been accomplished in reducing overlapping, and the Nonconformist churches in several cities, including Norwich, have united in house to house visitation. At the Nottingham Congress in March, practically all the Free Churches will be influentially represented.

Hon. T. F. Bayard.

In view of The Congregationalist's Pilgrimage the John Robinson Memorial Church stone laying has been further postponed from April to June 29—the day the party is due at Gainsborough. On calling at the American embassy Dr. Mackennal and Mr. Woods were most cordially received by Mr. Bayard, who pledged himself (so far as an ambassador is able to control his own movements) to make a special journey from London to perform the ceremony. He showed sympathetic interest both in the Memorial Church and The Congregationalist's Pilgrimage, and somewhat astonished the deputation by the minute knowledge he displayed of Puritan history. It will probably never be known how fortunate the two countries have been in having at the embassy one who so thoroughly understands the English nation as Mr. Bayard does. His knowledge of our institutions, his sympathy with our ideals, his generous appreciation of all that is best in our history, his longing for the closest possible union between English-speaking peoples have been of inestimable value during the recent crisis. He is perhaps the most popular envoy at the Court of St. James, and is continually being asked to take part in social and other functions. The other evening he was dining with the Benchers of the Middle Temple, and he has recently been made a trustee of Carlyle's house. During his visit to Scotland, when he received the freedom of the city of Dundee, he was everywhere most heartily welcomed. Whatever may be thought of his protest in Edinburgh against state socialism and protection, it showed, as the Glasgow Evening News remarked, that he is as much sans peur as was his great namesake. Presiding at the annual dinner of a school for providing free education for the sons of the poorer clergy, Mr. Bayard said he was not a citizen of this country, but he was a friend of this country—a remark which elicited cheers. The Royal Geographical Society gave him a most enthusiastic reception when, moving a vote of thanks after a lecture by Dr. Donaldson Smith, American explorer, he declared that the hearts of people on both sides of the Atlantic beat together in a common cause—the elevation of the human race. When Mr. Bayard sails from our shores he will leave behind him hosts of friends, and he may rest assured that his aspiration, expressed at a dinner of the Locomotive Steam Enginemen and Firemen's Friendly Society, to create a better understanding between different classes has been realized.

Disaster to Mansfield Settlement.

Much sympathy is felt for Mr. Percy Alden and his coworkers in the calamity that has befallen Mansfield House. Whilst public services were proceeding on Sunday evening, Jan. 19, a fire broke out in the warden's room and quickly spread over the upper part of the building. Thanks largely to the calmness displayed by the residents no one was injured, but the loss to Mr. Alden is irreparable. He has lost all his books, papers, accounts, all the personal possessions he cared for and a great and growing store of valuable material relating to social movements, the result of ten years' work. As regards the building the disaster may prove a blessing in disguise, for the operations of the settlement have all along been greatly hampered through want of room. An appeal is now made for £5,000 or £6,000 to provide more suitable premises. The wrecked rooms will be rebuilt, but it is proposed to erect a residence such as other settlements have. A friend has promised the last £1,000 required and Mr. Alden and associates are energetically seeking to raise the balance.

LENTEN READINGS.

BY REV. CORNELIUS H. PATTON, DULUTH, MINN.

During the past few years a pleasant custom has grown up in many of our churches of having a series of readings by the pastor during the Lenten season. We have reached the point where we all are thankful to our Episcopalian brethren for preserving and establishing for us these forty days of rest from social cares and excitement, during which the religious side of our natures may come in for more than the usual attention. The question with many now is not, Shall we recognize Lent? but, How shall we recognize it? Those who make it a time for the preparation of children for church membership, of special services for Bible study or of an evangelistic nature are coming to see that it is the very best season for the concentration of church work. But, whether or not extra meetings are undertaken, Lenten readings can be added without materially increasing the labors of pastor or people.

The readings are commonly held in the middle of the morning, with the expectation that ladies will be the principal auditors. The unusual hour adds to the freshness and interest of the exercise. But, if an afternoon hour be preferred, the reading will naturally precede the weekly ladies' meeting. Even if it should trespass upon the hour held sacred for sewing and chat the pastor will be forgiven, as ladies may be urged to busy their hands as well as their ears during the reading.

As for the choice of books, the range is not as wide as one might think at first. The book must be sufficiently brief to be presented substantially in six or seven readings. Naturally one wants to hear a new book at such times, or at least one rediscovered, and of course it should be religious in the best sense of the word, being both spiritually uplifting and practical. Genung's Epic of the Inner Life is one of the first books I have known to be used in this way. Stalker's Imago Christi, and Death of Christ are also favorably reported, while Who Wrote the Bible? by Gladden, was listened to with intense interest by one company of my acquaintance. A brother pastor told me they had a glorious time one year with Maurice's Social Morality, which would seem to indicate that the practical and the ethical side of religion can be taught as effectively from books in the church as from sermons, perhaps more so. Probably this year The Christ of Today will be read in many such circles.

To my mind a better book for such purpose has never been written than Heredity and Christian Problems, by Dr. A. H. Bradford [Macmillan & Co.]. While other scholars have been busy over evolution and Biblical criticism, and endeavoring to rewrite theology in the light of new facts in these realms, Dr. Bradford has been studying heredity and environment, and he now gives the world his conclusions. If he does not show that our ethical and theological systems must be rewritten in the light of heredity, he certainly marks out a line of study which must be followed henceforth by any who would seek to understand the darkest problems of life.

For those of us who have not the time or perhaps the mental apparatus to investigate the original sources of knowledge in this sphere, Dr. Bradford has done an immense service. He does not claim to be an original investigator here, and undoubtedly he is not in the biological and sociological departments of his theme, but when it comes to applying heredity to theological and intellectual problems he has proved his right to be regarded as an expert. His chapters on the Problem of Sin and the Race, and The Problem of Faith carry heredity into fields where it has been very scantily applied before. The book is specially adapted for general readings on account of its clear discussion of heredity in relation to education, the home, pauperism, crime and like social problems. Possibly those who have agonized over the difference between the theories of Weismann and Spencer as to the process of hereditary transmission will welcome this author's answer in the opening chapters of the book as solving the hardest problem of all.

We are living in the time of books, and the reading of books ought to have larger place in the church. Such works as I have mentioned, when listened to by a company of people, become doubly enjoyable on account of the community of pleasure and profit. The reading may naturally be followed with comments by the pastor and a general discussion. The church which tries Lenten readings once is not likely to abandon them.

Recent Revivalism and the Franciscan Rule.

By Rev. Newman Smyth, D. D.

In former days revivals used to be thoroughly and pointedly individualistic; recently, under the inspiration of Professor Herron, the prophet of the new movement, and in the preaching of Rev. B. Fay Mills, its evangelist, revivalism has become largely and diffusively socialistic. This new revivalism is not entirely without historical precedent. It has, indeed, some characteristics which, at least in the extent to which they are carried, are novel and peculiarly its own, such as the extensive business preparation and advertisement of it. The closing of a considerable number of stores by joint agreement, at the request of the management, during a portion of one week day afternoon, marks a distinctive feature of the business conduct of this modern religious campaign.

The older New Haven divines used to debate the question whether means were justifiable in procuring spiritual blessings; the question which this new revivalism might deem worthy of discussion would be, rather, whether any means of good business enterprise had been neglected in arranging for a day of Pentecost. While no one will deny, therefore, that this religious movement, as conducted by Mr. Mills, has some novel features—which it is not the object of this article to discuss—the fact may not be so generally known that its new rule concerning the possession and distribution of property, as well as its interpretation of the precepts of the Sermon on the Mount, is not without interesting historical example and illustration. It may prove profitable to those who are considering whether to engage their churches in such combined socialistic and revival work, to point out a few of the resemblances, as well as contrasts, between the primitive rule of St. Francis of Assisi, and this new rule of the social prophet and evangelist.

1. St. Francis and Brother Leo preached to the common people, and did not confine themselves to the churches; so our social evangelism espouses the cause of the masses. Amid this resemblance there is, however, this difference—St. Francis sought to rebuild the churches and taught his disciples always to show respect even to the priests. While rebuking evils, it never seems to have occurred to him to indulge in invective against the church. Professor Herron does not imitate St. Francis when he italicizes the assertion that "as an institution the church is not Christian; it misrepresents Christ." St. Francis could not have said that, although he had far more occasion to condemn the ecclesiasticism of his time. Mr. Mills, in his frequent strictures of the churches, did not, however, go so far as Professor Herron in such sweeping arraignment of organized Christianity.

2. St. Francis discovered that the fount of life and joy is love. Our new prophetism and evangelism rejoices in the same knowledge. "There is no law," says Professor Herron, "but love." Mr. Mills prefaces his course on social ethics with a number of sermons on love. St. Francis did not discover, and may be pardoned in his unscientific day for not knowing, the economic laws of love. Our new evangelism, in these scientific times, should know that love has laws, and that these laws of love are to be clearly and fully thought out. But St. Francis in his practical preaching gained one advantage of wisdom, for by one of his first sermons he persuaded the citizens of Assisi to agree to a civil compact in which certain rights of individuals and of classes were limited and defined. I have looked, however, in vain for any definition of rights in the social teachings of our new prophetism and evangelism.

3. More striking is the agreement, and also the contrast, between the rule which St. Francis made the foundation of his order, and the rule which the revivalist who came lately to New Haven laid down for the good people of this city to follow, without much regard to their economic professors. St. Francis took portions of the Sermon on the Mount and other sayings of Jesus, and laid them down literally as the rule for himself and his followers. He espoused poverty as his bride. He gave up all that he had, and enjoyed Christian perfection through poverty. He had his disciples work, but they received no wages and ate at a common table.

Somewhat similarly Professor Herron declares, and the revivalist of the new propaganda echoes the word after him, that the "Sermon on the Mount is a science of society, a treatise on political economy"; that "the moral right to ownership does not extend beyond the philanthropy of property"; that "the mutualism of property, democracy in its production and distribution, is the logic of any Christian doctrine of property;" that "the wages system is economic slavery," etc. Similarly Mr. Mills preaches that the Christian has no money of his own, that he must give to every one that asks, telling him that it is Jesus' money, and so on; that the precepts of the Sermon on the Mount are to be taken quite literally and obeyed.

There is one difference, however, amid this similarity between the primitive rule of the Franciscan order and our new social rule—St. Francis proceeded at once with charming simplicity to put his rule into practice. He gave away all that he had, including his clothes. He espoused poverty as his bride and remained true to her till his death. But our teachers of the rule of the gospel very properly do not carry the logic of their literalism to the extreme of an impracticable poverty, which even the Franciscans found in their time they could not long maintain. They will admit the necessary modification of existing conditions of existence before the perfect democracy of property can be ushered in.

Possibly it may some day occur to these ardent advocates of literal compliance with the gospel rule of giving, and of resisting not evil, that our Lord himself never announced his beatitudes as a science of society, nor preached a political economy; and, indeed, in several striking instances of his conduct he did not follow the letter that killeth of his own precepts, but used them, as he taught his disciples to use them, as words which are spirit and life.

Still another curious resemblance between St. Francis and this recent evangelistic teaching of social ethics might be noted in the views of both concerning the Turks. St. Francis twice attempted to reach the Turks, in the conviction that they would flock to him in great multitudes so soon as they should hear the perfection of poverty properly preached. Our evangelist, when recently in New Haven, said that the only way to reach the Turk was to love him, and, if he destroyed our charities, to send him more ships loaded with charity. St. Francis thought of following the crusaders; and, after the knights of Spain had driven the Turks out, St. Francis proposed to complete the victory of war by a victory of peace, and so started for Morocco. But our evangelism of love proposes to dispense with all warships and to give to charity the task of governing the nations. So New Haven, which has a soldiers' monument overlooking its quiet homes, was taught as a part of the ethics of the new evangelism that there never has been and never can be a righteous war.

Other points of resemblance and contrast between the old and the new Franciscan rule might be mentioned, but enough have been cited to show that the new social gospel of our latest school of revivalism is not altogether novel, however startling to preconceived Christian ideas it may seem to be.

My object has been to point out some of its interesting social phases rather than to judge it, or even to reason about its ethics or its economics. But in view of the unsettled state of many minds with regard to social questions, and also in view of the peril of increasing rather than diminishing unfortunate separations between the churches and the working classes by social teachings which are not well considered and true alike to the laws of creation and of redemption, some serious reflections may be suggested to ministers and churches by the teachings of this new school of social prophets and evangelists.

One question is this: Is it well to combine any socialistic propagandism with endeavors to awaken a revival of religion in the churches? Another question relates to the course of study and training which men should pass through in order to become competent popular teachers of Christian social ethics. And a still larger question is, whether we are to keep on in our accustomed work in our churches, seeking to reform abuses and to pervade with a more Christlike spirit the existing relations of men in their business and politics, or whether we ought to give heed to this new evangelism, to welcome its prophet to our pulpits, and boldly to fling out the flag under which the existing social order is to be attacked as itself anti-Christian.

Possibly, however, some study of Christian ethics, especially in relation to the self-regarding virtues, and to the obligation of realizing the highest good, at least to some extent, in the appointments of the individual life, together with a little study of economics, may lead us to hesitate before we let loose this social evangelism, or put ourselves under the yoke of this new Franciscan rule.

The Christian Life.

III. Prayer.

By Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins, Jr.

If God is our Father then there must be communication between him and us. The vision of Jacob's ladder, with angels ascending and descending, is but an expression of the human seeking the divine and the divine seeking the human. We seek God because we are conscious that he is our Father and we wish to know him. God seeks us because he loves us and longs to help us. The most striking feature in Sargent's wonderful paintings in the Boston Library is that of the Hebrews appealing with crying and tears to the Almighty for help, while from the ineffable glory in which his person is hidden comes forth the great hand to save. So prayer is not the endeavor to wrest from a heartless monarch the necessities of life, but it is rather the coming together of the Father and his children, a mutual seeking.

Prayer is friendship between the divine and the human. How do I deal with my friend? Suppose there is some person of whom I have heard much and whom I long to know. What steps do I take that I may know him? First of all, I am always interested to listen when his name is spoken. I read and hear all I can about him. I try to read something he has written or to see something he has done. By and by I meet him, I look up into his face, I hear his voice, he takes my hand. And as I grow more and more into this sweet intimacy the delight is just to be with him, to commune with him, to hear his experiences and opinions and tell him mine. So exactly is it with our relationship to God. We wish to come as near to him as possible, to hear of him, to read of him, to look into his face, to hear his voice and feel his peace rest upon us.

At once we must see how that banishes the old idea of prayer. "Asking God for what we want"—that was our childhood's definition of prayer. As if God were simply a great supply station, a bank, a power to be drawn upon in necessity! And it is undoubtedly that conception which lies at the root of much of our poor religion and even of our atheism. What a lowering of God! What would I think of my child if he simply came to me when he wished for something, and loved me for what he could get out of me—back of all his words and smiles and caresses a plea for some gift? Would he not be false in his show of affection, and so kill absolutely any love between us? It is my pleasure to give. Love, as Robertson so grandly defines it, is the desire to give and the desire to bless. But love which is based upon the giving and receiving of temporal or even spiritual advantages cannot endure. There must be something deeper. There must be that joy in companionship, that delight in seeing and hearing, which forgets needs and demands. "Now let me die," cried the dear old patriarch Jacob to Joseph his son; "now let me die, since I have seen thy face." What I can get is of small consequence.

> To be near thee, to be near thee
> Alone is life for me.

Must not the lover's cry be the real cry after all, if our relation to God is to be true?

How, then, can we commune with God or pray to him? First, surely, by adoration. How full the Bible is of praise! How full our hearts are of adoration! We stand before the sunset clouds and cry, "How beautiful!" The snow-capped mountain, the vast rolling blue of the ocean, the myriad stars, gleaming long-coming messages from far distant worlds—before them all we stand in admiration, almost forced into silence. We cannot speak. The joy is almost akin to pain.

> I sometimes hold it half a sin
> To put in words the grief I feel;
> For words, like Nature, half reveal
> And half conceal the soul within.

So Jesus must have prayed, in silent adoration, as he passed countless nights on Olivet's brow or on Galilee's wave. "Not words, but breathless praise." Ah, how God must love it! I am glad to give my precious boy all he asks for if I can. And when, after my absence, he comes running and cries, "What have you got for me, papa?" the pockets are willingly emptied. But there is a deeper longing in my heart, which is only met when sometimes, without asking me for anything, the dear little arms are thrown around my neck and the little lips whisper, "O, papa, I does love you!"

Is not the human at its best an index of the divine? And must not the great heart of God often wait in divine hunger (ah, what hunger that must be!) to hear us say, not "give me," or "forgive me," but just "O, Father, I do love thee!"

Yes, we do not adore our perfect Father enough, and so our prayers rebound in cold selfishness and we are not bettered by them. Yet we are taught in the Lord's Prayer to adore first. Not a petition is found till the middle of the prayer, only adoration, longing, meditation. "Hallowed be thy name! O, for the coming of thy kingdom! O, for such union of will and service as the angels know!" We cannot speak sometimes. We are weary and we can only gaze, as the artist pictures the Pilgrims gazing on the ocean which separates them from the old land. Like Christ, we can only sigh, but the sigh is adoration, a resting in his great arms, where it is so good to be.

> And I smiled to think God's goodness
> Flowed around our incompleteness,
> 'Round our restlessness his rest.

So praise brings God nearer to us and makes us stronger, though we ask for nothing. It is himself we want, for we often need God more than anything God has. Better far for us to ask nothing, but just to rest there and look at our Father!

2. Then we commune with God by meditation or contemplation. Close the eyes and think of him. Do not we often think so of our dear ones? At the twilight hour I sit alone in the absence of wife or child, and how run my thoughts? Instinctively upon the characteristics of the dear ones. I recall my wife's carefulness, her thoughtfulness, her long, patient faithfulness through all the years. I think of my child's affection, his quick thought and ready wit. They become real to me through their attributes.

Need it be otherwise with God? Sit or kneel and with closed eyes think. "How infinite God is! From everlasting to everlasting! Never a time when he was not! How strong God is! He can do everything. The little sparrow nestles amidst the leaves, hidden by his hand, and the same hand shakes the mountains. How loving thou art, O God! Nothing can separate us from thee, not even sin, save as it clouds our eyes so that we cannot see. Every little insect, every little flower is dear in thy sight; how much more man! And thou art everywhere. 'Above, below, around me and within,' for thou livest in my heart. How all-knowing thou art, dear God! Nothing in past or future hidden from thee, and yet thou dost calmly wait and work till the right time comes for each deed of mercy or storm of rebuke. Thou lookest into eternity and knowest; thou lookest into my poor heart and knowest." Could any prayer be nobler and more life-giving? O why do we linger over long petitions and minute supplications, when we might so calmly rest our littleness and ignorance and sinfulness in his omnipotence, omniscience and eternal purity! From such hiding we come out like Moses as he descended from Sinai, with face aglow!

3. And then it is time for confession. Now let the tired, sad heart flood out its trouble before a God so ready to hear. Tell him everything, for overburdened nature needs relief. Be fearlessly frank. It is well to take some order in this confession. Tell of the sins of the thoughts, then of the affections, then of the tongue. Confess how the family life, the business life, the social life have all failed to reach a pure standard. Take the commandments and note how you have broken them, one after the other. There is enough to make the heart speedily sick in such confession.

Yet—and here is the truth never to be forgotten, the Christian truth—remember that you are telling your errors to a loving Father, whose forgiveness is absolute. "I believe in the forgiveness of sins," we say in our creed, and that means not final forgiveness only, so that we can enter heaven, but forgiveness here and now. We rise from our knees forgiven; sins and their stains all gone, behind his back, buried in the sea, so that we have no right to think of them any more, for we are "as white as snow." Yes, we are bathed once but we must wash frequently to clear away the daily stains (see St. John 13: 10, revised translation). Each night we may lie down to our rest as little children, pure and holy. To keep cleansed, never to let the errors accumulate unforgiven, that is the Christian's part.

4. And finally, there must be intercession. We must pray for others, else our prayer is not real. For how can we come to God and forget his world, our fellows, our common humanity? He who so separates himself is an infidel, and worse. If the Lord's Prayer says our and us, so must we. And the comfort of it all! Here we can speak the dear name of husband or wife, brother or sister, child or friend, and know that we are heard. Here we can bring our pupils, our servants, our parishioners, our rulers, one by one, as the mothers of old brought their children, as Monica brought Augustine, and they are blessed. So is our prayer made the human expression of divine love, for as God cares for all, so must we.

We have not spoken of family prayer and grace at meals, or of that dear union when parent and child kneel side by side. Ah, the subject is so rich, so inexhaustible! Adoration, contemplation, confession, intercession—these are the parts of our communion with God. If we use them sincerely we rise from our knees to meet the responsibilities of life, strong and full of courage.

Then on Thy grandeur I will lay me down;
Already life is heaven for me;
No cradled child more softly lies than I—
Come soon, eternity!

RETRENCHMENT AS THE MISSIONARIES VIEW IT.

Here is a representative group of the letters which are being received at the rooms of the American Board and which represent the feelings of the most sagacious and consecrated of the workers on the field.

THE WORK OF YEARS SWEPT AWAY.

Through a period of thirteen years the Ahmednagar High School in the Marathi District, India, has been developing into a powerful evangelistic agency. Rev. James Smith, who has put the best energies of a consecrated manhood into this school, writes:

"Without increasing a debt the school must be closed before the hot season vacation. I have never yet run into debt, and, in this case, the Board has thrown the consequences upon the churches. I see my work for all these years swept away at a breath. Instead of enlargements I had planned for there is collapse. This school, too, is by far the most important educational work we have and in the center of our Christian community. It ought to be supported, but it is clear that it cannot be, and it ill becomes me to murmur amidst the general distress. I can rejoice in the past and think of what has been done without mourning intemperately over what might have been."

REDUCTION IS AN IMPOSSIBILITY.

Faith in God, as well as self-sacrifice, are characteristics of our missionaries well known to all who are intelligent concerning their lives and work. It is no surprise to receive such words as the following from Rev. J. E. Abbott of Byculla, Bombay:

"For a long time we have been hoping against hope that the churches would give us word to advance, to open up new fields, to enter open doors, but again your message is that we must reduce. Long ago we reached the bottom of our ability to reduce, and we have all, more or less, been carrying the financial burdens of our work trusting in God to supply what the Board could not give us. This year will probably be no exception. Reduction is an impossibility, nor can we accept your word as the voice of God telling us to do less for the advancement of his kingdom. I think I state the position of every one when I say that though you have cut our salaries ten per cent. and our work over forty per cent., every institution will go on as before and every preacher and teacher be found at his post. God surely does not ask us to pull down and destroy the work that it has required years to build up, at least we cannot believe it until a louder call comes to us than has come."

WHAT SHALL WE DO?

Is the cry of Rev. Robert Hume, D. D., of Ahmednagar, India. After referrring to the fifty-two persons whom he alone received into the church on confession of faith in 1895, and to others received in the city and surrounding villages, he reveals the fact that most of the missionaries personally support agents (evangelists, colporters, etc.) to further their work, they thus supplementing from their own salaries the Board's appropriations:

"So, as a matter of fact, the appropriations do not suffice for even one-half of the work which we have been carrying on lately. Now the question comes with great urgency, What shall we do? For myself, for the present, I mean to drop a few of the boys from some schools, perhaps drop one or two agents, practice the strictest economy, and wait to see what relief is coming before going further.

"On the day on which the news of the reductions came my daily text was, 'My God shall supply all your need, according to the riches of his glory, through Christ Jesus.' That is a faithful saying and I believe it will be made true for us."

From the Madura district in Southern India comes a brief exclamation from Rev. J. S. Chandler, brief because words fail him:

"What can I say about the decision of the committee? It is the most distressing reduction made upon general work of all the reductions I have ever known. That is a statement easily forgotten by the churches, and more detailed statements, not so easily forgotten, will come to you from all sides, but that is all I have the heart to say now."

WHY MUST IT BE?

Rev. Lyman Bartlett is now in this country, having left his home and work in Smyrna, Turkey, a few days after the news of the reduction had been received. He has not yet learned how his co-laborers in Turkey received the blow, but himself writes from Springfield, Mass.:

"I need not say that we were alarmed and distressed at this new warning. We have learned to expect an annual cut-down, but we were not prepared for such a blow as this. We have learned that our work can only be continued by careful economy, but we did not expect an order for economy that actually starves.

"The simple fact is this that if the retrenchment ordered—the reduction of fifty per cent. on our estimates for 1896, after deducting missionary salaries and W. B. M. work—is to be carried out, it sweeps away every out-station of the Smyrna field, except perhaps the work of the Greek Alliance in Magnesia, and leaves only a part of the estimates for the Armenian portion in Smyrna itself. Now are the churches prepared to order such a retrenchment? for to withhold the funds is to order the blow. That it is ruinous to the work they helped us to establish need not be said. That it is discouraging to the people beyond the power of words to express, that it is cruel and unjust to the faithful laborers who have given their lives to the work nobody will question, and that it is a shameful confession of weakness in the face of the enemy who will exult at our defeat everybody knows.

"But must it be? Why must it be? I see costly churches, costly furnishings, costly music, palatial homes, money without stint expended for dress, for education, for entertainments, for travel, for everything, while the mission boards are burdened with debt and the bread of life must be withheld from multitudes of souls as precious as their own. Poor Armenians! In danger of extermination by the Turks, ignored by the "powers that be," forsaken by the Christian churches, my heart aches for them, and how shall I even face my Christian brethren and sisters again if we are obliged to carry out this cruel order of the churches? Must all this work be dropped and the preachers dismissed? We cannot entertain the thought for a moment. Who is willing to take the responsibility?

"May the 'Lord of the harvest' quicken the hearts of his children to render unto him that which is his own but committed to them as his stewards, and that without delay before it shall be too late."

CURRENT THOUGHT.

AT HOME.

Rev. C. H. Parkhurst, D.D., writing in the Ladies Home Journal (March) on the necessity of cultivating our physical powers if we are to do our complete work with mind and soul, says: "I should be sorry to have this interpreted as an approval of all or nearly all of what passes under the name of college athletics. It is one thing to train the body for the sake of the man, and it is another thing to train the body for the sake of the body. I regret that there is so much tendency among college authorities to shape the physical curriculum to the end of producing physical experts—football, baseball, rowing-match professionals. That kind of thing is a craze at present, and it is a pity that among our college presidents and professors so many have so far succumbed to the mania as to be willing to indorse it as a form of advertisement and as a drawing card."

The Union Signal admits that, "if the entire drink traffic were abolished tomorrow, the W. C. T. U. would not be left without an occupation."

Rev. Dr. T. L. Cuyler, in The Evangelist, says: "Endless discussion is going on about 'license, high or low,' 'prohibition,' 'limiting the number of saloons,' etc., and yet, all the time, the amount of liquor drinking is fearfully on the increase. . . . Parents, Sunday school teachers and pastors have got to learn that prevention is about as big a word as 'prohibition.' . . . 'Pshaw!' says some flippant scoffer, 'that means moral suasion.' Yes, my friend, it does, and Jesus Christ meant moral suasion when he came into this world to teach us how to live."

ABROAD.

In Vol. II. of Purcell's Life of Cardinal Manning a letter to him from Dr. James H. Rigg, the pope of the British Wesleyans, is published, in which Dr. Rigg refers to Hugh Price Hughes as a "Methodist firebrand," to Percy W. Bunting, editor of The Contemporary Review, as a "dangerous latitudinarian," and those Wesleyans who follow Gladstone are described as given over to "almost everything that is unscrupulous, latitudinarian and secularist." But, most surprising of all, the Wesleyan leader expressed his agreement with Cardinal Manning's tract, Fifty Reasons Why the Voluntary Schools of England Ought to Share the School Rates, and hoped that the cardinal would get the tract "well before the general Christian public of educationists and into the minds of statesman-like and far-sighted men generally." The Methodist Times calls the attention of Wesleyans to this remarkable letter of Dr. Rigg's, and asks whether it is prudent for Dr. Rigg to continue longer as responsible head of the Wesleyan education department at a time when the education question is once more upon Dissenters and they are face to face with aggressive clericals, and adds: "If, after this extremely opportune disclosure, the Methodist people allow themselves to be misrepresented or misled it will be their own fault." The Methodist Times is edited by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, and he is paying off old scores against Dr. Rigg now.

Dr. J. G. Rogers, in The Independent, says he believes that Mr. Chamberlain is still loyal to his Nonconformist principles, and hopes that time will reveal him as more devoted to them than to Lord Salisbury or the Tories. He is sure that the education question must occupy a very prominent place in the immediate future, and as the Irish have avowed their determination to put their church before everything else, "Nonconformists will pay them the most graceful of all compliments by imitating their example."

To judge religion we must have it—not stare at it from the bottom of a seemingly interminable ladder.—George MacDonald.

THE BLEAK O' THE YEAR.

There is a time of subtle browns and grays
That run to silverings and tremulous greens,
And russet tints and ash-pale pools of leaves;
Of ghostly mosses and elusive grass
That's neither lush nor dead; of naked trees
Ineffably harmonious with the sky
That stretches vast and neutral, tone on tone,
Not to be called a color, but a thought.
To some this is a barren time, a sleep
Between the winter and the spell of spring;
To me it is the heart's own time and tide,
Being hidden from the heedless eye that lusts
For flaring lights and sunset dyes, yet charged
With secrets rare, and blendings into dreams,
And ecstasies divine that shadow forth
A mystery, the Selah of the soul.

—Richard Burton.

Inasmuch as the organization of the modern church provides for about twice as many women's societies as there are days in the week, some form of consolidation has become a necessity. The Minneapolis ladies seem to have solved the problem in a most successful way, and a similar plan exists in several New England churches. At the Old South in Boston, for instance, there is a Woman's Hour every Wednesday, from eleven to twelve, when various phases of missionary work are considered and once a month there is a Bible reading. So a stranger in the city is sure to find something which will enrich her Christian life or add to her knowledge of the progress of the Master's kingdom at this place every Wednesday. Any who are still struggling along the old path of separate societies will find Mrs. Rich's article in this department full of suggestiveness.

The man who, when asked if he was acquainted with a certain woman, replied that he had a listening acquaintance, expressed what many of us often feel. There are people who talk well, perhaps brilliantly, and who are so fond of talking that they forget to give any one else a chance. The thought of selfishness never occurs to them, for they consider that they are doing society a service in keeping the ball of conversation rolling. They forget that conversation implies an exchange of ideas, and that sincere interest in others would make a monologue impossible. The ability to draw out the best thoughts of those whom we meet, a pleased attention, an evident interest in them as individuals—these are the things worth striving for. In studying the life of Christ we cannot fail to be impressed by his loving sympathy with people of all classes. Although he knew their thoughts, yet he encouraged them to speak, and was ever ready to listen.

Some of the best results nowadays in the line of self culture may be found among the residents of country towns. They may not organize into theosophical societies or Browning clubs, but in a quiet way they accomplish an amount of solid reading in the course of a year which would astonish their cosmopolitan brothers and sisters. We know of one small parish where the pastor has read, with a class of young people, Kidd's Social Evolution, Tylor's Anthropology and other books of that grade. With the distractions incident to city life would a city pastor venture any such undertaking with hope of success? What the country lacks in the way of libraries and lectures is offset by the advantages of greater leisure and better opportunity for continuous study. In our own experience with the wage-earning classes, both men and women, we have found a more intelligent acquaintance with Shakespeare and other standard writers among the boys and girls who come from country homes than those of city birth and breeding. The latter are usually familiar with a greater number of topics, but are less thorough. They read more, perhaps, but think less.

A CHURCH WOMAN'S UNION.

BY ALICE HAMILTON RICH.

It is a serious question how to divide the twelve hours of a woman's day to accomplish best results for the home, church, philanthropy and social life. With God, our Father, supreme as Ruler of life and action, the spirit of the Master as example of service and the Holy Spirit as revealer of duty, we yet are so human that we sometimes stand betwixt not two ways only, but in a tangle of ways, puzzled which way to go and just what to do, believing that > Life saved for self is lost, while they

> Who lose it in His service hold
> The lease of God's eternal day;

and that

> Not what we give, but what we share,
> The gift without the giver is bare.
> Who giveth himself with his alms feeds three,
> Himself, the hungry beggar and me.

Yet how to divide ourselves, our time, our benefactions, still remains a problem which must be solved by each for himself or herself.

The women of the First Church of Minneapolis have evolved a plan, after much thought and some three years' experience, which is proving practical. At the time of its inception it was felt that some concerted action, by which all the women, young, middle-aged and elderly, might meet with common interest and advantage, was desirable. A Woman's Hour was instituted for each Friday afternoon at three o'clock in the church parlors. The first afternoon of each month was a missionary meeting, the home and foreign alternating. These meetings, as they occurred but once a month, were made the most interesting and resultful possible. The other Fridays were provided with literary programs, in which the needs of the home and the work of philanthropy predominated.

I extract from one of the programs, which was printed upon a folded card in an attractive form: Jan. 4, Japan and Korea; 11, Home and the Bible; 18, Evenings with the Children at Home; 25, A Child's First Year in School, by the primary superintendent of the public schools, Miss Sarah L. Arnold (the teachers of the adjacent schools were invited to hear this address and to meet the mothers of their pupils in the reception that followed); Feb. 8, Women's Clubs; 22, The Importance of Women being Informed on National Topics, Prof. Maria A. Sanford of the university; March 15, Our Children's Reading; May 17, Living Rulers of the World; and the series ended with an afternoon on Philanthropists of the Present Day. Last year the meetings were of such interest they were continuous through the year, even the warm afternoons of summer having a good attendance, but at a later hour of the day. The topics not given were equally good. I have mentioned two persons taking part as suggestive where representative women may be obtained as leaders of special topics. Most of the topics were led by women of the church, and always followed by discussion.

This year our women seemed ready for advance along the line of union. Taking for our model the local federation of societies known as the Woman's Council of the City, a Church Union was formed. At the head of the union we have a president and secretary, the presidents of the various societies joining being vice-presidents and members of the executive board. We now have what we call our Church Day, taking the place of our Woman's Hour. All societies belonging to the union have their meetings on that day. Once each month we have a general meeting of the Woman's Union, at which time reports are received from all branches of the organization. Occasionally we have all day meetings of the union, the benevolent society providing work, a committee a simple noon luncheon, and some branch of the union the literary entertainment of the afternoon. Our usual meetings are at the church parlors. As variety we have an occasional thimble bee at some one of our homes, always on the Church Day, which with us is Tuesday.

Belonging to this union are the following church societies: Home and Foreign Missionary Society, Benevolent Society, Young Ladies' Union and the original Woman's Hour Literary Society. I will give an extract from our present program, which is attractively printed and generously distributed: Oct. 1, Foreign Missions: India; 8, Thimble Bee; 22, Sewing, 10 A. M., Woman s Union at 3 o'clock, P. M., subject: An Hour with the Coterie, which is a prominent literary society not confined to any church; Nov. 26, Character Forming, the Aim in Education (this was given by a prominent educator, and was followed by conversation); Jan. 7, Home Missions, A. M. A.; Jan. 21, Thimble Bee, with subject, New Movements in Philanthropy.

There are several afternoons that have been assigned to literary societies, who bring their best speakers and give us representative sessions of their meetings. Twice during the year we have a luncheon at 6 P. M., inviting the gentlemen, and providing a lecture for the evening. These lectures are by the president and professors of the University of Minnesota, the luncheons in all cases being provided by committees, the same committee being asked to serve but once. What we most hoped to do we are gradually accomplishing by bringing our younger women into more intimate relation with the senior societies, and by permitting each society to understand more fully the work of the others. Important matters of mutual interest are brought before the monthly meeting of the union for discussion and decision. If immediate action is required, a special meeting of the executive board is called, and its decision, because executive, is authoritative, from which no loyal member of any society has right to dissent, as a representative is, or ought to be, present at this board meeting. There is room for improvement in our Woman's Union. There are croakers with us who either sigh for the good old times, or suggest impractical measures, but on the whole we feel we are advancing in the right direction and conserving in this union our force and strength, physical, mental and spiritual. With open eyes and willing hearts we stand ready to accept light from any source which presents a better system or improvements upon our present one.

The Old Doll's Story.

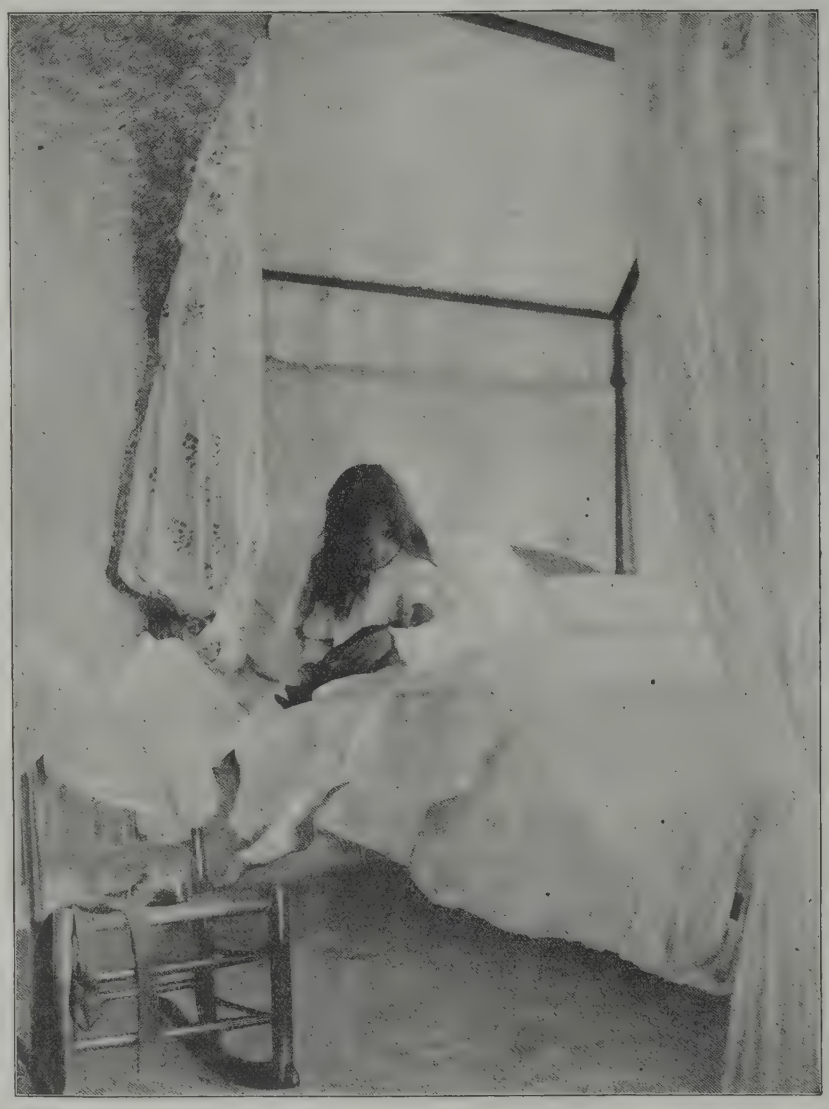
By Ruth Huntington Sessions.

YES, I am an old doll, but do you know any new dolls that have redder cheeks or blacker eyes? Yet it was a hundred years ago that I was finished and dressed and sent in a box to my first little mother.

This is the same dress that I wore then—light green calico ground, you see, with a figure which is a cross between a cloverleaf and a pansy, in dark green and yellow, and little, black, peppery dots sprinkled here and there all over it. Then my head is cloth and can't possibly break, and my hair, being painted on, will never grow gray or drop out, which is an immense advantage when you are a century old.



You should have seen little Lucy Porter's face when she first looked at me! She had wanted a doll more than anything else in the whole world, and she had never had any pet but a wild kitten which lived in the barn and was dreadfully hard to catch. Lucy was a sedate young mother, with a small, serious face, dark eyes and close-cropped, brown hair which wanted to curl. But Lucy's papa was a stern old gentleman who did not approve of curls, and the ringlets as soon as they appeared used to be snipped away with a long pair of scissors by Madam Porter, who was Lucy's mamma.

My little mother wore very plain clothes—not a bit like what girls have in these days. In winter she wore a dress of bombazette or Scotch plaid, made with a good, stout, plain waist and skirt—no trimmings, no ruffles and no pretty things over the shoulders. Outside the dress she wore a gingham "tyer," or apron—very straight and long and homely. Her woolen stockings she knit herself, sitting up on winter evenings in a straight-backed chair to do just so much before she went to bed. When summertime came she wore her thick leather shoes without the stockings. It was a great relief to have the snow go, for O, the winter chilblains! In those days there were no such things as rubbers, and the leather boots, though the children all greased them from a great skillet of fat in the woodshed, used to get soaked with slush and frozen. Then there would be such burning and aching in the children's toes as seemed really dreadful to me with my nice cotton feet.

I used to think Lucy quite pretty, when she went off on Sundays to meeting in the old white meeting house at the foot of the mountain, her sober face peeping out from under a white cape-bonnet with a blue ribbon round it. Papa Porter never allowed dolls to be touched on Sundays and I used to lie all day in my wooden crib with a tiny, patchwork quilt over me. I have always felt sorry that I hadn't real fingers instead of just divisions stitched along the ends of my arms, for I might have learned to sew nicely just from watching Lucy. Every afternoon she and her sisters had their sewing lesson, and how carefully they were taught! Every stitch had to be taken by the threads, and there were long, long seams to be sewed up, sheets to be turned and dish towels to be hemmed and patchwork to sew for quilts to go on the children's own beds.

When the sewing time was over came playtime. There was the cunningest corner behind the garden hedge where we all played tea-party. Our set of dishes was real willow-ware china, blue and white, and the little sisters were so careful that hardly one of them was broken in my day. If the girls had not been careful I'm afraid the dishes would have been put away in the cupboard of the great south parlor, which smelt of castor beans and sandalwood and held things that couldn't be played with. I remember that cupboard well, for at last both dishes and I came to it when the girls grew too old for us. That was when they began to be tall and grown up, and went off on visits to Boston in a chaise or a stage-coach and came back with new gowns and great tales, welcomed by everybody. Lucy was the favorite of her brothers. She was devoted to them, helped them with their lessons, got them good naturedly out of their scrapes, mended their stockings and listened to all their confidences. They were greatly relieved when they found that the young minister who came two or three times to take tea one spring was going to carry off Dorothy instead of their beloved Lucy.

The next year after Dorothy went away with the minister Sally married a fine young lawyer in Boston. Lucy loved the home life and the boys best and she stayed on at the old place, always bright and happy, even after Major and Madam Porter were dead. Then Robert became a professor in a college, William married and the other two brothers settled down into quiet, unsociable old men. Through the long days of winter Lucy wrote her journal and letters and lived in her books—the little leather-covered volumes of Shakespeare and the poets and old fashioned novels like Evelina and The Children of the Abbey. I staid in the sideboard during almost sixty of these uneventful years, only brought out now and then for children who came to visit us. There were Dorothy's and Sally's children first and then their grandchildren. The house was stiller than ever after they went away, but Miss Lucy never seemed lonely. Finally, when she was eighty years old, she went out of the great front door, one autumn, for the last time, and was laid to rest beside her father and mother in a little graveyard bright with goldenrod and scarlet maples.

Then they shut up the old house and I was taken to the attic, cradle and all, and packed in a great haircloth trunk. How long I lay there I'm sure I don't know. At last, after many years and months, a most exciting thing happened. There began to be sounds of new life in the house, as if people had come to live in it again—scrapings and knockings, opening of windows and footsteps on the stairways. One warm summer night two ladies came right up to the trunk I was in.

"Where did Cousin Mary say it was?" asked one.

"I think she told me they left it in a black trunk in the west garret," the other replied.

"You see," said the first, "Lucy always has a doll to go to bed with, and her Rosy is so soaked through after being out on the grass in that shower that I had to think of something to take its place. If I can only find that dear old doll we used to play with—O, yes, here we are, cradle, doll and all."

She had thrown the trunk-lid back and her motherly face was looking down on me.

"O, what a funny old doll!" exclaimed the other lady. "Did you ever see anything so frugal or so prim? Won't Lucy be horrified at the idea of having her after that beautiful Rosy?"

"You don't know Lucy," was the answer. "She's a born mother. You wait and see."

So down stairs we went, I in great excitement, for I half believed I had been in a long dream and had waked up to find my precious little first Lucy again. It seemed so when we went into her own old room where the furniture looked just as it had the day she left it. But I knew in a moment some one else belonged there now, for over the back of her sewing-chair lay a pile of the daintiest, prettiest child's clothes, with fine embroidery and ruffles on them such as good Madam Porter would have considered terribly frivolous. Sitting on the edge of Miss Lucy's own big, canopied bed, in a white nightgown, with her bare feet hanging down and a rosy sunset light all about her, was the sweetest little girl, with blue eyes and long brown curls and a smile that was so exactly like my own old Lucy's that I couldn't take my eyes off her.

She no sooner saw me than out went two arms so eagerly that I felt myself thrill with pride, and I was carried right back to the day when I took the wild kitten's place in my first Lucy's heart. The blue eyes looked down on me while she said, "You dear dolly, I won't let them shut you all up again."

After that we said our prayers together with her mother and climbed up among the white pillows, and there was a good deal of good-night kissing. That astonished me very much as I remembered how few caresses there used to be in the Porter family. At last we were left alone, Lucy and I, her soft cheek resting against the top of my head, while I lay clasped in her loving arms. Presently some one stole into the room, and I was torn ruthlessly away from my soft resting place.

"She really must be put back again," said the apologetic voice of Lucy's mamma to some one in the background. "She doesn't belong to us, and Lucy would be sure to want to keep her if she were left here till morning."

Alas! I was carried up those garret stairs again and laid back in the old hair trunk. Down went the lid, and, once more in the dark, all that was left me was a lovely, mixed-up dream of dark curls and silver moonbeams. Now here I am in a doll show! It is for the benefit of some crippled children. I suppose I ought to be glad to help them, but it is very different from past days!

Ladies come by and look at me and read the label, "Doll, 100 years old," and say, "O, how queer!" The children laugh and hurry on to a beautiful doll which the President's wife dressed, they say. She is a tall creature and may be very grand, but she has no history at all and no experience of life except the fitting of her gorgeous gowns. I would not change places with her. I only ask to lie here, quietly, while I watch and wait to see again that dear child in whose arms I went to sleep last summer. If you see a little girl with a big French doll named Rosy, won't you please ask her to step this way?

CHILD BALLAD.

Jesus, he loves one and all,
Jesus, he loves children small.
Their souls are waiting round his feet,
On high, before his mercy seat.

While he wandered here below,
Children small to him did go.
At his feet they knelt and prayed,
On their heads his hands he laid.

Came a Spirit on them then,
Better than of mighty men,
A Spirit faithful, pure and mild,
A Spirit fit for king and child.

O! that Spirit give to me,
Jesu, Lord, where'er I be.

—Charles Kingsley.

Blessed is the hand that prepares a pleasure for a child, for there is no saying when and where it may bloom forth.—Jerrold.

Closet and Altar

If thou canst for a while cease from thine own speaking and willing thou shalt hear unspeakable words from God.

Many a man is conscious of the beauty of the world, to whom the beauty of holiness makes no appeal. But to those who have lived with Christ and seen the flowers of the field and the birds of the air and the purity of the snow through his eyes, the beauty of the earth is the suggestion always of that higher purity and loveliness which he first showed in human life, and toward which all our better impulses strive upward as the strength of the seedling in the forest strives toward the free air of the heaven. "Lord, open thou our eyes!" is the real prayer of study. "Lord, open thou the eyes of our spirits, that we may see the beauty of thy perfect life," ought to be the petition of our times of meditation and communion.

O Jesus, why should I complain?
And why fear aught but sin?
Distractions are but outward things;
Thy peace dwells far within!

These surface troubles come and go
Like rufflings of the sea;
The deeper depth is out of reach
To all, my God, but thee!

—F. W. Faber.

Lord, let me in, that I may see thee. I have been trying too long to judge thee from the outside; let me in. I have asked my soul where is the sign of thy power. I have asked what good there is in being good. I have asked what advantage the righteous have over the wicked. I have forgotten that the advantage can only be seen inside the door. I have forgotten that the poet may be threadbare and yet joyous, that the painter may be penniless and yet exultant. I have forgotten that the reward of art is beauty, that the reward of loving is being loved, that the reward of holiness is strength in temptation. I shall see thy power within thy holy place; in thy light shall I see light. Lord, Lord, open unto me. Give me a view from within. Let me look at the outer grounds from the window of thy dwelling. Let me gaze on thy world from where thou thyself art standing. And I know that the prospect shall be changed, the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain, and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed.—George Matheson.

Almighty God, who canst give the light that in darkness shall make us glad, the life that in gloom shall make us joy, and the peace that amidst discord shall bring us quietness, let us live this day in that light, that life, that peace, so that we may gain the victory over those things that press us down, and over the flesh that so often encumbers us, and over death that seemeth for the moment to win the victory. Thus we, being filled with inward peace and light and life, may walk all the days of this our mortal life doing our work as the business of our Father, glorifying it because it is thy will, knowing that what thou givest thou givest in love. Bestow upon us the greatest and last blessing that we, being in thy presence, may be like unto thee forevermore. These things do we ask in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Mothers in Council.

A KINDERGARTEN FOR MOTHERS.

A few young mothers, living in a country town, wished that they themselves knew more of kindergarten theories, and finally an energetic, public-spirited mother of five said: "We must do something." As the result of her enthusiasm, a beautiful thing has been brought about. A woman who is the mother herself of several lovely children, who has studied and taught and, above all, used in her own home for years the teachings of the great philosopher Froebel, has been persuaded to come to our town once a week and talk to us for an hour or so and allow us to talk with her about this interesting subject. From the half-dozen young mothers the class grew to fifty or more. There are teachers in the primary schools and even the superintendent himself, the minister and his wife, women who are mothers only at heart, two grandmas and a young man who is studying for the ministry.

Our mother helper talked to us a few moments on the philosophy, life and teachings of Froebel. His theory is merely that the child should be permitted and encouraged to develop in its own natural way, and this simple principle should be applied to the treatment of the earliest child life. The child, like the bird and the flower, has a great deal of inherent energy, which, if it is not interfered with, either by being foolishly denied or foolishly humored, will of itself go a long way in his development. A baby, as soon as he notices anything, begins to notice the likenesses and differences of form, color, distance in the objects about him. Here is the opportunity of the mother, who has only to direct and assist this instinct of comparison and association in order to lead the child to its best development. The instinct toward activity also is a natural one and should develop itself in a natural way. Here are some of the questions which arose at this preliminary lecture:

Mother of Five: "Do you think it wise to allow a baby to tear up printed paper? Does it teach the child to be destructive of books and other objects?"

The Mother Helper: "O, no! Froebel and his followers say that what pleases all children must have something good in it. I should, however, try to teach my child to do something with the pieces—to collect them in a heap, put them in a box or, if old enough to understand, carry them to the kitchen to be used for building the fire. As early as possible I should teach the child to remove all traces of disorder as soon as he had finished playing with the paper. And I should be very particular to give the paper to the child myself, saying, 'Baby may tear this,' and always have it understood that he must ask me what may be torn. I think it helps teach the child to be careful with books, for he soon learns to make a distinction."

Some of the mothers looked relieved and some skeptical after the foregoing remarks. The next speaker was

An Anxious, Nervous Mother: "I have a boy of two years. He will take his father's books out of the bookcase in spite of punishments and offers of reward. What shall I do?"

The Mother Helper: "The child loves, probably, the feeling of power, when his strong little arms pull down the books, more than he fears punishment or desires reward. Satisfy his feeling for power in some other way. Bring into your house—it may seem a great deal of work to you, but it saves work in the end—some rather heavy pieces of boards, ends of beams and anything of which you could collect a basketful where a new house is being built. Put these in a corner and let them do their work. Probably, if the child has something on which to use his activities, the books will not so attract him. Try it, anyway, and strive to be consistent always. If a certain punishment or, I prefer to call it, consequence follows disobedience once have it follow every time. Offered rewards seldom are of use. It is a poor motive."

The Mother of Five: "But I began when my babies were very little and snapped their fingers, and have never had any more trouble about the books. Is that wrong?"

The Mother Helper: "If nothing but a sense punishment will secure obedience perhaps it was not."

The Minister: "So Froebel did believe in Solomon's old rule?"

The Mother Helper: "No, unless nothing else would do, and that is very rare."

The Superintendent of Schools: "Some of us teachers love our children from principle, some of us because we can't help it. Can we all learn to have real love for them?"

The Mother Helper: "O, yes," and her face glowed with enthusiasm; "it is quite easy. If one will only sympathize all the time it will surely be so."

A Conscientious Little Teacher: "But what shall one do in this case? I have two pupils. One does well, always, with almost no effort. The other tries, but does everything very poorly. This one thinks that I love the first one more than I do him because I commend him more often. What can I say when he eagerly asks me—showing, perhaps, a piece of work poorly done—'Is it good, teacher, is it good?'"

The Mother Helper: "Poor little fellow! Say to him, 'Yes, dear, it is good, for you tried. And I'll help you, and next time it will be even better.' As to the first one, I should be careful not to allow any one to think his work is perfect. Sympathize always with the child in the good result, but show that there is something better to be done still. And let the boy know that we ourselves never think our own work quite perfect and that we are always trying to do better. And, O, let us live our words."

And there were thoughtful mothers in our little town that night.

MORAL TUMBLES IN LITTLE CHILDREN.

Inexperienced mothers are liable to make too much of the faults of little children. Could they but realize all that the fault implies and all that it portends they would make both more and less of it. A paradox? There are many such in moral as well as natural philosophy. We will first consider the cause of the fault. If you seek carefully and prayerfully you will usually find the fault is an offshoot of some trait of character in one or other of the parents or some near or more remote relative. Therefore we must first conclude that the child is not responsible for having the characteristic. Until he stumbled and fell he did not know it himself. How shall this first moral fall be dealt with? As his first fall was or should be treated. When the little toddler first balanced himself upon his unsteady little feet and made an effort to keep that equipoise while lifting one foot and then the other, thus changing the base upon which his weight rested, and in a moment stumbled over the rug and got that unexpected bump, should he have been blamed? Should he have been punished? Should he have been called naughty? Ah, yes, I hear your outcries against such a course of treatment. So would I cry out, long and loud, against such discipline a little later when he meets his first moral impediment and falls over it. He is no more to blame for its being there than he was for the rug in his path. He did not put either of them there. He did not know that either of them was there till he had felt the bump, physical or moral. If fairly treated he will know a little better next time. You will take care to have the rug out of the way till his legs have grown a little stronger, and then show him and teach him how to overstep its edge. It will then be no hindrance, but he will delight in walking forth and back over it, thus enjoying his first conquest over surroundings and circumstances. So keep, if possible, the moral impediment called temptation out of his way till the moral legs are strong enough, and then as patiently and lovingly and sympathetically teach him how to walk over it. The power lay within him before; it is within now. It was self-control before, and it is the same only in a higher degree now. In many a case this will correct the first tendency to wrongdoing, and, like "a stitch in time," it will save nine other faults. But our inheritance of evil is too deep rooted not to sprout again and again, and, as children grow older, there must be discipline, but the same principle of sympathy must accompany it all.

The Conversation Corner.

THE last time we had our original "sign of the Corner" at the fore [Jan. 30] a "lady from the interior of Massachusetts" asked whether any Cornerer could tell her the first line of a certain Christmas poem. The "any Cornerer" has replied and filled the interior of my Drawer with letters—from little Constance P. of Winchester, a lady in Worcester, a lady in Wrentham, a lady in Reading, a lady in Wilkinsonville, a lady in Salisbury, a gentleman in Westboro, a gentleman in West Newton, a boy in Lawrence, a lady in Keene, N. H., and various others. Several give not only the first line but all the lines. They have been found in old scrap-books, taken from the Massachusetts Ploughman, the New Orleans Delta, the Advance, Demorest's Magazine, and are said to have been first printed in the National Era. Reference is made to Whittier's Child Life, but Sarah Noah's copy of that admirable poetical collection does not give the author. Frank W. of Whitinsville says Annie C. Ketchum wrote it. The young lady in the Library says that Annie Chambers was a Kentucky girl, was the wife of Leonidas Ketchum, is a public reader and lecturer, and has written other poetry and a Botany. The poem is entitled Benny, and these are the first lines:

> I had told him, Christmas morning,
> As he sat upon my knee.

Benny was amazed, when he was told to be good on Christmas morning, that his mother should put the kitten out of doors for drinking out of a cup on the table, and

> In a brave, clear key he shouted,
> Like some lordly little elf,
> "Santa Kaus, come down de chimney,
> Make my moder 'have herself!"

FROM NEW MEMBERS.

I almost wish D. F. had remained at the courthouse, for when I had a group of letters nicely arranged in alphabetical order last week, what did he do but go and "dele" the A. letters so as to fit his "make-up," as he calls it? But here they are now:

PAWTUXET, R. I.

Dear Mr. Martin: I would like to be a Cornerer. I send —— cents for Pomiuk, and hope he will soon be able to eat a whale. Pawtuxet was named by the Indians because there was a fall of water which is now tumbling down under the bridge and can be heard quite a little way off. WALTER A.

Tuk means a river (tidal or broad river); Pawtuck-et at the falls; Pawtuck-ese-et (Pawtuxet), at the little falls. So says Dr. Trumbull, the eminent Indian scholar.

The delay in printing the above brings me a letter from the other Pawtuck:

. . . The people of Pawtucket are at present inaugurating a no-license campaign. A few days ago my little boy, six years old, and I were passing a saloon where the fumes of beer and kindred odors reached all passers, and he inquired, "Papa, when we passed that saloon did you smell the license?"

Of course a Corner boy in a town named for cold water would be disgusted with anything that smelled of a grog-shop, and I hope that all the good people there will vote NO on "town-meeting day," and so protect their youth from temptation.

CAMBRIDGEPORT, MASS.

Dear Mr. Martin: I am six years old today. Can I be a Cornerer? Thank you for the letters that you send in the papers. I had a nice desk for a Christmas present. I want to know how old you are. ROBERT A.

Who can answer Robert's question?

NEW YORK CITY.

Dear Mr. Martin: I had a little pug dog. His name was Chippie. One Monday my dear, dear Chippie died. I am eight years old. I want to be a Cornerer.

CATHARINE C.

I have this for you from the poet laureate:

> Our little Kate, whose age was eight,
> Had a dear doggie friend;
> But poor Chippie, he got grippy—
> He died—and that's the end.

NORWICH, CT.

Dear Mr. Martin: May I have a Corner certificate, showing that I am a Cornerer? I will inclose —— cents for Pomiuk—it is all I have left of my spending money. I am very much interested in reading about him and hope we will hear more. Who was the first poet that ever wrote in the United States, and when was he born? MARION F.

Dear Mr. Martin: I would like to join the Conversation Corner. I am eight years old. I have the Corner read to me every Sunday.

EDNA F.

Certificates sent to these sisters. Literature class will please answer Marion's ?.

DORSET, VT.

Mr. Martin; Dear Sir: I see that all that is necessary to do is to send a stamp for certificate, that is, if we are not over one hundred years old, and I lack eighty-nine years of that. I like Mr. Martin's Corner better than any other part of the paper.

Your friend, MARGARET G.

(What will Dr. Quint and other distinguished contributors say to that?)

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.

Dear Cornerers: I will give you a question to answer. Which is the most benefit to mankind, a moss covered stone or a rolling stone?

Mr. Martin: Do you think this will be published? RAYMOND G.

I cannot tell. It depends on the "Despotic Foreman." That stone question is too hard for me. I will roll it to the Cornerers for their reflection and reply.

KENNEBUNK, ME.

Dear Mr. Martin: I am a little girl seven years old. I would like to be a Cornerer. I go to the primary school. My Sunday school class has twenty-one little girls. I was absent nine Sundays. I like to read the little letters. Good-by, HELEN L.

So do I. Good-by.

PARIS, FRANCE.

Dear Mr. Martin: I have read the Conversation Corner for a long time, but I have not written to it before. I should like very much to become a member of it, if you have room for me. My home is in Iowa, but father and mother and I are spending this year in Europe and I like it very much. I think one of the most interesting things we have seen was the church at Delfshaven, where the Pilgrim Fathers worshiped, and the pier the Speedwell sailed from to England. We shall be in England next summer and hope we can join The Congregationalist party. We enjoy The Congregationalist more than ever before now that we are so far from home. We have just received it for Jan. 9. I was so much interested in hearing more about Pomiuk. I should like his picture and inclose ——.

Your little friend, KATHARINE M.

Of course we have room for a European correspondent! Let K. write us again of any very interesting thing she sees—especially if connected with familiar history.

This brings us just half through the alphabet, with other letters from Mary C., New Bedford, Marietta E., Northampton, Katharine F., Woodbury, Ct., Frank G., Chicago, Ernest G , Methuen, Claude K., Norfolk, Ct., which would not get printed if I should copy them. Besides, it is Washington's Birthday and I can see out the window a little fellow taking his first slide down the hill in the field opposite—I must go out and slide too!

CORNER SCRAP-BOOK.

Do Dogs Reason? A gentleman tells this story of his fox terrier in the February number of the Animal World (London). He was accustomed to sleep on a hearthrug close to the kitchen fire. One morning just as he was to take his place a kettle boiled over, soaking the rug with scalding water. He walked back a few paces and considered the matter. On the fender were hanging several pairs of stockings. One of these he took, placed them on the steaming rug and himself upon them.

Do Elephants Reason? The London Spectator relates an incident which occurred in the "Zoo." A child tried to throw a biscuit to an elephant in his cage. It dropped where neither the child nor the elephant could reach it. But the latter blew it with its trunk within reach of the child, who made several other attempts, but in vain, to throw it into his great friend's mouth. The sequel was a curious one. A good-natured boy, standing by, took the biscuit from the child's hand to throw it himself, but this so displeased the elephant that he gave the fellow a severe blow on his arm!

Do Elephants Converse? A lady in New Jersey sends this story, gained from an American who saw the incident in India. A company of elephants were trying to move an unusually heavy burden. After repeated and unsuccessful attempts, a large animal, apparently the "boss" of the gang, withdrew to a distance, followed by the others. There they stood for a few minutes, with heads close together, as if in consultation. They then returned and tackled their task in an entirely different way, and with immediate success. The spectators gave them a hearty round of applause, to which the elephants responded with a waving of trunks as they trotted off.

Elephants Getting Scarce. The English Leisure Hour says that the African elephant will soon be a rarity. Ivory now comes chiefly from the Congo and is landed at Antwerp, the king of the Belgians being the head of the Congo State. Elephants are like timber, taking longer to grow than to fell. A few years ago one manufactory in Sheffield used annually enough ivory for knife handles to require the slaughter of 800 elephants.

No Scarcity of Other Animals. A paragraph in the same magazine says that in Australasia the state has such a surplus of kangaroos that it pays eight-pence a head for them—if dead. Norway does a great business in the public extermination of wild beasts, payment having been made in 1894 for 8,646 foxes, besides a little account for bears, wolves, lynxes and gluttons. One thousand eagles and 5,000 hawks were also shot at public expense, the shooter getting two krona each. (A krona is twenty-seven cents.) A fox is worth 4 k. and the large animals 20 k. On our side of the world the State of Minnesota paid a few years ago a bounty of $25,000 for wolf scalps, but a legislative investigation found that it was made a regular business in the northern part of the State to have "wolf farms" so as to collect the bounty!

Is a Clock an Animal? The little girl must have thought so, as the story is told by the Epworth Herald. "Grandfather's clock" was screwed to the wall, with its tin weights filled with sand hanging down by long chains and its long pendulum swinging slowly back and forth. The mother asked little Dot to go into the room and see if the clock was running, for she had not heard it strike all the afternoon. Dot came running back, put her curly head into the door and exclaimed: "Why, no, mamma, de clock ain't a-runnin'. It is des stannin' still and a-waggin' its tail."

LESSON FOR MARCH 15. Luke 11: 1–13.

TEACHING ABOUT PRAYER.

BY REV. A. E. DUNNING, D. D.

The request which one of the disciples made to Jesus is made too seldom. Many parents and teachers would do greater service to their pupils if they would teach prayer as Christ taught it to his disciples: first, by praying in their presence; then by putting the words of prayer into their mouths; then by illustrating it from the talk of a man with his friend, the petition of a child to his father, and the feeling and gifts of a human father as compared with those of our Heavenly Father. We need not confine ourselves to the incidents of this lesson. The gospels are rich in their revelations of what Jesus taught his disciples about prayer.

1. He taught them how to pray by his example. He seems to have taken, naturally, the attitude of prayer at suitable times when others were with him, and he was never disturbed by being discovered in that attitude. One lesson in prayer is to cultivate the habit in ordinary times and places. If you want God's company let him know it by speaking to him often. General Stonewall Jackson of the Confederate army once said to a friend, "I never raise a glass of water to my lips without a moment asking God's blessing; I never seal a letter without putting a prayer under the seal; I never take a letter from the post without a brief sending of my thoughts heavenward; I never change my classes in the lecture-room without a minute's petition on the cadets who go out and those who come in." One who knew him intimately told me that he had never known a man who lived more constantly in the presence of God.

The disciples of Jesus must have remembered that he always prayed in the crises of his life. While he stood on the threshold of his life work, at his baptism in the Jordan, he was praying as the Holy Spirit descended on him [Luke 3: 21]. Young men will be wise to follow that example. Before he appointed the twelve apostles—the beginning of organized Christianity—he spent the whole night in prayer [Luke 6: 12]. They must have connected the beginning of their life work with their Master's prayer. The Christian Church was born in that night of prayer. He prayed much, also, after as well as before exciting contact with men. Following a Sabbath in Capernaum, one of the most exhausting of his days [Mark 1: 21–35], he rose before dawn and went into the hills to pray. He found spiritual refreshment and vigor, as we may by prayer, after toil and touch with men. He gave us examples of morning and evening prayer. He prayed after successes, promising greater triumphs. When the seventy disciples came back from their mission and reported their work to him he prayed and the substance of his prayer was remembered [Luke 10: 17–24]. When the Gentiles sought an interview with him, he lifted his heart to his Father [John 12: 27, 28]. The voice from the skies was evidence that his prayer was heard. He said that the voice was not on his account, "but for your sakes." Skill in prayer is an art learned only at the feet of Christ, and power in prayer is a life.

2. Jesus taught his disciples words of prayer. These words are called "the Lord's Prayer," but there is no evidence that he ever used them himself. We have no record that he ever addressed God as our Father. God was his Father in a different sense from ours.

Yet this is a form of prayer suited to common use. "When ye pray, say" these words Christ said. It shows the method and subjects of prayer; reverence for God as supreme in power and holiness, with appropriation of him as our Father; longing for his kingdom, which is the perfect doing of his will on earth; trust in him for daily needs; penitence for sin; a loving spirit toward all men, even toward those who have wronged us; that fear of the testing of character through temptation which seeks the presence of God continually; and fear of the evil one from whom only God can deliver us.

3. Jesus taught his disciples the ground of confidence for prayer. He sought in response to their request to satisfy their need of ideas, of words and of faith for prayer. The first two needs he met by "the Lord's Prayer," the last need by two illustrations. The man thundering at his friend's door at the hour when families expect to be left undisturbed and in profound sleep has its humorous side hightened by the surly reply, "Trouble me not," etc. The point made is that the "shamelessness" (the literal meaning of the word translated "importunity") of the appeal overcomes indifference, sleepiness and the sense of its untimeliness, and the man by that means gets all he came for, though his friendship would not have gained him attention.

Christ is very simple in his teaching. The disciples had seen him praying, and they asked to be taught how to pray. He appealed to their knowledge of human nature. A friend, by his very boldness, at the most inopportune time, will get from his friend what he wants, will he not? You know what a friend is. I know what God is. "I say unto you" ask for what you want; seek what you miss; knock for that from which you are shut out. You will get what you want.

We must take Christ's word for this, on the ground that he knows. But he enforces it by a still stronger appeal to human nature. If any sort of a father should mock the misery of his hungry child by giving him a stone when he asked for bread, or a scorpion for an egg, he would show himself an unnatural father. Such a thing could hardly be conceived by a man. It would be utterly impossible with God. The disciples knew they would not do such a thing to their children. Could they believe their father would do it for them? On the testimony of their own hearts, confirmed by the testimony of Christ's perfect experience, they could rest in confidence that their prayers would be answered; and so may we.

4. Jesus taught his disciples what to expect in answer to prayer. Matthew tells us [chap. 7: 11] that Christ said the Father would give good things to them that asked. Luke, in place of the good things, puts the Holy Spirit. Christ is speaking to those who desired above all things the Holy Spirit. They missed often the real objects of prayer. They sought a visible kingdom, and found instead the cross with their King nailed to it. But they lived to see that, instead of asking for bread and receiving a stone, they had in their ignorance asked for a stone; but God had given them bread. So we often know not what to pray for as we ought, but the Holy Spirit, the best of all gifts, helps our weakness and interprets our desires which we cannot comprehend and for which we cannot find expression. Christ still inspires us, as he did his earliest disciples, with faith and courage to present our petitions; and assures us, from his own infinite knowledge and blessed experience, that we shall receive the best which our Heavenly Father has to give.

PROGRESS OF THE KINGDOM.

THE CHILD IN THE MIDST.

(Parallel with the Congregationalist's April Topic for Missionary Meetings.)

More and more in our foreign missionary work we are coming to realize that the hope of Christianity abroad depends almost entirely upon the success achieved in educating the rising generation, early cultivating in them enlightened morals, progressive habits of thought and life and worthy ideals. It is no less true in our own land that the most economical expenditure of money and effort for the cause of Christ is that which goes into the winning and the training of its young people. "The generation which takes the most children along with it for Christ will do the most to build up his kingdom," said Dr. Goodell. The census of 1890 records more than 22,000,000 young people between the ages of five and twenty, of whom over 18,000,000 are under eighteen years old. The total enrollment of our Protestant Sunday schools is a little over 11,000,000. Not one-half of our children of school age are members of Sunday schools, so it is evident that there are probably nine or ten millions of youth in the United States without regular religious instruction and not yet reached by any Christian agency.

"To save America we must save the child," is the motto of the Congregational Sunday School and Publishing Society, which carries on the Sunday school missionary work of our denomination, and its efforts are first of all for the young, though the great work by no means stops there. As long ago as 1825 the Massachusetts Sabbath School Union was formed as a union organization aiding Presbyterian and Congregational Sunday schools. In 1832, however, it became an independent Congregational organization and in 1868, having absorbed the Congregational Board of Publication, it was known as the Congregational Sunday School and Publishing Society. For half a century, dating from 1834, the name of its secretary and agent, Rev. Asa Bullard, known and beloved among the Congregational churches of the land as the children's friend, is inseparably associated with the society's history. He edited its books, for forty years had charge of its popular paper, The Wellspring, besides making long journeys and visiting churches and schools in the interests of the organization.

After the Civil War the society almost died, but when Rev. A. E. Dunning in 1880 was chosen Sunday school secretary, and after its reorganization in 1882, it took on new life and activity. A complete separation was made between the business and missionary departments and the new organization was incorporated under its present name. State superintendents were appointed in the Interior and Western States and missionaries sent out to assist them in planting or aiding Sunday schools and mission schools. In the newer parts of our country and the spiritually destitute regions, in the West and South, among the frontier farmers, the cowboys, the miners, the mountain whites and even the Negroes, the C. S. S. and P. S. is frequently the pioneer in rousing religious interest. Its agents visit neglected communities where there seems to be a favorable opportunity for inaugurating Christian work. They quickly gather the children and adults into Sunday schools, organize them with officers of their own choice, supplying them with lesson helps and attractive, wholesome literature.

Thus the Sunday school worker establishes a center of religious life, rouses the ambition of the parents in behalf of their children and sets the interested ones to work each according to his ability. Nor does the superintendent's service end here. Besides preaching and evangelistic work he must do a vast amount of pastoral work, making calls, visiting the sick and burying the dead, as well as carrying on an immense correspondence and presenting the financial needs of the cause. The society does not overlook the need of the established churches, seeking to encourage them to more thorough methods of Sunday school work and striving to induce the older communities to supply the needs of outlying new districts. Since January, 1883, the C. S. S. and P. S. has organized about 5,000 new Sunday schools, most of them where there were no evangelical churches or schools, as well as 1,470 mission schools. In the three years covered in its report to the National Council the society planted 1,463 new Sunday schools.

Did the C. S. S. and P. S. accomplish nothing more than to organize, as it does, about 500 Sunday schools each year besides publishing denominational literature, its claims on the sympathy and support of our churches would be undoubted, but when attention is called to the large number of Congregational churches which have grown out of its schools its real value and importance as the great pioneer in Congregational extension is appreciated. After the Sunday School Society has planted the seeds of the gospel in the community, the Home Missionary Society follows to foster the church and the Church Building Society to help it erect a house. Out of the Sunday schools organized by the C. S. S. and P. S. since 1883 about 500 Congregational churches have grown as well as a number of churches of other denominations.

One has only to read the letters from the workers on the field to be inspired with some of their enthusiasm and energy. Here is an account of a trip made by Superintendent Platt of Oklahoma in the Cherokee Strip. He found twenty-two out of thirty-four schools organized by him the previous year had continued their sessions without interruption, many of them even under unfavorable circumstances, while several others had life enough to warrant reorganization. Four of them have grown into Congregational churches, four into Methodist Episcopal and one into a Quaker church. We read with absorbing interest the success which Miss Grace Scott, the one woman missionary of the society, has achieved among the rough lumbermen of California, and turn with sympathy to a recent letter dated Liberty, Wis., from the first minister in the Kickapoo region. He points out from his door seven shanties in which there are seventy children, saying that he never has any difficulty in gathering a Sunday school. This pastor of a Sunday school church among a class of people noted for their wickedness baptized thirty-nine of them last summer, has in all six preaching stations and is struggling now to build a permanent church edifice. From Oregon comes a story of the remarkable results of a rural Sunday school which, in the course of a year, was instrumental in instituting regular Christian services and gathering together a band of Christians. This little church secured a house of worship and a pastor, who divides his time between that congregation and another forty miles distant, and succeeded in organizing a Y. P. S. C. E. and a Ladies' Society. Few churches could excel this record for twelve months.

It will be seen, moreover, if the last annual report is consulted, that money given to the Sunday School Society is not only wisely but economically invested in order to produce the largest results for the least expenditure. A Sunday school can be started for twenty-five dollars and it will live and make a home for itself, enlisting the volunteer aid of all the community. It costs $1,000, or more, to start a church and sustain a minister the first year. The report shows this return for every $2,200 expended: one missionary employed, sixteen new schools started, fifty others aided with literature, two and a half churches organized.

Only less important than the evangelistic work of the society is the valuable service rendered to the denomination by its editorial and business departments in preparing and publishing aids for Bible study and religious literature for the amusement and instruction of the young. Its lesson helps and quarterlies have reached an enormous circulation, while The Pilgrim Teacher and The Wellspring are also deservedly popular and its publications in the line of Sunday school books are acknowledged to be of a high standard. The publishing business is conducted upon business principles and is not only no drain upon the churches but is able to appropriate $5,000 a year to the missionary department.

A NOTABLE RALLY OF Y. M. C. A. MEN.

Boston hotel dining-rooms are the rendezvous during the winter season of a vast number and variety of companies, but it is seldom that they shelter 150 men more representative at once of the substantial business forces and the active Christian enterprises of the State than was the case last Thursday evening. They had come together at the invitation of the State executive committee of the Young Men's Christian Associations of Massachusetts and Rhode Island. This alert organization, composed of such energetic men as O. H. Durrell, H. M. Moore, F. O. Winslow, F. P. Shumway, Jr., and a score more of kindred spirits, has for the last two or three years held an annual banquet to bring together in friendly intercourse those naturally identified with association work.

Last week's assemblage was a delightful and enthusiastic gathering, all sections of the two States and over forty cities being represented and the speaking being exceptionally strong and interesting. Pennsylvania was drawn upon in the persons of James A. Beaver, its distinguished son, formerly a governor and now a judge of the Supreme Court, and of Walter C. Douglas, secretary of the Philadelphia Association and formerly prominent in the work in Massachusetts, while Dr. McKenzie of Cambridge was, as always, impressive.

The moral of it all, so to speak, was the making plain of the fact without obtruding it painfully that something like $100,000 are still needed to complete the fund for the proposed endowment building. This will not only insure a better supervision of association activities throughout the State, but will become a source of income of $7,000 a year, to be of special service in times of business depression. If any justification for such a central rallying point were needed it would be found in the fact that eleven years have seen the expansion of the work in every direction. There are eighty-nine associations now, when in 1885 there were forty-two, while the buildings have increased from eight to twenty-seven and the aggregate value of the property is over $1,500,000. A fine site for the new building has been secured in Park Square.

General Beaver pointed out forcibly the business advantages of the various lines of association endeavor touching the physical, the social, the mental and the moral life of young men. He believed in a broad and inclusive ministration with the end in view of saving souls. Mr. Douglas dwelt upon the practical benefits to accrue from a building, its influence upon the work in other States and the comparative slight outlay when the great number of young men to be reached is considered. Dr. McKenzie spoke of the value of united effort and of the relation of association work to the building and the permanence of the republic.

The great promise of immortality must, from the very nature of the case, include the promise of the strength to fulfill the moral and spiritual conditions on which immortality depends.—R. W. Dale.

BIOGRAPHY AS A FINE ART.

The difference between good and bad judgment never shows more clearly than in the handling of materials for biography, which is one of the finest of all the fine arts of literature. Questions of inclusion and exclusion, of the rights of the living and the dead, have to be considered in connection with the first duty of the biographer, which is that of presenting a complete and balanced picture of the individual in those surroundings which are of importance to the world. We may take the occasion, therefore, of the notoriety which has been given to the new life of Cardinal Manning to consider some principles too often transgressed by modern biographers which are nevertheless essential to success in the art of picturing a man in words.

First of these is the principle of proportion. It seems clear that a biographer's duty is to consider first what his hero's life really meant to his generation, and the relative place which his biography ought to occupy among the materials for a history of the time. Too often the work goes into the hands of relatives or friends, who launch their bark, already half swamped by the waters of adulation, or unseaworthy because loaded to the bulwarks with matters of secondary interest. This is always an injustice to their hero's fame. As for the public, it shrugs its shoulders and passes by, leaving the book unread. It would be easy, if it were not invidious, to point out men who filled a large place in their own generation, who are slipping down with undue swiftness to oblivion because of the mass of verbiage which well-meaning biographers have heaped upon their heads.

A second principle is that of well-considered reticence. No wise man tells the public all he knows, and least of all about his friend. He only concerns himself with the eddies of a life when they show the force of the stream and the friction of the shores. The detailed expression of mere passing moods inevitably mars the picture of settled purposes. One may say or write in exaggerative humor to a friend what would read very strangely in the solemn pages of a biography. Manning's biographer seems to have had no sense of humor, or of the proportion of occasions and utterances. In the words of the widely published protest, he has erred in "the publication of private letters and documents affecting the happiness of the living and the reputation of the dead," and it is well to remember always how completely these are at the mercy of written words, which stand out like peaks of a dead world from which all softening effects of a surrounding atmosphere have long departed.

The radical failure in the Manning case, however, seems to have been a failure of insight. Mr. Purcell strikes us as a dry, honest, determined man, incapable of understanding a many-sided character like that of Manning. He wants to tell the truth, and probably did bring out a side of character which a more fully equipped biographer might have missed, but he does not see his subject as a whole, and what he sees first he sees to the exclusion of the larger elements of life. Like so many biographers, he has sight, but not insight, and, because his sight was caught by the inconsistencies and contradictions of the man whom nevertheless he revered, there is this outcry. If his blindness had been the blindness of adulation, the book would have missed its present advertisement and escaped the beating of a storm of abuse.

BOOK REVIEWS.

HISTORY.

Israel Among the Nations, by Anatole Leroy-Beaulieu, is translated by Frances Hellman. The name of the author, well known in contemporary French literature, has been recently before the American public in connection with a striking article in the Forum on our national finances. The book is thoroughly well made and the translation preserves the Gallic flavor without sacrificing unduly the claims of idiomatic English. Here and there the proof-reader is at fault, and there is some inconsistency in the use of names, Jahve and Jehovah, for instance, appearing within a few pages of each other. The author calls his book a study of the Jews and antisemitism, and we have found it a striking and valuable contribution to one of the pressing questions of the time. M. Leroy-Beaulieu reaches conclusions in regard to the threatened perils of antisemitism which are refreshingly optimistic. "Antisemitism," he says, "even when most justified in its complaints is mistaken as to the source of our evils. It would be easy for me to prove this conclusively could I in this volume have treated of finance, capital and the ascendency of the stock exchange."

His point of view may be gathered from the concluding sentences of the preface: "In studying the influence of the Jew and of modern Israel—I have always the same object in view: religious liberty and social peace. Caritas et Pax, such is ever my motto; and, if I mistake not, it is a Christian motto not unbecoming a Frenchman." Some of the conclusions of the book may seem startling to those who have not considered the matter, but we believe they are justified by the facts. It points out that there is a larger admixture of Jewish blood in all the nations than is commonly recognized, and that, while the Jew has been made what he is partly by his own law, our laws have also had a large share in the making. "There is in all the world," he says, "perhaps nothing more stubbornly conservative than the Talmudic Jew," but, on the other hand, there is no one more ready to adapt himself to his surroundings than the emancipated Jew and, above all, the Jewish woman. Religion has taken the place of nationality in the history of the race, but there is no one now so ready to nationalize himself among the people where he makes his home if only the chance is given. The author points out that there is nothing Semitic in the genius of the great Jews, but that the work of each has been done in the spirit of the people among whom he lived. Speaking generally, there is no Semitic genius, he asserts, only a national genius expressed by Jews resident here or there and having no peculiar style or method of their own. There is a certain French narrowness of view throughout the book, and we do not think the history of recent events in France justifies the author in labeling the disease of money loving which affects the world the "Americanization of morals," but the Frenchman who looks at the wide world through any other medium than the haze of the Revolution is so rare that we are not disposed to grumble at the occasional provincialisms of this strong and suggestive book. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.75.]

Charles XII., and the Collapse of the Swedish Empire, by R. Nisbet Bain, in The Heroes of the Nations series, covers the period of its subject's life, or from 1682 to 1719, with an introductory chapter, giving an outline of the previous history of Sweden, which, as the author repeats, is mainly the history of its kings. The life of Charles was a meteoric one, spent in great wars, which ended at last in his defeat and in the destruction of the wider influence of Sweden in Europe. Mingling to his loss in the vexed affairs of Poland, and matched against the cool patience and determination of Peter the Great, his work failed at last utterly, but his personality remains as one of the strongest and most fascinating in all history, and his triumphs and adventures read like a chapter of romance. The book is well printed on good paper, and is fully supplied with maps, plans and pictures. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.]

BIBLICAL STUDY.

The wisdom of the Hebrews is probably their most characteristic contribution to the stream of ultimate world literature. In the form in which it comes to us in the Scriptures it has had no successful western imitators. The books of ancient wisdom have been a leaven; they can never be reproduced in the conditions of modern life. In The Wise Men of Ancient Israel and Their Proverbs, Prof. Charles F. Kent of Brown University gives us a careful and satisfactory study of the Hebrew wise men and of the wisdom literature, followed by a classification of the Proverbs. The necessity for this he indicates in speaking of the general neglect into which the book has fallen. "The book of Proverbs is the supreme example of the sententious style of literature so dear to the Semitic mind. Like many another product of the East, it is also in its external form signally deficient in scientific arrangement, and consequently in logical connection. To the Oriental this seems most natural, but to the Occidental it is simply confusing. . . . Teachings respecting man's duty to God, the management of a farm, the character of Jehovah, the fool, sin, the nature of man, duties of children and the future life, are all jumbled together in the same chapter. It is not strange, therefore, that people do not find Proverbs fascinating reading." The categories under which Professor Kent has arranged the contents of the book seem to be well chosen and we are sure that there will be a new sense of the value and importance of the Proverbs for all who renew their acquaintance with it under his guidance. Certain parts, at least, will lend themselves readily to memorizing, and the book might well be used for Sunday school and Bible classes with this especially in view. A third part of the book is devoted to the social teachings and the use by Jesus of the Proverbs, followed by an index of the separate sayings of the book. [Silver, Burdett & Co. $1.25.]

In line with this is the latest number of The Modern Reader's Bible, containing the apocryphal book of Ecclesiasticus, edited with an introduction and notes by Prof. Richard G. Moulton of the University of Chicago. The text is that of the recently issued revision, and Professor Moulton has performed a service for its readers similar to that of Professor Kent for Proverbs, and of his own edition of that book in this series. He has analyzed and redistributed the contents of the book and presented them to us in logical order and grouping. There is much greater variety of rhetorical form in this later book and this Professor Moulton brings out and emphasizes by the use of poetical titles and spacings. The Wisdom of the Son of Sirach is so full of thought and beauty, and has been so much forgotten, that we are glad to have this convenient and well ordered little volume, which will be a treasure to those who know how to use it. [Macmillan & Co. 50 cents.]

STORIES.

The specialization of the short story is one of the literary signs of the times. In The Sin-Eater, by Fiona Macleod, it is the Celt of the western isles of Scotland who is pictured for us. The book is dedicated "to George Meredith in gratitude and homage, and because he is Prince of Celtdom," and from this kingdom it does not depart from cover to cover. There is weird power and beauty—a sort of nineteenth century Ossian speaking to us of a people under the gloom of racial defeat and dwelling in the shadow of death—and strange as the mood is in which the book is written we do not question the truth of its picture of one side of the Gaelic nature. It would, however, have produced a more just and rounded picture of higher artistic value, we believe, to have introduced something more of light as well as shadow. These intense and gloomy souls, who turn so easily to murder and feel so quickly the madness of the sea, must have also a time of sunlight as beautiful as the summer days that shine upon their own Staffa and Iona and the heather-clad hills of Morven, and we cannot but regret that the author has failed to show us more of this side of their life. For this reason we enjoy the story of The Anointed Man, though it is interrupted sunshine which shines through it. Readers will find this a powerful book, quick with a sense of the tragedy of life and overhung by the gloom of a national fate, but it is not a book for children or for any one's discouraged hours. [Stone & Kimball. $1.00.]

Sketches rather than stories is the proper word for Russian Portraits, translated from the French of Vte. E. Melchior De Vogüé by Elizabeth L. Cary. It deals with the modern life of Russia, which one of the speakers calls a wild cherry tree of the steppes upon which plums are grafted—that strange mixture of stolidity and heroism, of quick grasp of the opportunities of modern knowledge and easy despair which make the passing stage of Russian character. These types are strongly set before us in the few pictures of this little book, those of the peddler and the fifer being most dramatic, while that of the peasant girl who fights her way to and through the medical school and hospital is illuminating in regard to some of the conditions of the national development. The book is well printed on convenient, narrow pages and is No. VI. of the Autonym Library. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. 50 cents.]

Fabriola, or the Church in the Catacombs, by the late Cardinal Wiseman, comes to us well printed on good paper and illustrated with impossible woodcuts, which seem to be invariably inserted out of place. This widely read and often translated story is, on the whole, very weak, and largely for the reasons stated by the author in the preface to the original edition and repeated here. A great historical story, dealing with one of the most important times of the world, is not written "early and late, when no duty urged, in scraps and fragments of time, when the body was too fatigued or the mind too worn for heavier occupation; in the roadside inn, in the halt of travel, in strange houses, in every variety of circumstance—sometimes trying ones." It is a pity, for the theme it deals with offers opportunity for a study of life and of religion worthy to claim the whole time of a master of the art of fiction. [Benziger Brothers. $1.25.]

His Perpetual Adoration, by Rev. Joseph F. Flint, is a story of the war, but a story told so indirectly and with so many interruptions that it does not appear to good advantage. Its purpose is to show that the army is a school and was to many of the soldiers of the Union a school of virtue and self-restraint, and incidentally to prove that a study of virtue may be as interesting as one of vice. The first purpose is well illustrated by the narrative, but in the second we think the author fails solely because the book fails in the sustained interest which is essential to success. [Arena Publishing Co. $1.25.]

TEXT-BOOKS.

Milton's Paradise Lost, Books I. and II. comes to us in the Students' Series of English Classics, edited, with an introduction and notes, by Prof. Albert S. Cook of Yale. The editorial and critical work is very full and admirably done, and the book will be a delight to older students, as well as to the classes for which it was probably first intended. Milton's thought swept easily over so wide a range of learning that we shall all be grateful to so helpful a commentator. [Leach, Shewell & Sanborn. 35 cents.]

Macmillan & Co. have reprinted in their School Library the well-known Stories from Vergil by Rev. A. T. Church. The book is admirably printed and bound, but the readers of the preface will look in vain for the illustrations which are there promised. [50 cents.]

Latin Texts are: The Lives of Cornelius Nepos, with notes, exercises and vocabulary edited by Thomas B. Lindsay, with good map and illustrations. [American Book Co. $1.10.] Selections from Urbis Romæ Viri Inlustres by B. L. O'Ooge, an American selection from a compilation of brief biographies much used in foreign schools as an introduction to Cæsar or Nepos. [Ginn & Co. 85 cents.] Stories from Aulus Gellius, edited for sight reading by Charles Knapp. [American Book Co. Paper covers, 30 cents.] From the same publishers we have Latin Lessons for Beginners by E. W. Coy. [$1.00.]

We cannot recommend the reprint of Greenfield's Greek Lexicon to the New Testament, which comes to us in paper covers, to any one who is not in possession of a magnifying glass of considerable power. The print is so microscopic that no one with any regard for his eyes should dare to use it. Enfeeblement of sight is too heavy a price to pay for knowledge. [H. L. Hastings. Paper, 25 cents.]

A Complete Manual of the Pitman System of Phonography, by Norman P. Heffley, is a well-arranged and clearly printed handbook for beginners in what is known as the Ben. Pitman form of the phonographic system. It is a pity that there should have arisen the variation in the arrangement of the vowels and the choice of arbitrary signs which divides the phonographers. It is a matter which primarily concerns shorthand writers, but beginners should know the fact before choosing a text-book for study. This represents, we believe, the most widely used style of phonography in America. [American Book Co. $1.25.]

Other text-books, which the limitations of space will allow us only to mention, are Trigonometry for Schools and Colleges, by Frederick Anderegg and Edward Drake Roe, professor and associate professor of mathematics at Oberlin, a book of 108 pages whose contents have been thoroughly tested by its authors in their own classrooms [Ginn & Co. 80 cents].——Plane and Solid Geometry, by Wooster W. Beman of the University of Michigan and David E. Smith of the Michigan State Normal School, with index and biographical table and table of etymologies—features which we are glad to see making their way more and more into our text-books and asserting their right in our best teaching [Ginn & Co. $1.35].——Chemical Experiments, General and Analytical by R. P. Williams of the English High School, Boston, which is an illustrated manual for use with or without a text book, contains also full directions for laboratory work. [Ginn & Co. 60 cents.]

MISCELLANEOUS.

Life and Work in India, by Robert Stewart, D. D., of the Punjaub Mission of the American United Presbyterian Church, is an attempt at a comprehensive sketch of the "surroundings, the details and the results of Christian pioneer work," especially in India. The Punjaub Mission of the United Presbyterians has been one of the fruitful fields of Christian labor. The author speaks from long personal acquaintance with the country and is well qualified, therefore, to act as guide and teacher. The book is a popular one and too much diluted with familiar knowledge to be easy reading for those who know the subject well, but there is a good topical index from which any special points of interest can be gleaned, and the purpose of the book will best be served with those who come as beginners to the subject. There is a good map of the Punjaub, and most of the illustrations help the text. [Pearl Publishing Co. $2.00.]

A well-arranged and timely little book, significant of the changes of the times in which we live, is The Woman's Manual of Parliamentary Law by Harriette R. Shattuck. There is nothing distinctively masculine or feminine about the orderly conduct of public business, but the fact that this book is used as authority in the conduct of all meetings by the General Federation of Woman's Clubs and that its illustrations are supplied with feminine names throughout may make it better for the modern woman's use than the other recognized manuals. [Lee & Shepard. 75 cents.]

The Dictionary of Burning Words by Joseph H. Gilbert is a new claimant in the field of cyclopedias of quotations. Although there is no hint of it on the title-page, the book is exclusively religious in its content and special prominence is given to American authors. From every book of this kind those who know how to use it will gather material for their thinking and their work, and there is certainly great wealth of such material here. [Wilbur B. Ketcham. $2.00.]

The Way Out, by Rev. Hugh Montgomery, with an introduction by Daniel Dorchester, D. D., is of more permanent interest for its chapters of autobiography than as a contribution to the alcohol question, toward the solution of which it offers nothing new. Mr. Montgomery is a man of great personal force, whose career in New England as an enemy of the illegal selling of intoxicants is well known. The bulk of the book is made up of discourses evidently delivered in the course of his work, which abound in forcible statements of the evil of drunkenness and the power of Christian faith working through total abstinence for its overcoming. Here is, indeed, a way out for any one who will follow it. With some of the political and doctrinal positions of the book we do not find ourselves so fully in accord. [Hunt & Eaton. $1.00 ]

The Journal of Proceedings and Addresses of the National Educational Association, which held its session for 1895 at Denver, comes to us in a large and well made volume of 1,100 pages. It includes a great number of important papers and is a striking witness to the growth and progress of the science of education. The contents are well classified and arranged, and the book is of the highest interest to all who keep themselves abreast with the progress of this department. [Published by the Association at the Pioneer Press Co., St. Paul, Minn.]

NOTES.

—— An interesting paper in the March Atlantic is on the Irish in American Life by H. C. Merwin.

—— The Revue des deux Mondes is soon to publish an article about Mary E. Wilkins written by Madame Blanc.

—— The widow of Stepniak is to prepare a record of his life and work, with the assistance of Prince Krapotkin and other writers familiar with his life in Russia, Italy and England.

—— Complaint is made that the artistic attractions of the new Boston Public Library detract gravely from its availability for use, since it is overrun most of the time by sightseers. But this difficulty will remedy itself.

—— Poet Laureate Austin has had much adverse criticism since his appointment, but Max Nordau, the author of Degeneration, says that he considers Mr. Austin to be the most perfect embodiment of Anglo-Saxonism in the literature of the time.

—— The growth of modern scientific terminology is indicated by the forthcoming Dictionary of Philosophy and Psychology edited by Professor Baldwin of Princeton. It is to be international in scope, with the co-operation of French and German as well as English and American scholars.

—— The English correspondent of the Boston Pilot speaks of "the openly expressed dislike of the Scotch and everything Scotch by the English people of all classes, from bishops to chimney sweeps." This is certainly not true in literature, as the wide popularity of Barrie, Ian Maclaren and Craddock show.

—— The lithographers of the country have just been celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the discovery of lithography by Aloys Senefelder. It is among his countrymen, the Bavarians, that the art has been carried to its highest perfection, but it has a large and increasing place among the industries of America. Simultaneously with the plans for the celebration comes the news of a great strike among the workmen in the trade.

—— A law has been introduced in Congress changing the postal regulations which apply to second-class or newspaper matter. It is aimed at certain acknowledged abuses by which a few publishers have been able to shift part of their expenses upon the public, but we hope that it may not pass without modification, as, in its present shape, it will embarrass all newspapers by interfering with their right to send out sample copies with their regular edition. A little gain of revenue would not be worth buying at the cost of a great deal of annoyance to the largest customers of the post office.

—— Those of our readers who have been present at a representation of the Passion Play of Oberammergau, as well as many others who have seen pictures or read accounts of the play and the actors, will regret to hear of the serious accident which has befallen Joseph Maier, the Christ of the drama. In hauling timber one of the logs fell and crushed his leg so that it was necessary to amputate it. By his wonderful impersonation, and the simplicity and purity of his character, he had won the respect and admiration of all who knew him.

PRAYER MEETING.

BY REV. H. A. BRIDGMAN.

Topic, March 15-21. Keeping Our Pledge in Spirit and in Letter. Matt. 2: 31-41.

The pledge, as Dr. Clark has often pointed out, is the backbone of the Endeavor movement. Let any considerable number of Endeavorers disregard it and the cause suffers. One meeting a year, therefore, when attention is called specifically to it is none too many. As often as that surely every one who has taken upon him this covenant should in the quiet of his room read over its provisions, ask himself if he is living up to them, if the pledge as a whole means more to him than it did a year ago, if it is any easier or harder to fulfill and, if so, why? In this way only can the pledge be prevented from becoming an empty formula.

It is not best when examining one's self on this line to make too sharp a difference between the literal and the spiritual keeping of the pledge. In fulfilling vows of a certain character one has to discriminate carefully, but the Endeavor pledge is stated in such definite terms that its plain meaning is unmistakable. To be sure, Jesus Christ himself leaves a margin as respects the duty of prayer. For instance, he says that if a man gets to the altar and remembers that he has a grudge against some one or some one against him he would better quit praying until he has tried to right matters. But, as a rule, the man, boy or girl who undertakes to fulfill the letter of the Endeavor pledge is the one who will be most likely to catch and fulfill its spirit. When you pledge yourself to read your Bible and pray daily, to be loyal to Christ in daily life, to take part every time in the prayer meeting, you take upon you certain specific obligations and no spiritualizing process of interpretation can make them any less precise and binding.

Several considerations should induce the Endeavorer to keep the pledge. The first is honor. Any one with a particle of manhood in him wants to do what he has promised to do. Members of secular organizations take pride in such allegiance. Should the Christian be lacking in this nice sense of honor? What a glorious thing it is to see and hear even the young children in our public schools nowadays at stated times pledging their allegiance to the national flag and "the republic for which it stands." A similar enthusiastic and ever-renewing devotion ought to keep Endeavorers true to their pledge.

Another consideration is that of growth in the Christian life. Glance over the ranks and see if those who are careful to fulfill the pledge are not, as a rule, the ones who are making progress in knowledge and in grace. That is what the pledge is for. Its provisions are merciful, not hard. One who pays regard to them not only has the satisfaction of keeping his word, but of seeing himself grow little by little, week by week. A third consideration is usefulness. The influence of careful observance of the pledge tells on others, both within and without the society. You may not be able to do great things for Christ, but if you keep the least of his commandments in season and out of season, when it is easy to keep them and when it is desperately hard, you get your reward both in his approval and in the effect which your example has upon many who are watching you.

It is an interesting fact that all of those to whom Christ made his revelations were out-of-door men—men, therefore, presumably, whose anatomy and physiology were not of a kind to interfere confusingly or becloudingly with their apprehension of the realities tendered to them.—Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst.

PASSING COMMENT.

A wise precaution is hinted at in one of the stated objects of a Massachusetts church in raising extra money for one of our societies. That so generous a gift from one individual should be in danger of immediate absorption in a cause which belongs to the thousands of individual members of our churches should be encouragement enough for further co-operation by others.

The results of a great awakening in a Maine town are such, if figures can tell the story, as to more than double the membership of the several local Congregational churches, provided the new converts seek fellowship with them.

It seems that there is a place and need of that prospective new church in a large Indiana community. Its degree of "heterodoxy" depends upon the standpoint from which it is viewed.

It is not a new idea for a representative of a State association to visit one of our seminaries, but the novelty lies in the thoroughness of his examination of the institution.

CLUBS.

N. H.—The Ascutney Club held one of its most enjoyable meetings in Lebanon, Feb. 26. There was a large gathering and many new members were added. The quartet of the church in Lebanon rendered admirable musical selections. The address was by Rev. C. S. Murkland, D. D., and held marked attention. The subject was Extra Religious Work of Congregationalists in New Hampshire.

N. Y.—The club of New York and vicinity, in its February meeting, discussed the question, Does Systematic Charity Tend to Dwarf the Sympathies? under five topics: 1. Is the primary object of charity the helping of the needy or the welfare of society? 2. Is the charity based on the command of Christ, "Give to him that asketh," injurious to the modern social structure. 3. Should one refuse it who has no opportunity for investigating the merits of the application? 4. Were Christ and the apostles mendicants? Are the Sisters of Charity who do collecting? 5. What are the elements of truly scientific charity? The speakers were Mr. S. J. Murphy, Dr. G. Le Lacheur, secretary of the Brooklyn City Mission Society, Mrs. Le Lacheur, Mr. Rogers, Rev. J. L. Scudder, Rev. W. W. Jubb and Dr. A. H. Bradford.

At the Brooklyn Club meeting on ladies' night last week, Commissioner Welles of the police board spoke on The Police Department; Its Problems and Its Protection. An animated discussion followed the address.

MINN.—The Southern Minnesota Club held a fine meeting, Feb. 24, at Cannon Falls. In the morning there was an informal discussion of Fellowship Meetings and Professor Pearson of Carleton College gave a luminous exposition of the Sunday school lesson for March 1. In the afternoon the club discussed The Christian Home. Papers were presented by Professor Huntington and Miss Evans of Carleton and Professor Dow, superintendent of the School for the Blind. The club is fulfilling a noble mission in fostering the fellowship of the churches. This meeting was one of the largest and most enthusiastic since the organization of the club.

NEW ENGLAND.

Boston.

JAMAICA PLAIN.—Boylston. The Messenger is fulfilling its purpose of representing well all the departments of this church. The work is energetically carried on by every society. The C. E. members have undertaken to raise $75 a year for the support of a native worker in a foreign mission field, and the King's Daughters plan to visit foreign cities in study the coming year. A Current Events Club, formed of late, is already well at work.

Massachusetts.

MEDFORD.—Howard Avenue. The new pastor, Rev. J. V. Clancy, was recently installed. The council was large and representative. Dr. N. Boynton preached the sermon and Rev. D. A. Newton offered the prayer.——Mystic. Last Sunday was a glad day for the church when 16 persons became members on confession, eight being heads of families and business men, well known and honored in the city. Already they are earnest workers in the church. This is the result of earnest, quiet work within the church, which still continues. Many more business men have become unusually thoughtful as to their relation to the church. Rev. John Barstow is pastor.

EVERETT.—Mystic Side, which grew from a Sunday school organized in 1889, enters its fourth year. The membership, at first 70, has nearly doubled. The church has been self-supporting and has contributed to each of the six societies annually. Rev. Albert Watson is pastor.

MALDEN.—First, last Sunday, took a collection of nearly $450 for the benefit of the Ministerial Fund of the National Council.

NEWTON.—Auburndale. At the missionary concert last Sunday evening the men of the church raised money for the General Howard Roll of Honor, at least two shares being assured. The women have already taken two. This amount was given partly as a thank offering for the removal of the debt of the American Board and as an aid to preventing the Stickney legacy to the Home Missionary Society from being swallowed by that debt.

WEYMOUTH.—First. This ancient church, which claims to date from 1623, is still putting forth fruit in old age. Though much depleted in numbers on account of removals and shifting population, it is maintaining a healthy activity while bravely looking toward the future. Its benevolent contributions last year were nearly $500, over $200 of which were for the American Board. At a recent social gathering at the parsonage a "valentine" was presented to the pastor, Rev. R. R. Kendall, which was found to contain $66 in gold and hearty expressions of love and devotion to the pastor and his family.

HYDE PARK.—Clarendon. At this church Rev. A. H. Johnson, pastor, a series of evangelistic meetings, assisted by Rev. R. M. Taft, has resulted in great awakening of the members and many conversions. Some heads of families have begun the new life. The interest still continues in connection with the union meetings at the center, led by Rev. C. L. Jackson.

NEEDHAM.—It was a glad day for the church March 1. Dr. A. S. Walker, the pastor, received 65 new members, and five others were prevented by illness from uniting. This makes a total addition of 90 during the last eight months. The special interest began early in November by the formation of a prayer circle of about 30 members, pledged to daily prayer for a fuller outpouring of the Holy Spirit. Early in January a series of union services with the Baptist church were inaugurated, and Rev. E. E. Davidson, the evangelist, was called in as a helper, proving himself an acceptable preacher and an earnest, wise worker. These meetings were fruitful in conversions.

SOUTH FRAMINGHAM.—Grace. At the close of his seven years' pastorate Dr. F. E. Emrich preached an anniversary sermon in which were recorded the interesting facts of that period relative to the church. The house of worship has been enlarged, 247 members have been received and over $32,000 have been given for benevolences. This is Mr. Emrich's third pastorate.

SALEM.—South. Rev. J. F. Brodie preached his seventh anniversary sermon Feb. 23, and gave a pleasant reception to his parish on the following Thursday.——Crombie Street. Rev. J. W. Buckham is giving a series of Sunday evening addresses on Some of the World's Great Preachers and Their Messages.

At the last meeting of the ministers of this city and vicinity—an undenominational gathering—the subject of Mind Healing or the Religio-Physical Basis of Mental Health was considered. The high character of many of its advocates was generally conceded, but the conviction was also strong that a false philosophy and a self-delusion were elements of the belief.

MARBLEHEAD.—Rev. S. L. Bell has recently completed an instructive series of Sunday evening lectures on Puritan History, closing with one on its local representatives.

BEVERLY.—The evangelical churches have been holding, for several weeks, a series of cottage prayer meetings. One evening over 90 were held in different sections of the city, preparatory to the coming of Evangelist Gelt, who began his work last Thursday.

SOUTH PEABODY.—This church, Rev. F. I. Kelley, pastor, is enjoying a revival work such as it has not experienced in many years

NEWBURYPORT.—Prospect Street. The Sunday evening services have of late been led by the Trinity Praying Band, assisting the pastor, Rev. M. O. Patton. This church has met with a severe loss in the recent death of Deacon Bliss, who was one of the leading forces in everything pertaining to the church life.—— Whitefield. The annual meeting of the parish showed the past year closed without deficiencies, and the ministry of Rev. J. D. Reid is approved.

MERRIMAC.— First. The year closed without debt, the small accumulation of $1,000, which had collected through several years, being wholly wiped out by the generosity of individuals and the pastor, Rev. G. L. Todd.

HAVERHILL.—Riverside. For the past year this church has been enjoying a quiet awakening. The agencies were special prayer among the Sunday school teachers for themselves and their classes, noticeable activity on the part of the Young People's Society and personal work. These and other suggestions of the pastor, Rev. G. L. Gleason, have been loyally carried out by the members of the church and affiliated organizations. In addition to the deacons there are six deaconesses, and the combined board is carrying on a systematic canvass of the parish.

WORCESTER.—Central. Rev. E. M. Chapman has just completed a series of Sunday evening sermons on What the Church of Christ Asks the Man of To-day to Believe.——Park held its annual roll-call Feb. 25. One hundred and fifty persons were present. A review of the departments showed growth and deep spiritual power everywhere. After the roll-call $1,100 were subscribed toward the interest on the debt. The balance will be easily made up. ——Pilgrim. The Ladies' Aid Society held its annual barrel opening Feb. 25, $225 being realized to pay interest.—— Union and Salem Street. The societies, following the action of these churches noted last week, have voted with equal unanimity to unite in one corporation, and they will take the proper legal steps to effect the union.

BOYLSTON.—The church has voted to buy a new organ, and new pews are already ordered. The interior of the meeting house is to be papered and painted and a fresh carpet laid. Rev. D. E. Burtner is pastor.

SPRINGFIELD.—First. After a notice from the pastor at a recent Sunday morning service, the congregation rallied to the cause of the American Board's debt with a subscription list aggregating $800. The church had already given largely.

Maine.

PORTLAND.—The Young Ladies' City Mission Band at its annual meeting at the State Street meeting house, Feb. 26, reported $500 raised during the year. Mrs J. F. Thompson was elected president. Dr. Pauline Root gave an interesting address on India. Eight churches are represented in the band.—— Williston. Individual communion cups were used for the first time March 1.—— St. Lawrence Street. The city is co-operating heartily with this church in its effort to raise $25,000 for a new edifice. Subscriptions already warrant fixing July 1 as the time to begin building.

ELLSWORTH.—The travel lecture course by the pastor has been popular. A series of sermons on The Apostles' Creed is now attracting the attention of the congregation, which is constantly increasing. The interest in missionary work is also greater. The sum of $100 has been sent for the Armenians and $10 to the church at Cranberry Isles.

AUBURN.—The Gale revival meetings closed last week with a full house and impressive farewell, at which many expressions of appreciation were given. It is estimated that 1,000 or more persons have expressed determination to live new lives.

SOUTH PORTLAND.—There is much activity in this little church and a large addition is looked for soon. A C. E. Society of 50 active and 20 associate members has been formed. The stone is on the ground for the foundation of a new chapel.

FOXCROFT AND DOVER.—The pastor and church acknowledge much help from the recent meetings, and active efforts are made to gather the fruits of the meetings for permanent results.

Mr. Earle Wood of Bangor has supplied the church acceptably at Oldtown for several weeks.

New Hampshire.

CHESTER.—Within the past year the average attendance of the Sunday school has increased more than 10 per cent. The home department has also made increase. The Westminster Shorter Catechism has been introduced, and every scholar committing the whole to memory is to receive a neat copy of the Bible. Already two have won the prize. A late collection taken in aid of the Armenian sufferers amounted to $28.

MERIDEN.—A children's mission circle has been formed by the Women's Missionary Society. Its members are called The Hillside Lights, and are busily engaged in making scrap-books for Turkey and filling mite boxes for Capron Hall, India. The architect is at work upon plans for the new meeting house, and they will be completed March 10. Rev. C. F. Robinson is pastor.

MANCHESTER.—First. The good literature committee of the C. E. Society has issued a circular and placed it in every pew at the morning service, asking for donations of magazines and papers for distribution among families and institutions not supplied with good reading matter.

ACWORTH.—At the close of the Sunday school session, Feb. 16, the pastor, Rev. C. O. Parker, in behalf of the school, gave a beautiful silver tea set to Deacon H. N. Hayward, in recognition of his twenty years' service as superintendent.

MILTON.—The church has expended over $1,000 on the repairs of its house of worship, and now has a neat interior with vestry and dining-rooms. Union meetings in connection with the Free Baptist church have just been held. Rev. M. P. Dickey is pastor.

At the late meeting of the Central Congregational Club a strong appeal was made to the representatives of the churches within its bounds to assume $1,000 for the liquidation of the debt of the American Board. A circular was immediately issued, giving the pro rata for the different churches, and the amount has already been pledged.

Vermont.

BENNINGTON CENTER.—Ben Venne Library has been given to the people of Pleasant Valley, whose pastor, Rev. M. L. Severance, has been untiring in his work at this part of his parish, two miles remote from the old First Church. The building is the gift of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Colgate of New York, who have a summer residence near it. The Christian Endeavorers use it weekly, and it has a reading-room, circulating library and kitchen, and will be used for socials.

SAXTON'S RIVER.—The late Mrs. S. W. Warner, an old resident of this town, left $7,000 in trust for the Kurn Hattin Homes at Westminster, that sum to be divided equally, in case the homes disband, between the Home and the Domestic Missionary Societies. An additional gift of $500 is also given to this church, besides the $3,000 received before Mrs. Warner's death last month.

WORCESTER.—During Rev. E. O. Grisbrook's pastorate of fifteen months he has greatly helped the church and town, and has attracted many to the Sunday services who have not been constant before. He now goes to Plainfield.

Rev. W. E. Geil, the evangelist, is holding revival services in Castleton.——The church in Hardwick receives a fine pulpit set from Mr. and Mrs. I. P. Titus.——First Church, Burlington, has contributed $273 toward the American Board's debt.

Rhode Island.

PROVIDENCE.—North. Rev. F. H. Decker is just beginning his third year with satisfying evidences of the blessing of God. The financial condition was never so bright. The church is appreciative and grateful for annual assistance for several years from a special source, yet the fact that it has ceased has served to demonstrate the strength within the church. Free seats and weekly pledges promptly paid prove a wise method here. The men's meeting is wonderfully stimulating to the whole spiritual life of the church. Conversions occur at every meeting. The pastor and his wife were surprised recently by a number of valuable tokens of regard for household use. Mr. Decker is one of the strong and open temperance ministers of the city.——Union. Quite valuable prizes, to be given in September, are offered to members of the church or Sunday school to stimulate the memorizing of Scripture. For one series of five prizes competitors must use the Revised Version only.——Highland. The Sunday school has been stimulated to reach high water mark in attendance by the introduction of an illustrated lecture with free admission to all members.——Pilgrim. The recent death of Mrs. Thomas Laurie and the lingering illness of Dr. Laurie, both so closely associated in the earlier half of the church's history, is the occasion of sorrow on the part of all who know them. Though confined to his room, Dr. Laurie's keen interest in the progress of Christ's kingdom suffers no abatement.

The new house of worship in Wood River Junction was used for the first time Feb. 23.

Connecticut.

NEW HAVEN.—At the Ministers' Meeting last week the subject was Conditions of Admission to Membership in Our Churches.——Howard Avenue. Weekly afternoon meetings of the women, recently started, have been productive of much interest and power. The pastor, Rev. W. J. Mutch, is preaching a series of sermons on The Christian Life. ——United. The Men's Club service last Sunday evening was addressed by Rev. J. L. Barton of the American Board on Present Tendencies in Japan. The annual collection for the Education Society amounted to $110.

CHESHIRE.—Deep sympathy on the part of the community is felt for the church and for its pastor, Rev. J. P. Hoyt, in the loss of his beloved wife.

MIDDLE STATES.

New York.

MAINE.—Rev. A. S. Wood recently reviewed the progress of the church for the four years of his pastorate. Forty members have been added at the village church and 34 at the branch in Union Center, $800 have been raised and expended in repairs upon the meeting house and parsonage, more than two-thirds of it being raised by the Ladies' Aid Society. Liberal contributions have been made to various worthy objects. In other important ways the church has advanced.

MORAVIA.—The Y. P. S. C. E. gave a war song concert on Washington's Birthday, for the benefit of the local post of the G. A. R. The proceeds amounted to over $50. At the following Sunday evening service the pastor, Dr. W. H. Hampton, gave a lecture on the Revolution of '76, the post attending in large numbers.

THE SOUTH.

Maryland.

BALTIMORE.—Second. Rev. E. T. Root, the pastor, is now delivering an interesting series of lectures on the life of Christ.——Canton. A large chorus of the young people has begun work, visiting the almshouse near the meeting house. Malcolm is preaching a series of Sunday evening sermons on Enemies of the Poor Man's Dinner Pail. Large congregations attend.——Euclid Avenue has adopted a new plan for benevolent offerings, by which weekly offerings are distributed quarterly, according to a proportionate schedule.

LIMA.—This church of over 200 members, less than 10 years old and with but one near neighbor, is of great importance to Congregationalism, being in a county seat of 10,000 inhabitants and five railroads. Hence the installation of Rev. I. J. Swanson under such favorable auspices, Feb. 17, was cause for general gladness in the State. The congregations were very large afternoon and evening. The welcome of the city and church to the new pastor was extremely cordial and the examination was unanimously sustained by the council.

SPRINGFIELD.—First. Mass meetings in the interest of the A. M. A. were appointed for Wednesday afternoon and evening March 1.——Lagonda Avenue. Efforts are being made to secure a pastor, so far without success. The pulpit is supplied regularly and the work of the church carried on as usual with fair results.

Indiana.

INDIANAPOLIS.—The Southside Christian Church, Rev. G. E. Hicks, pastor, has voted to become Congregational and a council is called to receive it into fellowship. The church was formed three years ago and Mr. Hicks, a graduate of Butler University and a student in its divinity school, was called to its pastorate. The divinity school has been subjected for the last three years to severe criticisms from Disciple ministers because Professor Garvin and his coadjutors were said to be educating the young men to a degree of tolerance on the subject of the form of baptism, claiming that immersion should not necessarily be a test of admission to a local church. Mr. Hicks and his congregation adopted these advanced views and have been practically read out of their denomination for this reason. They secured the Syracuse declaration on Christian unity and decided to make it a basis of fellowship as a Congregational church. There are 150 members, mostly young people, and an efficient Sunday school and Y. P. S. C. E. The field is in the southern part of the city, where there is a population of 40,000 and where heretofore there has been no Congregational church. The trouble over the heterodoxy of the Bible school professors in maintaining that the old formula, faith, repentance and baptism in the order named is the only allowable form of doctrine is increasing and the school is losing the support of the Disciple churches. The Butler college church, which has a liberal minister, is involved in the same difficulty. The Congregational position upon the subject is being studied with much interest.

ANDERSON.—Hope. The first "extra-cent-a-day band" for the home societies in Indiana was formed in this church, Feb. 23, with 18 members, which it is hoped to increase to 30.

THE WEST.

Missouri.

ST. LOUIS.—First. The new yearly record shows a good organization of young and old for work. The benevolences for last year are stated as over $8,000, while the expenses were more than $9,700. ——Hyde Park. A new house of worship was dedicated Feb. 23, Rev. Drs. C. S. Sargent, G. C. Adams and Supt. A. K. Wray taking part in the service. The thank offering amounted to $3,975. Rev. W. M. Jones is pastor.

Iowa.

POPEJOY.—In this railroad town a few months ago a church was organized with a membership of 23, which has now grown to 29. A house of worship, costing a little over $2,000, was dedicated Feb. 23, free of debt, the C. C. B. S. aiding to the amount of $600 and $680 being raised at the dedicatory exercises. The pastor, Rev. Charles Wyatt, was assisted in the service by Secretary Douglass. This is the only religious organization in the place.

DUBUQUE.—Dr. L. W. Munhall closed, Feb. 19, a three weeks' series of meetings, the most powerful revival this city has known in its recent history. Of the 500 persons professing conversion, many will unite with the Congregational churches. First will receive sixty accessions at the next communion and Summit about thirty. Of those uniting with the former many are leading young men in business and professional circles.

OTO.—Rev. J. B. Chase has just closed a series of special meetings which resulted in a reorganized church of fifteen members, with a number of others expected. Five of the prominent business men of the town, with their wives, are among the number. Rev. G. W. Tingle of Rodney will hold one service each Sunday here for the present. A Sunday school and a C. E. Society are to be organized at once.

BERWICK.—As the result of special meetings conducted by Evangelist Packard, which closed Feb. 16, ten persons have united with the church on confession and more are to follow at the April communion. Rev. Joseph Steele is pastor.

ALLISON.—Rev. H. C. Brown preached his last sermon as pastor of this church Feb. 23, having accepted a position as editor of a religious journal published at Kansas City.

A special collection amounting to $53 was taken in Grinnell, Feb. 23, for relief work in Armenia.

Minnesota.

WINONA.—Second. This pastorless church has been served for a month by Rev. W. L. Dibble, and good results are already manifest in increasing congregations. A subscription paper has been passed and, though the members are poor, it is hoped that, with the aid of the First Church and of the H. M. S., a resident pastor can be secured. When this church recovers from temporary discouragement on account of existing financial conditions it will have an excellent outlook.

SAUK RAPIDS.—At a recent meeting this church, formed 41 years ago and which has made little progress in a town of 1,500 inhabitants, decided to double its subscriptions and secure a resident pastor in connection with the out-station at Cable. Rev. H. W. Parsons has served the church acceptably for three months, residing at Minneapolis.

NORTH BRANCH.—Evangelistic services have resulted in the quickening of Christians and a few conversions. Meetings were also held in a neighboring schoolhouse, with good results. This hard field has been strongly affected and uplifted by the outpouring of the Holy Spirit.

CAMPBELL AND TINTAH.—These churches have been visited by Rev. R. F. Paxton of Illinois, and are much encouraged. They have been without a minister for several months, but have raised a subscription and hope to secure Mr. Paxton.

DAWSON.—Rev. S. R. Breish is holding revival meetings. Sickness in his family has interfered with the work for a few weeks, but it is now being vigorously prosecuted. Preaching services are maintained at the out-station, Boyd.

MADISON.—Hard times have been keenly felt here, but the church is making a determined effort to settle its indebtedness, and the pastor has been invited to preach at the neighboring point, Marietta, in connection with his present field.

Rev. W. M. Jenkins, long the pastor at Elk River and more recently at Cannon Falls, has commenced work at St. Charles under hopeful auspices. ——The church in Fergus Falls observed Armenia Day with appropriate exercises, taking up a collection for the sufferers.——The Hutchinson people have decided to pay parsonage rent no longer and have secured a new house costing $1,000.

Kansas.

TOPEKA.—Seabrooke. At the first anniversary of this organization, Feb. 16, 19 persons were received to membership. The church has grown from 17 members to 65. A four weeks' series of meetings has just closed, resulting in 40 professed conversions. Rev. J. E. Kirkpatrick is the pastor.

Nebraska.

HARVARD.—This church, pastorless for more than a year, maintains its Sunday school with great efficiency, keeping up the Y. P. S. C. E. and weekly prayer meeting. Superintendent Bross spent Feb. 23 here, and an invitation has been extended to a Yale divinity student to supply the pulpit during the summer.

OGALALLA.—Rev. W. S. Hampton is invited to remain a second year. Special meetings began Feb. 23, Rev. Messrs. G. W. Knapp of Grant and G. W. Murphy of Wallace assisting.

CLAY CENTER.—Mrs. E. B. Perkins, lately pastor of the church at Clarks, who has been preaching alternate Sundays at Silver Creek, has just made a like engagement at this point.

OMAHA.—St. Mary's Avenue had a special service Lincoln Memorial Sunday, when the pastor, Rev. S. W. Butler, D. D., preached impressively on Christian Patriotism.

DE SOTO.—Mr. T. E. Horton, who lately conducted a successful evangelistic meeting at Wahoo, is holding services at this out-station connected with Calhoun.

Rev. John Doane of Plymouth Church, Lincoln, has arranged a carefully prepared series of Lenten topics for the prayer meetings during that season.

New Mexico.

ALBUQUERQUE.—Special union services were held Jan. 19 to Feb. 3, under the lead of Evangelist H. W. Rankin. They created a marked feeling of sympathy and unity among the five churches co-operating, quickening many members and accomplishing a good work among the children. A union Sunday school service was held by Mr. Rankin, at which over 60 children under 15 declared their purpose to live for Christ. The Congregational minister, Rev. F. H. Allen, had already formed a pastor's class for children over 11. Many were added after the special meetings, making a division of the class necessary. The junior section, including those under 11, numbers 25, and the senior section 29. Miller's catechism for pastors' training classes is the text-book used. The older ones are taking up C. E. work with great enthusiasm. Three persons were added to the membership March 1, two on confession being from the pastor's class.

CUBERO.—Mexican. The Sunday school conducted by the mission teachers has doubled in membership since the beginning of the school year. The only organ in the town is owned by the teachers, and has helped greatly in interesting young and old.

RANCHOS DE OTRISCO.—Mexican. While the mission teachers were at service Feb. 16, their house was entered by burglars and articles valued at $60 stolen.

Arizona.

NOGALES.—Two weeks of special services were held in February with the assistance of Superintendent Ashmun. Considerable interest was awakened among Christians, and a few of the young people have taken a pronounced stand as Christians. The pastor, Rev. J. H. Heald, preaches one evening each month at Crittenden, on the railroad 30 miles to the north, a small community heretofore destitute of religious services. The people manifest hearty interest. One Sunday afternoon each month he gives to Calabasas.

PACIFIC COAST.

California.

SAN FRANCISCO.—Seamen's Bethel. Chaplain Rowell reports conversions averaging one a day since the beginning of the New Year.——The City Church Extension Society held its annual meeting in the Third Church edifice. Though only three years old the organization is growing in strength, this being the largest and most enthusiastic of its anniversaries. Auxiliary to the C. C. B. S., it hopes to do large service for new enterprises. An effort to induce several persons in each parish to subscribe $100 annually has grown out of the suggestions of one of the speakers.

The total membership of the churches in the General Association is 10,684, a net gain during the year of 611, against an increase of 362 in 1894. There were 844 accessions on confession, 100 more than during the preceding year. The full number of new members was 1,480, being 102 more than in 1894. Nine new churches were placed on the roll.

LOS ANGELES.—First. An $8,000 pipe organ, the gift of Rev. Edward Hildreth as a memorial of his wife and son, has recently been set up and was used for the first time Feb. 9.

Washington.

SPOKANE.—Pilgrim. The new edifice was opened Feb. 9 with appropriate services. The church, during its five years' existence, has grown from seven members to 30, and now has a Sunday school numbering 75, two C. E. Societies and a Ladies' Aid Society. It also rejoices in a pastor, Rev. Jonathan Edwards, who, besides attending to the spiritual needs of his flock, has acted as architect and superintendent of the new building.

CHELAN.—The Congregationalists and the Methodists have united in a series of interesting meetings, resulting in a large number of conversions. On one occasion nearly the whole congregation came forward to the altar. Mr. W. L. Dawson is pastor.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

REV. EZEKIEL RUSSELL, D. D.,

Who died in Lynn, Feb. 26, was born in Wilbraham in 1810 and was one of the oldest alumni of Amherst College, having graduated in 1829. For a brief period he was principal of Hopkins Academy, Hadley, and tutor at Amherst. In 1835 he graduated from Andover Theological Seminary and was first settled over the North Adams Church. Dr. Russell was pastor of the Olivet Church, Springfield, and his final pastorate was at Holbrook, where he remained until his retirement from active service in 1871. Dr. Russell was an excellent scholar and always maintained his interest in the classics.

The share for the Roll of Honor from Pilgrim Church, Cambridgeport, Mass., should be credited to the Woman's Auxiliary, the Young Ladies' Society, the Y. P. S. C. E. and the Junior C. E. Society.

KING ARTHUR SHAPES.—Round tables are coming into fashion with leaps and bounds. The furniture dealers are doing their best to encourage this change by making their new patterns of round tables at lower prices than ever known. At the Paine warerooms on Canal Street there is an immense variety of new patterns at astonishingly low figures.

Nervous

People often wonder why their nerves are so weak; why they get tired so easily; why they start at every slight but sudden sound; why they do not sleep naturally; why they have frequent headaches, indigestion and nervous

Dyspepsia

The explanation is simple. It is found in that impure blood which is continually feeding the nerves upon refuse instead of the elements of strength and vigor. In such condition opiate and nerve compounds simply deaden and do not cure. Hood's Sarsaparilla feeds the nerves pure, rich, red blood; gives natural sleep, perfect digestion, is the true remedy for all nervous troubles.

Round Now.

Perhaps there will never be a better time to buy a new dining table than now. The fashion of round tables has come to stay, and this year h are great temptations in the way of low prices.

After all, a round table has many charms. It is so sociable and it lends itself to a most effective style of dressing. In a small dining room it is the best solution of the problem of limited space.

Two or three things need attention. Be sure and select a pattern with very stout underframing; if the design comprehends a pedestal pillar in the center it is to be preferred. We have all sizes of tops.

We mentioned the fact of very low prices this season.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

There has been no distinct improvement in the movement of merchandise. Indeed, several cotton mills making colored goods have gone on half time, but one of the most prominent mill agents says that even while this order to reduce the output was given there was a slight improvement in the outlook. When the consumptive demand overtakes the supply these mills will undoubtedly go on full time again.

The woolen industry shows no improvement, and several mills have shut down altogether. This is not entirely due to the fact that trade is dull, but to the present tariff law, which has enabled foreign manufacturers to send in large amounts of woolens at prices with which the American manufacturer finds it difficult to compete. With a more favorable tariff the woolen industry will unquestionably regain lost ground.

Shoes and dry goods are relatively among the most active merchandise, while iron and steel have not justified earlier expectations. When we look at railroad earnings, however, the conclusion is inevitable that general trade is better than a year ago. The roads are with few exceptions showing uniform gains in their earnings. This fact affords indisputable evidence that the great producing sections are experiencing a fair degree of prosperity and are not so disturbed at shadows as is the financial center, New York.

The Senate's action on the Cuban resolutions precipitated a heavy selling movement in Wall Street Friday, but the weakness, although acute while it lasted, did not long continue, and it is good opinion that this shaking out of weak holders of margined securities will clear the way to a renewal of the bull campaign. The insolvency of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad comes as a shock to stockholders at home and abroad and will add to foreign investors' distrust of our securities.

BUSINESS MEN AND MINISTERS.

The Boston Ministers' Meeting, last Monday, was opened with fervent prayers for the restoration to health of Governor Greenhalge. The first address of the morning was given by ex-Mayor Reed of Worcester, who spoke as a business man to the ministers. Mr. Reed's pertinent suggestions, given briefly, were as follows: Business men, to be successful, must study human nature, and ministers who desire to attract should pursue the same method. Preach the word in sermons not too long; when weariness comes devotion dies. Do not be lax in financial affairs. Nothing, immorality excepted, impairs a man's influence like unpaid bills. Don't invest in speculative securities; the result will be destroyed usefulness.

In most churches not more than half the business men in the congregation are church members. If more of the gospel and less of doctrine were preached might not this number be increased? It is a mistake for a minister to theorize about business affairs to a business man. He should not take up in the pulpit all the new inventions and current rumors which are found in the morning papers. Do not take up dead issues, nor condemn other denominations, but preach the eternal truth and follow the Saviour's principle and let them cast out devils even though they follow not with us. The Christian pastor, as the representative of his Master, who went about doing good, must never incur the reproach of caring for men's souls and neglecting their bodies. If you want and expect a revival get near your people in the prayer meetings. We business men want you to come to us with the message from the eternal God and we promise you shall not lack our prayers, our co-operation and our support.

Rev. C. M. Southgate then spoke on the Ministry and Secular Affairs. Our ministers are manly men, and it is their constant association with God which makes them so. In the matter of dress Mr. Southgate believes that the clerical garb on week days is not helpful in getting close to men. In reference to the supposed little knowledge of ministers about business he inquired what chance they had to learn it, but said that very few ministers went into bankruptcy or took the poor debtor's oath, although they often knew how to sympathize with business men when creditors press and debtors shirk. At this point Mr. Southgate requested all the ministers present whose salary had always been paid exactly when due to raise their hands. Out of about a hundred ministers only thirteen could testify that this had always been their experience. Next to sheer wickedness the worst foe of the church is meanness, and Christian men owe it to the church to see that broad-minded men give to the church affairs the same wisdom and care and system that are applied to business enterprises.

In regard to the ministerial relation to politics Mr. Southgate said we cannot tell men for whom they shall vote, but we can demand that they vote, and that they do so intelligently and conscientiously before God. The real truth as to a minister's relation to secular things is to deny that there are any secular things, as if God had claims on a man in the pulpit that he had not on the man in the pew. Make the everyday things sacred. Let us abolish the distinction between things sacred and things secular, not by degrading the sacred, but by sanctifying the secular.

A resolution was introduced by Dr. Harrington, and accepted by the meeting, approving of all suitable efforts for establishing a permanent court of arbitration and deprecating a resort to war except in extreme cases.

The "Pass-It-On-Society."

Probably many of our readers have already heard of this society and its work. It was started on a suggestion made by the Rev. J. M. Farrar, D.D., of Brooklyn, who writes, on February 8, 1895: "My Dear Sir: Booth's Pocket Inhaler works like a charm. The first inhalation gave relief. It is a blessing to humanity, and I am sorry it is not better known. I add my name to the 'Pass-It-On-Society.'" On December 5, 1895 (ten months later), Dr. Farrar writes: "I believe it is a real blessing to the afflicted." If you are suffering with Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis, Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever, Rose Cold, or any similar disease of the respiratory organs, send for HYOMEI, the new and wonderful Australian "Dry-Air" treatment comprised in

Booth's "Hyomei" Pocket Inhaler Outfit, by mail, $1.00.

Your friend would not "pass-it-on" to you unless convinced of its merit. In ASTHMA Hyomei gives instant relief, stops the cough, the wheezing and gasping, and makes breathing easy in a few moments time. In CATARRH it removes the offensive accumulations, clears the head, removes catarrhal deafness and purifies the breath. It cures BRONCHITIS permanently and robs CROUP of its terrors.

HOW THE "PASS-IT-ON-SOCIETY" GROWS.

Griffin, Ga., July 8, 1895.
Like Dr. Farrar, I want to join the "Pass-It-On-Society." I am so grateful for the good results that I have received from the use of Hyomei, and I have already spoken of it to a number of my friends.
C. I. STACY, Sec'y Y. M. C. A.

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 21, 1895.
In thirty years' experience in the practice of medicine I have never given my name in support of a proprietary remedy, until I met with Hyomei, which I indorse with all my heart (professional ethics to the contrary notwithstanding). Since testing Hyomei in Laryngitis, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, Hay Fever, I believe in it for itself, for what it has done, and I gladly add my name to the "Pass-It-On-Society."
S. H. MORRIS, M.D., 159 Franklin St.
P. S.—You are at liberty to use this as you may deem best.

Pass Christian, Miss.
I have been a sufferer from Catarrh and Bronchitis ever since last August; my pastor, Rev. O. W. Flowers, advised me to try your remedy. He has been using one of your Pocket Inhalers ever since last Spring, and has derived much benefit from it.
MISS BERTHA B. STEWARD, Harrison County.

New York, Feb. 1, 1895.
I have been troubled with Bronchitis for about four years. No medicine helped me. About two weeks ago I tried one of your Pocket Inhalers, which gave me immediate relief. Sunday evening our pastor, the Rev. Dr. Farrar, spoke with great difficulty, apparently from a heavy cold settled in his chest. I sent him one of your Pocket Inhalers. I inclose his reply.
HALSEY FITCH, 170-172 Chambers Street.
(Dr. Farrar's reply is given above).

Greensboro, Ala., Sept. 15, 1895.
Your Hyomei cured me of Catarrh after other remedies failed; will add my name to the "Pass-It-On-Society." Yours truly,
W. M. SEAY.

New York, Sept. 20, 1895.
I take pleasure in adding my name to the long list of those whose lives have been made happier by the use of Hyomei. It is not only an instant relief to Catarrh sufferers, but will cure this disease entirely. I have been the instrument of inducing many friends and acquaintances to seek relief through its use. I have yet to learn of one who has not been benefited I want to "pass-it-on."
A. G. THOMPSON, 33 Wall Street.

AMERICAN UNION LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, 44, 46, 48, Cedar St., New York, February 19, 1896.
Please find enclosed one dollar for which send one Pocket Inhaler Outfit to my friend, D. S. Walton, 134 Franklin St., City. It has done me so much good that I never cease recommending it to my friends and as you know have bought as many as 12 or 15 which I have given to personal friends, and have influenced more than twice this number to buy them, and I have yet to meet one who has not thanked me for recommending it. It has completely cured my little daughter of Catarrh, from which she has been suffering for years.
Very truly yours,
J. S. NUGENT (Treasurer).

Albany, N. Y., July 3, 1895.
I will tell you candidly your remedy has given me more relief from my Asthma than anything I have used, and really I have been so enthusiastic over it that I have made a great many converts, not only in Albany, but West Troy. The effect Hyomei has on me is very pleasant; when I am oppressed for breath, I inhale a short time, and the great desire to cough is gone. The little Inhaler is my constant companion.
MRS. SARAH E. BANTHAM, 359 Clinton Avenue.

HYOMEI is a purely vegetable antiseptic, and destroys the germs and microbes which cause diseases of the respiratory organs.

The air, thoroughly charged with Hyomei, is inhaled through the Pocket Inhaler at the mouth, and, after permeating the minutest air cells, is slowly exhaled through the nose. It is aromatic, delightful to inhale, and gives immediate relief. It stops all spasmodic coughing instantly, clears the voice, expands the lungs, and increases the breathing capacity.

Cures by Inhalation

Pocket Inhaler Outfit, Complete, by Mail, $1.00, consisting of pocket inhaler (made of deodorized hard rubber, beautifully polished), a bottle of Hyomei, a dropper, and full directions for using. If you are still skeptical, send me your address, and my pamphlet shall prove that Hyomei does cure. Consultation and trial treatment free at my office.

Hyomei Balm.—An antiseptic skin food for weak chests, burns, scalds, chapped lips, rough hands, frost bites, eczema, etc. Nothing has been discovered so effective for the purposes named. Price by mail, 50 cents.

WOMAN'S BOARD PRAYER MEETING.

CONGREGATIONAL HOUSE, BOSTON, FEB. 28.

The leader, Miss Ellen M. Stone of Philippopolis, Bulgaria, said that she had come from prayer meetings which the women held just as she was leaving, so that the little groups there and here seemed very closely connected. It is the custom for the women in the churches in Bulgaria, except Sophia, to hold their prayer meetings on Friday. Miss Stone's topic was, "I love to remember that the Lord reigneth," and she read selections from the Psalms. In Bulgaria the Christian is the world's Bible. The constitution gives religious liberty, but suspicion is sometimes rife. The New Testament was purchased quite extensively in a certain village where an epidemic prevailed in the belief that it would serve as a charm. The book may be kept upon a high shelf, or safely tucked away in a chest, but its possession is considered a safeguard.

In connection with the calendar topic, East Central Africa, it was interesting to listen to Mrs. Bates of Gazaland, who paid a well-deserved tribute to Miss Gilson, who now goes to that mission equipped with a kindergarten training, a theological course in Hartford Seminary, nine years' experience as a teacher in one of the schools at Cape Colony and two years' experience at the head of the girls school at Umzumbe. Mrs. Bates also gave an account of the various attempts to establish a mission in the interior from the time, sixty-one years ago, when three of the six men who were sent out by the American Board were designated for the interior but were not able to accomplish their purpose.

In 1880 Umzila was ready to open his kingdom and asked for four men to be sent, but the four men were not found in the churches at home. In 1888 Messrs. Richards and Bates went to Umzila's kingdom. The old king had died and his son was reigning in his stead. They arrived in the midst of a ten days' mourning for the wife of a head man; then the wife of another died and the mourning continued. All this time they waited, and then made known their errand. The new king, being suspicious of them, and now under the influence of Portuguese who had come in, sent a man who understood English to listen to their conversation and ascertain their real purpose. Their honesty being proved, he referred to his father's call for missionaries eight years before, but said, "We have our missionaries now"—the Portuguese. "Your feet have been too slow in coming." The comment of a heathen king upon the Christianity of America.

Mrs. Bates then gave an account of the journey made three years ago by Mr. and Mrs. Bunker, Dr. and Mrs. Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. Wilder, Mr. Bates, Miss Nancy Jones and several native families, by sea and river and land, up to Mt. Selinda, 4,000 feet above the sea. She also sang a verse of a hymn in the Zulu language, which she called "the Italian of South Africa," and urged personal interest in the missionaries and their work.

BOSTON SUPERINTENDENTS' UNION.

The union has many times shown its realization of the importance of the children's presence and proper instruction in the Sunday school by its choice of subjects relating to them. Last Monday night, as a sequel to the topic of the previous meeting, the attention was directed to The Lower End of the Sunday School. A pleasing introduction to the subject was afforded by Miss B. F. Vella, through a descriptive survey of the work which, as State superintendent of primary instruction, she is closely identified with. The purpose of the corps of workers which she represents is indirectly to benefit every school in the State, through direct intercourse with the primary and intermediate teachers, either through correspondence or in normal and method classes, such as one which has just been started in this city to meet weekly. Practice and instruction by means of materials and lectures are given to teachers, who, in turn, use this advantage in their classes. But even with these trained workers great success depends upon proper means being granted them by their schools for the introduction of the new principles.

Rev. W. H. Allbright gave some specially helpful thoughts on illustrative methods of teaching, maintaining that primarily the Sunday school was chiefly for the children, and that its instruction must first of all be adapted to reaching the child's mind. Rather than neglect the young scholars for the benefit of the older, as has been the tendency, he thought, the most careful preparation, the best teachers and the keenest study of the scholar should be given to the intermediate classes; and every means of approach to the child's mind—singing, teaching, addresses and preaching—should, as far as possible, be illustrative of the truth to be impressed.

THE ASSOCIATION OF FLORIDA.

Winter Park, situated in the lake region, welcomed the body with true Southern hospitality, Feb. 18–20. The skies were never bluer and the lofty pines draped with Spanish moss waved a welcome to the pastors and delegates who came from widely separated sections. Charleston, S. C., and Key West, over 750 miles apart, represent the extreme limits of the association.

The opening sermon by Rev. E. P. Herrick on Divine Irradiation emphasized the necessity of illumination as a condition of efficiency in spiritual work. Capt. H. B. Shaw gave A Lay View of Congregationalism, and Present Exigencies in Our Work and How to Meet Them was discussed from the pastor's and layman's point of view.

The reports all indicate that hopefulness and courage animate the churches, although greatly hampered on account of financial reverses. The uplifting discussion on The Holy Spirit: How to Realize His Presence and Power, prepared the brethren for the gathering of the Florida Woman's Home Missionary Union, where were heard cheering reports of the work in our borders. This organization is supporting the Cuban mission in Tampa, and the weekly influx of hundreds of Cubans fleeing from the war-smitten island calls for increased expenditures and a further extension of the work. The meeting of the Florida Home Missionary Society, addressed by Supt. S. F. Gale and Rev. Messrs. J. W. Harding and C. W. Shelton, was calculated to deepen missionary enthusiasm.

The last day was made memorable by Prof. L. A. Austin's scholarly exegesis of Tit. 2: 11, the practical theme, Christianity Adapted to All, ably treated by three speakers, and Prof. J. H. Ford's address on The Relations of College and Church. A sermon was preached by Rev. J. Backus on Christ's Love.

Resolutions were passed commending Rollins College, now sadly in need of aid. Sympathy was expressed for Cuba and for the suffering Armenians and resolutions favoring a permanent board of arbitration between English-speaking peoples were passed. The gathering at the educational center of Florida closed with a delightful social occasion at the Seminole Hotel.

"In the blood of ancestry is the prophecy of destiny." Problems which the Spaniard sought to work out on this historic peninsula and failed have been committed to worthier hands. Congregationalism, though not indigenous to the soil, has shown its adaptability to its Southern environment. The descendants of the Pilgrims and Puritans and the order they represent have a unique mission in this semi-tropical State.

Twenty-one years ago our first church was organized in this State, today there are seventy, with a membership of 2,200. Four new churches have been organized during the past year and 400 members received. Not one worker has deserted his post on account of the stress of the times. E. P. H.

THE OXYGEN COSTS NOTHING, the price of the instrument being all the expense necessary for years. It can be used by the entire family.

"I sought the aid of a dozen of the best physicians I could find, but they helped me very little. I also tried Compound Oxygen thoroughly, and the Electric battery, but they helped me very little. On Dec. 17, 1891, I commenced using the Electropoise, and continued it about four months. During this time my disabilities were greatly removed. In the course of a year from the time I commenced using it I enjoyed almost perfect health, which has continued to this date. I have great faith in it." REV. J. H. MANSFIELD, Athol, Mass.

PROF. FRANCIS BROWN AT THE OLD SOUTH.

The second in the series of lectures on the Old Testament and modern scholarship was delivered last Sunday evening by Professor Brown of Union Seminary. His theme—Israel and Moses—followed naturally President Harper's survey of the Beginnings. The fact that the stalwart, fine-looking lecturer is a colleague of the widely known Professor Briggs gave an added interest to the views presented, which are supposably similar to those of the man whose advanced position has drawn down upon himself the condemnation of the Presbyterian General Assembly. No savor, however, of the belligerency commonly attributed to the now famous heretic marked the presentation of his theme by Dr. Brown. His is a singularly agreeable and persuasive manner. He possesses also that gift which shines out so conspicuously in George Adam Smith's writings and platform work of making history glow before you.

Yet the scholarly character of his lecture was its most pronounced mark. He faced first the all-important question of the historic trustworthiness of our sources of knowledge of Moses. These are entirely Biblical and five hundred years intervene between his life and the earliest written narratives which have come down to us. These, in the judgment of the lecturer, give an essentially faithful picture of the great leader of the Hebrews and of his work and influence. Here the professor interjected two valuable reflections. The first was that the only path to historical knowledge is the path of historical inquiry. We must preserve the truth of our historical records even if the sacredness has to go. In the second place the books are not sacred because they tell just when Moses was born and died but because they reveal to us the living God and disclose as well the essential greatness and the remarkable influence of Moses.

After treating in a masterly way the question of the bearing of Christ's words upon the problem of the authorship of the Pentateuch, Dr. Brown set forth the aspects in which Moses appears as the unifier of the nation, the author of its laws and the emancipator of his people and the bold expositor to them of the righteousness of God. Whether he wrote the books traditionally ascribed to him is of small consequence compared with this larger work. To insist on his authorship of certain books is foolish when our main concern is with what he did for Israel.

DR. HUNTER, THE EMINENT LUNG SPECIALIST,

Completes a Half Century of Successful Practice in the Profession.

His Devotion to Medical Science and its Amazing Results in the Cure of Consumption.

Great Success in Authenticated Cases of Tuberculosis.

On March 4, 1896, Dr. Robert Hunter, of 117 West 45th Street, New York, will have completed 50 years as a physician. His career has been remarkable. For 45 years Dr. Hunter has given his whole time to the study and treatment of the lungs and their diseases. Many will be glad to know why he became a lung specialist and how he achieved such a brilliant success. His sympathy with sufferers from consumption is due to the fact that he was himself once a consumptive with all the misery and danger to life which that involves. Driven to extremities by the failure of all stomach medicines to stop the progress of the disease, he resolved to act for himself, reasoning that consumption being a disease of the lungs nothing put into the stomach ever reached its seat, and failed because it did not do so. It was the lungs that needed help, and he saw that that could only be obtained by gaseous medicines and medicated air breathed directly into them. He reasoned that in no other possible way could they be reached by curative remedies, so he invented the necessary instruments and began to treat himself by inhalation. The rapid improvement and eventual cure of his own case led him to apply the treatment to others with the same gratifying results. Dr. Hunter is justly styled the Father of Inhalation, for he was the first to introduce, advocate and successfully apply it to the treatment of lung cases. With him it is a complete system of practice adapted to the individual requirements of each case. Let living patients tell its wonderful effect in their cases.

Rev. O. L. Waters, Fairhaven, Mass., says: "The terrible disease fastened on me. My days were numbered. Could not wash my hands or face and had to be fed. Dr. Hunter said he could cure me, and in a few days I was able to walk up and down stairs." Jan. 13, 1896: "I am in all respects a different man." Jan. 22, 1896: "My lungs feel as if they had been washed out and the diseased tubes cleaned off." Feb. 11, 1896: "I walked three miles today. A short while ago I could not walk to my sitting-room."

Mr. J. L. Patrick, 79 Smith Street, Atlanta, Ga., says: "My wife's condition is a great deal better. She has gained seven pounds. Yours was the only treatment to control her cough. Her rapid improvement is remarkable."

Mrs. Crittenden, wife of the Rev. Orrin Crittenden, Mt. View, Cal., says: "No more hemorrhages; soreness all gone; no chills or fever. I would not have been alive but for your treatment."

Mr. Mendenhall, of Harper Bros., N. Y. City, says: "Treated by five physicians; could not walk a block; coughed and expectorated matter. Dr. Hunter cured me."

Mr. Lambert Miller, of H. B. Claflin Co., N. Y. City, says: "I had severe pains in lungs and head; throat like raw beef; abcess at base of brain. Am fully recovered and thank Dr. Hunter for it."

Mr. Lydell Whitehead, 517 W. 15th St., N. Y. City, says: "Had coughs, pains in chest, lungs sore, nervous and short of breath. Under Dr. Hunter's care I gained 35 lbs., and am now well."

Mr. A. L. Peer, 179 Washington St., Newark, N. J., "had 2 hemorrhages, lost 40 lbs." Treated by Dr. Hunter, the hemorrhages ceased, to the amazement of his former physicians. "Dr. Hunter saved my life."

Prof. J. B. Cummings, of New Wilmington, Lawrence Co., Penn., consulted Dr. Hunter about his son, Rev. T. J. Cummings, and this is what he writes: "Dr. Neve, F. R. C. S., has twice examined me and reports my lung completely healed. Under God this restoration is due to your treatment." Mr. Henry Brown, 118 West St., N. Y. City; Miss Emily Klearman, 513 Ann St., West Hoboken; Mr. Job Cassidy, 232 E. 34th St., N. Y. City; Mr. A. O. Lotze, 1,625 1st Avenue, N. Y. City; Mr. David Hiscox, 390 Webster Avenue, L. I. City; all were diagnosed by their physicians as consumptives but are now cured by Dr. Hunter's treatment.

Mrs. Edward Raynor, Bensonhurst, L. I., "coughed up bloody matter; had hectic fever and night sweats; was nervous and lost flesh. Completely restored."

Patrick Coery, 115 Columbia St., Brooklyn, says: "I had asthma and bronchitis and could not do a day's work. Now I feel like a new man."

Any of these will answer letters of inquiry, as will also Mr. J. H. Van Derveer, New Brunswick, N. J.; Mrs. R. L. Morrell, Port Washington, N. Y.; Mrs. Milford Jones, Dover, N. J., who is "a living witness to the efficacy of Dr. Hunter's system of medicated air inhalation, having been cured of consumption after being declared a 'hopeless case.'"

E. M. Hunter, editor Vermont Record, Fairhaven, Vt.; Mrs. Thomas Eastman, Keansburgh, N. J.; Mr. C. W. Buck, P. O. Box 1,069, Denver, Col.; Professor Herring, Lutheran Seminary, Chicago, Ill.; Mrs. Holton, Kennett Square, Pa., and thousands of others.

The New York World, the Press, Advertiser, and other representative papers of New York City have investigated Dr. Hunter's success by interviewing his patients and have published the result to the world at large for the benefit of the afflicted.

After such a life's history and work as the Doctor's it is not to be wondered at that he grows impatient with the unwarrantable excitement over and importance given every new concoction or device presented to the public, whether with or without merit, knowing as he does that the condition to be met in every lung case, no matter how mild it may be, is too serious to be trifled with by nostrums which his experience has proved cannot even arrest for any time the disease that is sapping the patient's life. No one in the profession has the right to feel so strongly as this man of science who has given an ordinary lifetime to the study of lung maladies.

Dr. Hunter's treatment has passed from the region of theorizing, and become an established fact, verified by the word of reputable patients who do not hesitate to put their evidence on record. It remains but to congratulate sufferers from weak or diseased breathing organs that so far as human testimony can prove anything, the day of their recovery has dawned, if they are but wise enough to embrace their good fortune. They need no longer droop or dread that theirs will become "hopeless cases," while the inhalation of soothing, healing and germ-destroying remedies continue to work the undisputed cures it has done and is doing under Dr. Hunter's guidance.

COFFIN—In Brookline, very suddenly, March 2, Charles Carleton Coffin, aged 72 years.

NELSON—In Muncie, Ind., at the home of his father, Rev. George W. Nelson, of Bright's disease, aged 34 yrs. He was formerly pastor in Odebolt, Io.

MRS. SARAH BURROUGHS FOSTER,

Of West Springfield, Mass., a sister of the late Rev. E. B. Foster, D. D., former pastor of John Street Church, Lowell, Mass., was fatally injured in Washington, D. C., Monday, Feb. 10. In attempting to cross a street Mrs. Foster was knocked down by a bicycle ridden by a man with gray hair and a white face. The rider disappeared, leaving his victim in an unconscious condition. She was carried to the Emergency Hospital, and, after recovering consciousness, was removed to the home of her sister-in-law, where she died Feb. 13. Mrs. Foster was a teacher for many years.

Rev. Dr. Rankin, president of Howard University, at a brief service held in Washington, referred with feeling to his lifelong acquaintance and affection for the teacher of his early years. She was born in Hanover, N. H., April 21, 1818. Her burial took place Feb. 17 in Winchendon, Mass., from the home of her brother, Rev. Davis Foster, pastor of the North Congregational Church. A long, honored and useful life was thus brought to a sudden end.

RHODA A. BENSON

Died in Center Harbor, N. H., on the 20th ult., of pneumonia. She was born in Laconia, N. H., Jan. 24, 1818. She was a pupil of Mary Lyon at Mt. Holyoke and a lifelong friend of Miss Shattuck, who was a teacher in that institution for fifty years. In March, 1845, she married Rev. Almon Benson of Center Harbor and resided in that town during the remainder of her life. Three daughters and one son were born to them, all of whom survive her and mourn her loss. For more than thirty years her house, known as the Lake House, has been the summer resort of many a pleasure or health seeker. She was an earnest, faithful Christian and ever ready to contribute to every good cause. She was a woman of rare intellect and firm in her convictions of right and wrong.

DEACON CHARLES H. BLISS.

The Prospect Street Church of Newburyport, Mass., loses its most prominent member in the death of Deacon Charles H. Bliss, which occurred suddenly at Concord, N. H., Feb. 3, his age being 57 years. He was born in Putney, Vt., Dec. 16, 1838, being the youngest of three children. When five years old his father died, leaving him to the care of a Christian mother, and having been converted in early life he developed those sterling qualities of character which crowned his labors with success. When nineteen he started in the silk business on a borrowed capital of $100, and successfully continued the business until his death.

In 1861 he came to Newburyport, where he married a most estimable lady, and here he made his home until called to his reward. The deceased took a great interest in the welfare of his adopted city, always actively supporting all movements of moral or religious import. He served his city in several capacities. Having large real estate interests in the city, and being possessed of exceptionally good business judgment, he was an able and, moreover, a conscientious public servant.

Deacon Bliss united with the Prospect Street Church in September, 1863, and soon became a tower of strength in all its activities, exemplifying the exhortation of the apostle, "Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might." He had large personality and force of character, was strong in the Orthodox faith, pertinacious in his convictions of right and duty, yet, like a true Christian gentleman, was tolerant with those holding opposite views and opinions. He assumed the office of deacon Jan. 18, 1882, and was ever a most faithful and conscientious officer, giving largely of both time and money to further the cause of his Redeemer.

He loved his home and family, and no sacrifice was thought irksome in administering to the comfort or happiness of the dear ones. He was the father of eight children, seven of whom are living—Clara A. Bliss, professor of science, Wells College, Aurora, N. Y.; Dr. Edward L. Bliss, medical missionary A. B. C. F. M., stationed at Foochow, China; Deacon Charles A. Bliss, of the firm of N. D. Dodge & Bliss Co. of Newburyport; Maria W. Bliss, teacher of physical culture at Ogontz School, Ogontz, Pa.; Ernest W. Bliss, insurance, Newburyport; George H. Bliss, student at New Institute of Technology, Boston; and Mary C. Bliss, student at Wellesley College.

The widow and children are strongly united in the faith that was so dear to the heart of their departed loved one, and with his church and business associates thank God for the life of their devoted Christian worker.

THE RECORDER.

No. 1. WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 3, 1816. VOL. I.

PROSPECTUS

THE RECORDER

The projectors of this paper, in publishing the first number, conceive it proper to state briefly the objects which they solicit the patronage of the public. They wish it to be understood that their intended work will be conducted on principles which will promote the best interests of mankind. The Press is too mighty an engine to be wielded with impunity. Every writer, and especially every Editor of a Periodical Work, should feel a high responsibility, and should have important ends constantly in view. Neither a desire of private emolument, nor the wish to secure the triumph of a party, will justify any man in throwing upon the world his own writings, or the writings of others. That the Press has generally been under the control of weak and incompetent hands, our own country and abroad, is a fact lamented by many of our best men. There has of late been a fortunate demand for a Paper, which will leave the beaten track, and shun the mind of the reader to subjects of permanent importance, than those which occupy too many of the columns of public journals.

During the last quarter of a century the quick succession of wonderful events, the splendor of military enterprise, the rapidity of conquest, displayed in the effort to reduce the world under a single despotism, have excited a degree of interest and astonishment of which the grandeur of these events, and their intimate connexion with the welfare of the whole human race, gave them an unusual and universal importance. The public curiosity. Newspapers have been multiplied without number, and their columns have been filled with details of battles and revolutions, and the scheme of military ambition and conquest. The world is safe. Wars have ceased. The enterprise of the age is directed to other objects. The resources of nations are beginning to flow in other channels. Plans of the most extended benevolence are already in operation, the object of which is to diffuse Christian civilization throughout the world. To effect this purpose, Societies have been formed for translating the Bible into every language, and for sending Missionaries to every nation. These Societies already embody a considerable proportion of the population, wealth and intelligence of Great-Britain. They are patronized by the Emperor Alexander and are rapidly organizing throughout the vast Empire of Russia. They are extensively formed in other parts of Europe, and throughout the United States are rousing and concentrating an unheard of rapidity, the whole Christian enterprise of Christendom.

The deep interest, which the subject of the community have already manifested, and which every benevolent mind must feel, in tracing the progress of this glorious effort to increase human happiness, has given rise to the demand for a religious paper, which shall be accommodated to the new era of the world. To comply with this demand, which has been frequently continued, and expressed from different parts of our country, the Conductors of this paper are induced to offer the following Plan and Proposals.

Religious Intelligence.—One of the great and distinguishing features of the proposed Paper will be exhibited under the head of Religious Intelligence. This department will contain an account of the institution and progress of plans for promoting the cause of Religion and Morality. It will consist of the latest and most authentic accounts of the proceedings of Bible Societies, Missionary Societies, Tract Societies, Charitable Education Societies, Moral Societies, and of every Association whose object is to restore and promote the sanctity of the Sabbath, to encourage the execution of the Laws, or to suppress vice and discountenance vice. The Conductors of the Paper will make such arrangements as will enable them to give the most satisfactory information under this head. It is not intended nor desired by the Conductors of this Paper, to interfere with or diminish the circulation of Religious Magazines. On the contrary, it is confidently hoped, that the demand for these most useful publications will be increased by the influence of the RECORDER.

Morals.—The Conductors of this paper will endeavor to obtain the earliest information of all such events, as mankind usually deem important; and to arrange them in a condensed and methodical order. Care will be taken to distinguish between rumor and well-authenticated facts, and to establish a character for fairness and veracity.

Politics.—Political subjects will not be permitted to occupy a very large proportion of the Recorder. Politics are not the supreme concern of man: and it is no small evil to our country, that they have been suffered to usurp almost unreasonable share of public and private attention. Whenever passing events, or questions of great national importance, shall require the discussion and exposition of political principles, it will be the object of the Conductors to discuss such questions in a manner which shall be least offensive to candid minds of every political party. In measures which shall be proposed, or which are pending before the public, the Conductors will feel themselves at perfect liberty to express their opinions freely, and to support what they believe to be right; but they will carefully avoid every thing which shall have a tendency to wound the feelings of the supporters of any measure which they may oppose. In this way they hope to escape the imputation of being the partizans of any political party, while they will be found at the very foundation of civil society, will be cautiously preserved; and, in such cases, a tone of regret and sorrow will best comport with the feelings of the Christian patriot.

If the Conductors were to name the work, which, in their opinion, generally takes a wise, dignified, and truly Christian course, in regard to political questions, that work would be the Christian Observer. It will be their constant aim, [illegible] politics are introduced, to conduct the most candid political pieces in that highly valued publication.

This will astonish many good housekeepers and lead them to prize the Ferris Fine Cured Hams and Bacon more than ever before. Many providers have considered these choice Curings chiefly as relishes, but this comparison will show how prominent a place they should hold on every family table. The first grocers of the country furnish them as choicest American Curings, and yours will doubtless supply you if you insist upon having the Ferris Brand.

From the Chicago Tribune.

"In this new novel Mrs. Burnett has returned to her older manner. Here we find the author of 'That Lass o' Lowrie's.' It is decidedly the best story Mrs. Burnett has written since 'That Lass o' Lowrie's,' and is marked by the same virility. It is in an entirely new vein for Mrs. Burnett. The scene is laid in England, and the action takes place at the end of the seventeenth century, but the newest of 'new women' might envy the independence of Clorinda Wildairs. The story is one of the most original and vigorous that we have read in many a long day. Clorinda is a character that will live, for she is of real flesh and blood. The story of Clorinda's birth, and the death of her unhappy mother, is a touching one, and leaves a picture on the reader's mind that will not be forgotten. In Clorinda Mrs. Burnett has drawn an original character, and one that is not disappointing, in that she is consistent."

By Anthony Hope.

Uniform with Robert Grant's "The Bachelor's Christmas."

"His 'comedies' are real comedies and are played out by sundry young people in a way that would simply paralyze the old-fashioned hero and heroine. The first story, 'The Wheel of Love,' is perhaps the best of the half-dozen by reason of its unexpectedness. Mr. Hope's style is too well known to need illustration. The stories are without exception bright, racy, readable, clever."—London Literary World.

CLEG KELLY, ARAB OF THE CITY.

His Progress and Adventures.

By S. R. CROCKETT, author of "The Lilac Sunbonnet," "Bog-Myrtle and Peat," etc. 12mo. Illustrated. Cloth, $1 50.

It is safe to predict for the quaint and delightful figure of Cleg Kelly a notable place in the literature of the day. Mr. Crockett's signal success in his new field will enlarge the wide circle of his admirers. The lights and shadows of curious phases of Edinboro' life and of Scotch farm and railroad life are pictured with an intimate sympathy, richness of humor, and truthful pathos which made this new novel a genuine addition to literature. It seems safe to say that at least two characters—Cleg and Muckle Aleck—are likely to lead Mr. Crockett's heroes in popular favor. The illustrations of this fascinating novel have been the result of most faithful and sympathetic study.

THE EXPLOITS OF BRIGADIER GERARD.

By A. CONAN DOYLE, author of "The Stark Munro Letters," "Round the Red Lamp," etc. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

There is a flavor of Dumas's Musketeers in the life of the redoubtable Brigadier Gerard, a typical Napoleonic soldier, more fortunate than many of his compeers because some of his Homeric exploits were accomplished under the personal observation of the Emperor. His delightfully romantic career included an oddly characteristic glimpse of England, and his adventures ranged from the battlefield to secret service.

THE CHURCH HYMNARY. THE BEST HYMN BOOK

There are many good hymn books in the market, BUT ONLY ONE compact in form, beautiful in appearance, which contains over eight hundred separate tunes—more old and more new ones than any other collection—so arranged that with a very large proportion of the hymns a choice is given between one or more old familiar tunes and others of the modern English school. There is, therefore, no other book so well adapted to the varying needs and musical capacity of the churches.

Springfield, Mass., Dec. 26, 1895.

The North Congregational Church appointed an exceptionally able Committee to select a new hymn and tune book for use in public worship. The Committee spent several months in making a critical examination of the better class of books, and agreed unanimously upon The Church Hymnary, as being on the whole the best collection for practical purposes. Nine months use of the Hymnary confirms the judgment of the Committee. We are entirely satisfied with it, and constantly pleased by its riches. Another church has adopted the Hymnary upon reading the report of our Committee.

(Signed), REV. F. BARROWS MAKEPEACE.

Other churches are rapidly introducing it. Why should not yours get the best?

A returnable copy of The Church Hymnary, with Rev. Dr. Henry Van Dyke's Psalter, based on the Authorized Version, and Rev. Dr. T. Ralston Smith's Psalter, based on the Revised Version, will be sent free to clergymen and music committees for examination, with a view to introduction. A 32-page descriptive pamphlet containing specimen pages and price list sent free to any address.

We also send, on request, a 16-page pamphlet descriptive of the Authorized (Brantwood) Edition of the Works of John Ruskin, with introduction by Charles Eliot Norton.

Gathering Clouds.

A Tale of the Days of St. Chrysostom.

By FREDERIC W. FARRAR, D. D., Dean of Canterbury, Author of "The Life of Christ," "Darkness and Dawn," etc. Large crown 8vo, 606 pages, cloth, gilt top, $2 00.

"... will by-and-by become classic. It reproduces not only the habits and customs of the early days of Christianity, but also the spirit of the people, and the sacrifices which it cost a man to become a follower of the Nazarene.... I have read it all and my interest did not flag. There are not enough books of this kind, and this handsome volume is doubly welcome."—New York Herald.

"The subject, the style, the form into which the story is thrown, the knowledge displayed by the author of the persons and places alluded to, the Oriental settings of the scenes enacted in the tale, all tend to enchain the reader and fix his attention from the title page through the nearly six hundred pages which compose the book. ... The fiction which lends such a charm to the whole does not effect, or is not intended to affect, the historical facts."—Church Eclectic, Milwaukee.

MARKS THE

EIGHTIETH BIRTHDAY

OF

THE CONGREGATIONALIST,

The Continuator of The Boston Recorder, founded in 1816 by Nathaniel Willis.

NOTABLE FEATURES OF THIS NUMBER ARE:

A WORLD-WIDE SURVEY, BY EXPERTS, OF EVENTS AND MOVEMENTS IN THE LAST EIGHTY YEARS.

The Progress of the Christian Religion, by Bishop John F. Hurst, LL. D.

The Political Progress, by Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart.

The Advance of Congregationalism, by Prof. Williston Walker, D. D.

Advances in Education, by Hon. John Eaton.

Progress in Temperance Reform, by Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler, D. D.

The Progress of Women, by Frances J. Dyer.

A Broadside of Personal Opinions on Religious Journalism, by Editors of Religious Contemporaries.

A History of the Founding and Development of this Paper, from 1816 to the present time.

Forty-seven Years in the Composing Room, by Thomas Todd.

Anniversary Jottings.

Regular Departments as Usual.

IF the personal element is more marked than usual in this week's issue our readers will perhaps condone it in view of the special character of the number. Not until a full century of existence is rounded out will there be occasion again to bring into prominence the persons identified with The Congregationalist. Whether or not our own hands shall then be wielding the pen we hope to be among those who will have occasion to rejoice in a steady and symmetrical development of the paper in accordance with its history, its traditions and the opportunity confronting it week by week. Meanwhile, to our readers, our contributors, our brother editors and our many friends everywhere, whose generous esteem is at once our inspiration and reward, we extend an octogenarian's greeting and benediction.

Students of social conditions and philanthropists in goodly numbers gathered in New York city last week at the call of the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, to consider the model tenement house, its form, management and productive quality as an investment. Prof. E. R. L. Gould of Johns Hopkins University, who has investigated with thoroughness the operations of all the important model housing companies of Europe and the United States, says that ninety per cent. of those whose aim is avowedly commercial are earning profits equal to or beyond the ordinary rates for safe investments, while nearly all the semi-philanthropic or philanthropic organizations earn more than a savings bank rate.

Annual church meetings in England in some respects differ from those in this country. The Marylebone Presbyterian Church, London, began its annual meeting one evening last month by an address from a neighboring minister on The Purpose and Mission of the Church. This lasted till nine o'clock. Then the pastor, Dr. Pentecost, spoke an hour and a quarter. He said he had been asked by some of his congregation to resign, mainly because he preached so long sermons, but when he summarized the work that had been done, the large gain in the income, and contrasted the great congregations which filled the church with the thin audiences of some churches in the neighborhood whose pastors preached from ten to twenty minutes, he had his people with him and they gave him hearty cheers. In one thing only does Dr. Pentecost seem to have made a mistake. He read to his congregation an anonymous letter he had received, thus giving to the writer of it undeserved honor. The wise rule for a minister, as for an editor, is to burn unread all anonymous communications.

THE LIFE OF A RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

We place a copy of The Congregationalist of 1896 beside a copy of The Boston Recorder of 1816. In shape, size, number of departments, use of illustrations and variety of subjects treated, the contrast between the two copies is marked. But the purpose which led to the founding of the paper is the purpose which continues its publication today, and its present plan is the unfolding, under the administration of many minds, of what lay in the mind of its first editor. Mr. Willis, looking back on his editorial career when near its close, recalled that purpose in the letter of which we reproduce a facsimile this week. He was the first to realize the idea of a religious newspaper.

One has only to place The Congregationalist beside any of the religious weeklies of Great Britain to see how differently this idea has been developed in the two countries. In the United States, while the same general features are found in the leading papers, denominational and undenominational, each has its own marked individuality, the result of its history. Doubtless no one of them is what its present editors would make it if they were to begin anew. Its topics, tone and modes of expression are inevitably influenced by precedent. Successive generations of editors have taken up their work with The Congregationalist, many of them widely known as men of positive opinions, yet the paper has influenced them not less than they have influenced it. The newspaper is an institution. Its life is continuous. It receives into itself the vital forces of those who labor for it, forces which do not cease when their authors die. For this reason the editorial utterances of the newspaper are most weighty when they are impersonal. The writer of them, if he has the genius of an editor, can never be oblivious to the truths for which the paper has stood and the aims it has held. His business is to interpret, in the light of the knowledge of today, the opinions and convictions which are its power, so that they may influence most effectively the present generation.

The Congregationalist is the resultant of intellectual and spiritual movements which have profoundly affected the life of our country and which have been especially potent in forming the character of the Congregational denomination. It began as the Boston Recorder at the time when the Unitarian defection first declared itself openly and it was published in the town which was the center of that disturbance. Though it did not at first take any prominent part in that controversy, the effect of the long and bitter conflict is plainly seen in its pages, and its influence grew to be positive and unmistakable for those evangelical doctrines which in the main have prevailed among Christian churches. Home missions were in their infancy and foreign missions had hardly begun to interest the churches extensively when the Recorder was born. Its voice was early lifted in behalf of that greatest movement of this century, the giving of the gospel of Christ to all the world, which has everywhere opened the closed doors of nations, in whose path commerce and civilization have followed and in which alone the idea of the brotherhood of the human race has come to be regarded as a practicable aim.

A church here and there had started a Sunday school, though often with opposition, but the systematic development of Bible study which distinguishes this generation was as yet unthought of. Christian denominations, through their pulpits, then emphasized their differences of belief much more earnestly than they now do and many editorials and contributions filled the pages of this paper, demonstrating the superiority of Calvinism over Arminianism, showing that sprinkling and not immersion was the feasible, sensible and Scriptural mode of baptism, and proving that the primitive method of church government was not Episcopal but Congregational.

The denomination which this paper represents had hardly yet begun to realize the power of organization and for many years later was reluctant to assert its individuality, although, at the same time, the churches contended for the local independence of each, which could only be maintained through organized fellowship. The responsibility of Congregational churches for the education of their ministers was beginning to be realized in that broader sense which has led to the planting of academies and colleges so extensively throughout the country and which has so greatly promoted the advancement of popular education.

A reference to its early issues will show that the Recorder from its start realized that it had a mission to hold up a high ideal of citizenship, to survey political movements from a religious point of view, and to teach men that the government created and supported by the people is directly responsible to God. As years went by its zeal increased in opposition to slavery, at least for a time, and in the advocacy of temperance and other moral reforms. But when its energy in these and other vital matters came to be felt by many to be inadequate, The Congregationalist arose beside it to represent younger and more vigorous elements. After the close of the Civil War the two papers blended into one, inheriting all that was valuable in both, till for the sake of convenience the title of the younger paper came to stand for the united life of the two.

We have secured for this anniversary number, from able writers, historical sketches of the more important of the movements, some of which we have here alluded to, which have affected the life of this paper. For eighty years it has each week chronicled the progress of these movements and has spoken its word concerning them. This word, we rejoice to say, does not in all cases repeat today the opinions expressed in former years. The Congregationalist has not always been fully conscious of the advance it was making, perhaps is not now. It condemned distinctive features of the creeds of other denominations as subversive of the truth, while it was rejoicing in their works. It stood aggressively on Paul's precept, "I suffer not a woman to teach," while it was commending the teaching by women in public schools and Sunday schools and was exhibiting the excellence of their teaching in its own columns. But such things as these have simply marked the transition which has been going on through the effect of the clearer light of experience. We believe the paper is today true to the spirit of those who have controlled its policy throughout its history, and speaks as they would speak if they were here to interpret truth in the light of present events; and the present editors hope that their successors will also hold steadfastly to essential truths and interpret them reverently and fearlessly in the light of their own time.

The life of the newspaper, while it gives constant evidence of the influence of forces which created its history, must be broad enough in its sympathies to include its entire constituency. It ought always to speak the voice of the many in their best moods and to express their highest aspirations. No convictions are so strong as religious convictions, no feelings so intense as religious feelings. The impulse of controversialists to denounce brethren who do not agree with them is often turned against the newspaper which will not do their bidding in denunciation.

Sometimes they threaten it, perhaps not realizing how hard it is to kill an institution which has in it the vitality of many lives. But that life can be preserved and its vitality increased only by crediting all brethren with honorable motives and by expecting that those who oppose one another, while faithfully seeking the guidance of the same Holy Spirit, will eventually be led into the truth and ought, meanwhile, to be helping one another to attain it. That this disposition is growing, not only within denominations but between them, is pleasantly shown by the expressions of fraternal regard for The Congregationalist, published in our columns this week, and which we heartily reciprocate.

The complex life of today is in striking contrast with the simpler life of eighty years ago from which it has evolved. To interpret this life and in any degree to guide it aright is now a far more difficult task than it then was. The religious newspaper, in its equipment and in the plans and work of those who have it in charge, must correspond to the complexity of the social life of the time. Not less now but more does the paper, while inheriting and embodying the forces of the past, in order to sustain its noblest life and work need the prayers of all its readers, their sympathetic interest in all that it attempts to do, their sense of ownership in it as an institution representing what is most vital to them and as a life and spirit strengthening and extending in their name truth and love among men.

THE STRUGGLE FOR EASTERN SUPREMACY.

The last fifteen months are likely to go on record as one of the most memorable periods of the century in the political history of Europe. Without declared war a conflict has been carried on in which many nations have been engaged and with momentous results, which already begin to appear. Turkey has been and continues to be the chief field of battle. The leading contestants are England and Russia, with Germany, France, Italy and Austria each favoring the side which seems for the time most likely to promote its own interests. The victims have been mostly Armenians, but their sufferings have been merely incidental in the eyes of the principals in the struggle. The sultan, able, unscrupulous and a skillful diplomatist, has, after all, been a tool in the hands of the strongest.

In this conflict England has been ingloriously beaten, and Russia has won a victory which promises her more substantial gains than any other which she has secured during the present century. Up to the end of November last the advantage was with England, but, when Lord Salisbury faced the final opportunity to send his fleet, then waiting at the Dardanelles, to Constantinople, his courage gave way and he lost the battle. Today Russia is mistress of the East, and this not because of her own skill and prowess but because of the weakness of her foe. Germany and France turn to Russia because they believe her the most powerful. With other nations, they are jealous of England's territorial aggressions and commercial greed. Russia uses China to gain a long-desired foothold in the far East, and England dare not protest. It is more likely that she will enter into some kind of alliance with her rival and seek to gain by concessions some part of what she dare not use force to secure.

Constantinople, which Russia has desired for centuries, is fruit ripe to her hand. She could pluck it today if she chose to do so. But she probably will not do this. She will for the time remain nominally the ally, really the ruler of the sultan. Thus she may gain in name, as well as in fact, without war, what she has repeatedly fought for in vain. Meanwhile her requests to Turkey will be law, and they will be such as to prepare the way gradually for more complete control. The dominance of Russia over Turkey and China implies great changes in the map of Europe and Asia. During the last four centuries she has multiplied her territory more than thirty-fold. She has never held the mastery of the whole situation so completely as now. What does this bode for the future?

Russia is nominally a Christian nation. But her government is as despotic as that of Turkey, her persecution as relentless. It is coming to be evident that she, more than any other nation except Turkey, is responsible for the massacres of the Armenians, which she has encouraged for her own political advantage. We do not expect to see a continuance on a large scale of these atrocities, the greatest disgrace of the nineteenth century. The object for which they were instigated has now been accomplished. The stronger hand of Russia will restrain the cruelties which Turkey permitted and put an end to the murders which Turkey ordered.

But the policy and ambition of Russia, not less than of Turkey, are in the way of the progress of the human race. She is the uncompromising foe of civil and religious liberty, and she will use all measures in her power to repress both. It was reported a few days ago that she had requested Turkey to expel all English and American missionaries. The report has not been confirmed. It is remarkable how often rumors of movements of Russia have been published, then denied, and at last proved true. However much Americans may dislike the arrogance which the British goverment sometimes displays, and the commercial superiority which she maintains, it may be regarded as a settled fact that the interests most dear to us have suffered a heavy blow in the defeat which has fallen upon Great Britain. Her loss of prestige is a loss to the human race. The United States may not be directly interested in the Eastern question, but this conflict, which has resulted so disastrously thus far to our mother country, has made the problems before our government more complicated and its future more difficult to forecast.

We cannot turn from contemplating these facts without a glance at the more hopeful view. Human hands which hold the destinies of empires are of short continuance. God is over all. Many times in history sudden and unexpected events have changed the fate of nations. We can only wait and pray and do our part to uphold righteousness, to plead for freedom from human tyranny and to extend the knowledge of the truth. Then we can trust the Supreme Ruler to guard his own and to carry his purposes to final triumph.

Prize prayers, the Christian Leader thinks, would be as appropriate as prize sermons for the Sunday newspapers. But judging from what we have seen of the sermons which won the prizes from the Newspaper Association, we doubt if competitive prayers would get more attention than the competitive sermons, and we fear they would be addressed to the same kind of an audience.

ORDERING ONE'S LIFE FOR CHRIST.

To be a Christian means to belong to Christ, and to belong to him means to give to one's life the same character which his had. Of course the conditions and surroundings of his earthly career were very different in some respects from those of our own. Yet the principles which ruled his may rule ours and will produce fruits similar in essential character, and, to some degree, in outward appearance. We always can ask ourselves what Jesus would think, say and do if he were now here in the body and in our circumstances, and, if we resolutely guide ourselves by the responses which an enlightened conscience makes to this question, we cannot go far astray. At any rate he will appreciate the rightness of our motive.

If we try to live thus, as he did, or would, live, our relations to others in every department of life will illustrate our imitation of him. Alike in the home circle and in the neighborhood, in the activities of the church, in the choice of pleasures, in the engrossments of business or professional life, in the quality of our patriotism and in the outgoings of our sympathies and helpful endeavors to the world at large, we shall be Christ's men and women, and sooner or later the fact will be recognized. Mere witness-bearing of this sort wins a blessing and it also exerts a mighty influence. And when its power is augmented by active, aggressive, yet discreet and loving, endeavor to win others to love and serve him, it is sure to reap a worthy harvest in due time.

Ought we not to realize to ourselves far more than most of us do what a privilege it is to have this opportunity and this power! Every person of any nobility of spirit shrinks from living a useless life and desires to be a positive force among men. Christ offers us the opportunity to exert a tremendous and eternal influence of the most beneficial sort if we will but choose to shape our lives after his. His Spirit also will aid us hour by hour. History abounds in instances of men and women who have made themselves great in this manner. Each of us knows some who are succeeding more or less fully in the effort to do so. Why are we not all intent upon the same aim? The only true success is that secured by ordering one's life after the life of Christ.

CURRENT HISTORY.

Massachusetts's Dead Statesman.

The death of Frederick T. Greenhalge, governor of the commonwealth of Massachusetts, March 5, after a comparatively brief illness has shocked and saddened his fellow-Americans, for he was known far beyond the confines of Massachusetts as an executive of rare ability, a gentleman of culture and a Republican who thought for himself and expressed his thoughts with fervor and grace. Rarely has Massachusetts lost an official so respected by all classes and parties, so beloved by its citizens, and had the Greenhalge family consented his funeral would have been a most imposing pageant. Massachusetts's governors of late have been called upon to serve as figureheads at social functions to a degree unknown elsewhere in the Union, and there are many who contend that if Governor Greenhalge had spared himself more, confined himself to legitimate official duties, he would be living today. This opinion is so prevalent that the sorrow of the people is intensified as they reproach themselves with their selfishness and thoughtlessness. The commonwealth is fortunate in having so worthy and able a man as Lieut Gov. Roger Wolcott to step into the place left vacant by Governor Greenhalge.

Governor Greenhalge's career is valuable for its revelations respecting the possibilities of American life. The son of an English mechanic, and born in England, he became governor of a commonwealth as American as exists. Born in the Church of England, he chose the Unitarian fold, and yet made his most bitter political and personal enemies by his fearless defense of the rights of Roman Catholics under the American Constitution. After serving a term in Congress, where he won notice by his intellectual ability rather than by his invariable wisdom, in due time (1893) he became governor of Massachusetts. And then, steadied by the responsibilities of his office, he began a career of indifference to partisanship or personal welfare which revealed rare courage and unusual devotion to the common weal. Obedient to the promptings of his conscience and the ideals of the Bible and of the fathers of American institutions, he as an executive exercised the veto power with an indifference to corporate greed or proscriptive military orders which won him the admiration of the commonwealth, while as a party leader he declared boldly against sectarian bigotry at a time when many other Republican leaders were pandering to it or dodging.

Spain and the United States.

A conference between committees of the Senate and the House has led to the acceptance by the Senate committee of the resolutions on Cuba which passed the House, and the Senate will probably ratify the action of its committee. No attempt to change the resolution from the concurrent to the joint form was made and, when finally adopted, it will have just as much weight with the President as the opinion of Congress has with him—no more and no less. Speeches made by Senators Hawley and Hale indicate that there are some men in the Senate who have not gone daft in pursuit of war. The Spanish minister in Washington seems to have demonstrated that Senators Sherman and Lodge, in making some of their charges, were not relying on data of the most trustworthy quality, and if he convinces them of their error they will owe some reparation to Spain and their countrymen, for their epithets and their denunciations of Spain and General Weyler seem to have had more to do with the popular indignation in Spain and the violence done to American consulates there than the position assumed by Congress. Recognition or non-recognition of the Cuban rebels as belligerents is one thing and rabid denunciation of Spain is another. It is quite probable that Spain is testing the feeling of other European courts respecting their willingness to aid her should she become involved with us, but her more pressing problems now are the suppression of the mobs and the Republicans that use the controversy with the United States as the pretext for venting their unrest and partisan hatred, and the procurement of funds with which to carry on the war in Cuba. Martial law has been proclaimed in Valencia, and the universities at Madrid, Barcelona, Valencia and Granada, the Cadiz Medical School and the College of Surgeons at Madrid have been closed by the government in order to suppress if possible the most vociferous and dangerous of the agitators—the students. In Cuba the rebel general, Maceo, seems to have had no difficulty in eluding the Spanish forces, escaping from their traps and forcing his way back toward Havana, and General Weyler has just issued a new proclamation, calling on the rebels to submit within fifteen days or suffer severest punishment if captured.

Britain's New Navy; the British Blue-Book on Venezuela.

Great Britain's practical way of defying her enemies and preparing for the worst is revealed in the decision of the ministry—accepted without a murmur by the opposition—and voiced in the speech of the First Lord of the Admiralty in the House of Commons last week, wherein Mr. Goschen asked Parliament to increase the naval appropriations for the ensuing year from £8,500,000 to £14,000,000 and order the construction of five new battle ships, thirteen cruisers, twenty-eight torpedo boats, new docks at Gibraltar, vast supplies of ordnance and provide for the payment of a large increase in the navy's enlisted men. And this at a time when Great Britain has eight battle ships, twenty-one cruisers and forty torpedo boats now under construction. Mr. Goschen's recommendations were received with cheers, and subsequently indorsed by Lord Rosebery. No wonder the German emperor, seemingly bent on a clash with Great Britain, clamors for appropriations for new ships of war; no wonder British merchants enter with confidence upon investments of capital in far-away lands, sure that their property will be protected, whether on the high seas or on soil over which floats a flag other than the British.

The publication in London—and to some extent in this country—of the contents of the Blue-Book, edited by Sir Frederick Pollock, containing in its more than 400 pages the case of Great Britain in the dispute with Venezuela, has given satisfaction to those of the British who consider her case irrefutable. But it has not silenced the criticism of those who say, "If so strong, why the hesitation in the past about submitting the dispute to arbitration?" or the clamor of those who demand that Lord Salisbury must hasten to provide for an amicable settlement of the difficulty. An advance copy of this important document was sent at the earliest moment to our commission, which is expecting the receipt of a similar argument from Venezuela soon. With these briefs before them they can proceed to utilize the expert testimony which they have summoned, and their own power of discrimination. Professor Burr of Cornell University has been selected as an expert to aid the commission in massing historical evidence respecting European settlements in the disputed territory, and Justin Winsor of Harvard has just reported to the commission the result of his examinations of several hundred maps.

Italy's Reverse in Africa.

At a time in her history when every ounce of her energy and every lira of her wealth should have gone toward strengthening her internal economy and qualifying her for bearing with greater ease her share of the burden imposed by membership in the Triple Alliance, Italy succumbed to the African colonial fever and laid claim to Tunis. France subsequently deprived her of this territory, and then she laid claim, England consenting, to the territory bordering on the Red Sea, including the district now known as Erythrea and the ancient empire of Abyssinia, an area including 637,000 square miles. Driven forward by her "Jingoes" in the attempt to colonize and conquer this territory, and contrary to the advice of her wisest statesmen, Italy has poured her troops into Abyssinia, meeting with reverses at the hands of the hardy mountaineers, derived no profit and incurred much debt by her administration of the colony of Erythrea, and incurred at every step of late the thinly veiled hostility of Russia, whose agents are now at work in Abyssinia, and between whom and King Menelek there seems to be a thorough understanding, based ostensibly on the sympathy that naturally exists between adherents of the Greek and the Coptic Churches, but really due to the diplomatic and political ends which Russia has in view. For the last six months the reports from Abyssinia concerning the progress of the Italian army of conquest have been far from flattering to Italian pride or reassuring to those who realized what failure meant. Not only have the Abyssinians all that courage and resolution commonly attributed to mountaineers, and all the advantage that comes from fighting a defensive battle among mountains where the enemy can be trapped at will, but they are supplied with the best of weapons. The Italians, on the other hand, have been poorly equipped, venality tainting the military as well as the civil service of Italy and bringing its inevitable curse upon soldiers as well as legislators and electors. It is not surprising, therefore, that in the recent battle at Adowa the Italians lost three thousand troops, sixty or more cannon, two generals, and sustained an overwhelming defeat. Nor is it surprising that since the news arrived in Italy there has been a state of affairs there bordering dangerously near on revolution. Premier Crispi and his cabinet have resigned despite the willingness of King Humbert to retain them in power. Marquis Rudini, who, when formerly premier, was lukewarm in his loyalty to the Triple Alliance and hostile to the African campaign, has come into power again, and the question of the hour is whether Italy is to persist in its endeavor to conquer Abyssinia and thus add much to its already staggering debt, or withdraw and acknowledge its error in beginning a career of colonization and conquest.

Back of this question, and even more momentous in their import, are the questions of the stability or instability of the Italian state, the threatened fall of the House of Savoy, the severing of the Triple Alliance and Italy's future relations with France, Great Britain, Austria and Germany. Thus far, though the popular wrath at official incompetency and venality has found vent in a most virulent, impressive way, there seems to be no reason for thinking that a change from a constitutional monarchy to a republic will be made now or soon, but the statesmen of Europe realize that the battle of Adowa assailed, if it did not shatter, the Triple Alliance, and that a new deal and a recasting of European affairs has begun and even now is under way. If France could be made to see that, as a French statesman has just said, "Russia is like socialism; she asks for everything and gives nothing in return," and Italy could be induced to turn toward France—a natural ally—rather than Germany, it might be possible to form a new alliance of Great Britain, France, Italy and Austria, which could hope to resist the onset of Russia in Eastern Europe and in Asia, which we describe elsewhere.

NOTES.

It seems unkind to remind the sultan that his promises to Miss Barton have not been redeemed in the form of irades. Will they ever be redeemed?

The House of Representatives of the Massachusetts legislature has wisely decided to reject the adverse report of the committee on liquor legislation, and has given the bill intended to grant local option to city wards a place on the calendar.

C. P. Huntington, the Pacific coast railroad prince, admitted before a Senate investigating committee last week that the Central Pacific Railroad had spent more than $2,000,000 during the last thirty years to influence legislation at Washington.

Mr. and Mrs. Ballington Booth have rented rooms in the Bible House, New York city, and begun to enroll their followers in the new organization, as yet unnamed. Cooper Union, New York city, was crowded with enthusiastic supporters last Sunday evening. The auxiliaries of this new organization will be enrolled under the name The Defender's League.

Sir Wilfred Laurier, leader of the Liberals and a French Canadian Roman Catholic, has virtually defied the hierarchy by his refusal to support the remedial bill now before the Dominion Parliament. His statement of his position and his attack upon Sir Charles Tupper and the Conservative party was a forensic effort of high order. Manitoba has heard from Ontario that she has the moral support of that Province, and in the Manitoba legislature notice has been given that, if the Dominion persists in forcing the issue, a commission will be called for to investigate and report on what Manitoba has gained or lost by entering the Confederation.

IN BRIEF.

Read what our English correspondent says on page 441 about the arrangements which are being made in England for our Pilgrimage next June. It is hardly probable that such an opportunity will be again provided, for a number of years at least. As the Columbia is one of the most popular of the ocean greyhounds, the demand for her rooms for that trip is very great, nearly all those not reserved for our party being already taken. It is important that those who are hoping to go on the Pilgrimage, who have not already booked, communicate with us promptly.

We regret that Mr. Dexter's absence in Europe prevents him from lending his valuable aid to the making of this issue. He will also be missed in the group of editorial workers, whose picture appears elsewhere.

This is the largest, and we are disposed to believe the most valuable, number of the paper ever issued.

Our next week's issue will present a picture of the late Charles Carleton Coffin with an article calling attention to his life and work.

An antidote to pessimism—the series of articles in this anniversary number on the world's progress during the last eighty years.

Dr. Quint had prepared an article of a reminiscent character for this issue, but invincible limitations of space compel us to defer its publication until next week.

One feature of The Recorder and Congregationalist we commend to the attention of all bookmakers and authors—it was thoroughly indexed from the very first.

"Ian Maclaren" has been made a D. D. by St. Andrew's University. Wait until he gets here next fall, and be prepared for the bestowment of an L. H. D. and an LL. D.

The Home Journal of New York city, in its issue of Feb. 26, celebrated fifty years of useful life since George P. Morris and N. P. Willis founded it in 1846, and gave it the motto, "We should do our utmost to encourage the beautiful, for the useful encourages itself." This week we pay tribute to Nathaniel Willis—the father of N. P.—and chronicle the evolution of a journal for which N. P. Willis occasionally set type and in which his earliest poems appeared. We congratulate The Home Journal on its vitality, virility and enterprise.

Eighty years ago this week the Boston Recorder reported a debate in the House of Representatives, in which Hon. James Tallmadge of New York State vainly tried to induce that body to prohibit the transportation or handling of mails on Sunday. He was defeated by a vote of 100 to 35. Today Sunday labor in the post offices and postal service of the country is less than Mr. Tallmadge would have prophesied immediately after his reverse. It may not be reduced as much as it could or should be, but it is restricted by officials and by the personal interests of those within the service who dislike perpetual labor, and by public opinion, which never has clamored for Sunday door to door delivery though tolerating Sunday collections.

The officers and friends of the Congregational Home Missionary Society earnestly trust that the receipt of the Stickney legacy, which we announced last week, will not check the gifts of the people. This society has before it at present two distinct financial problems—how to make good the deficit of last year and how to meet the obligations of the present current year which closes March 31. It still looks to the General Howard Roll of Honor for the discharge of the old debt, while the receipt of the legacy ought not to be considered by the churches as relieving them of the responsibility of fully supporting the regular work of the society, enabling it to enter upon a new year unembarrassed and with fresh courage.

Floods last week brought severe distress to many New England towns and cities where bridges, factories and homes were swept away. We are reminded that after such a storm a minister preached a sermon in a certain church, vividly depicting the destruction and terror caused by the flood and appealing for generous gifts to aid the sufferers. While the collection was being taken the choir sang, exultantly:

The waters gather, they rush along—thanks be to God!
The stormy billows are high—thanks be to God!
Their fury is mighty—thanks be to God!

As in music, so in the study of the Bible, some people seem to think it is discredited if its truths do not equally fit all times and circumstances.

Our congratulations to The Christian Leader of Boston in its new dress and new form The Church, the new Protestant Episcopal journal which is to voice the sentiments of Churchmen of the Massachusetts type, resembles The Critic in form and typography, and is disposed to be tolerant toward the "sects," judging from No. 1. Our Day has passed from the control of Mr. Joseph Cook and become the property of Mr. F. L. Chapman, owner of The Ram's Horn, who has the promise of the regular aid of such men as Prof. R. T. Ely, Hon. Carroll D. Wright, Booker T. Washington and Anthony Comstock in producing a religious monthly that will be as full of life and snap as The Ram's Horn. No. 1 under the new management is most creditable to its new proprietor. The death of Rev. Charles G. Fisher, proprietor and editor of the Reformed Church Messenger of Philadelphia, is a serious loss to the Reformed Church.

STAFF CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM NEW YORK.

The face of Rev. Alexander Huntington Clapp, D. D , is familiar to many of our readers, particularly to the older generation. He was born among the hills of western Massachusetts, at Worthington, Sept. 1 1818, graduated at Yale College in 1842 and, after a theological course in the same city, was ordained Oct. 14, 1846 He has had but two pastorates, the first at Brattleboro, Vt., from 1846 to 1855, the second over the Beneficent Church, Providence, R I., from 1855 to 1865. His was a fruitful ministry and one that bound him to his people by ties that have not ceased to hold their strength, though many years have passed since the outward connection was dissolved. In 1865 he yielded to the importunate call of the American Home Missionary Society, serving as its secretary from that date to 1877 and as treasurer from 1878 on to 1894. Since then he has been editor of the Home Missionary, the organ of the society. No inmate of the Bible House occupies a larger place in the esteem and affection of his fellow-workers and he is held in equally high regard in Congregational circles everywhere.

After more than twenty years' impersonal talk with The Congregationalist's readers the time seems to have come to drop for once the "pen name" and speak to these friends plainly face to face. And, ignoring for the time the passing events of the metropolis, it has been suggested that the writer indulge in a brief retrospect of the years in which he has been more or less familiar with this journal's history. If he be found too personal and garrulous, remember that he is far past the threescore and ten and is following the line laid down by "the manager."

The undersigned is indebted to The Congregationalist for associations that have brought him some of life's happiest and most profitable hours. Let him then speak here as grateful affection dictates. He will begin by owning to a strong and, he believes, a well-founded—as it has been a steadily deepening—liking for the paper from before the time of his own association with it.

Not becoming personally interested in religion till 1836 he was not "brought up" on religious newspapers. His earliest ideas of them were derived from The Congregationalist's grandfather, The Puritan, under the sway of Dr. Parsons Cooke. This may account for some things of which no more need be said. His first really warm practical interest in such reading came with his earliest pastoral care, in Brattleboro, Vt., where he found, as do all pastors, the need of just that help which a rightly conducted religious family paper can best give. That wide-awake, reading people needed no urging to welcome such a visitor to their homes, and their pastor's interest was quickened by a letter from Dr. Edward Beecher, then its editor, inviting him to become a regular correspondent from Vermont. Then began occasional contributions, until imperiled sight compelled him to leave that ideal, loving parish in 1853. They were resumed in Providence, 1855–1865, and a closer familiarity with the paper and its moving spirits came in these years with membership of the Winthrop Club of Boston, founded by Drs. Dexter and A. L. Stone, most of whose members were hand in glove with them in molding the character and shaping the policy of the new paper —new not merely by its recent "new birth," but still newer in its spirit and methods.

In 1865 began the writer's service at the Bible House, New York, whence occasional letters found their way to these columns until there came from the office a proposition for regular weekly letters and a free range over all departments of the paper. Then began—Oct. 14, 1875—steady work for these columns, covering, until other duties narrowed the circle, a wide and varied range of topics—editorials, book reviews, Sunday school lessons, etc., besides the weekly letter—till January, 1878, usually under the signature of "Winthrop," and since, until now, under that of "Huntington."

The time given to the work has, on his side, been well repaid. It has kept him in touch with the progress of the denomination in all lines. It has given pleasant and healthful variety to life that else might easily have run into monotonous routine. It has given some ground for hope that souls here and there may have found something more than the entertainment of a passing hour—some help in solving life's problems, in meeting its reverses, fulfilling its duties, resisting its temptations and reaping its rewards. It has brought him into friendly contact with many hundreds of ministers and private Christians whom it has been a pleasure, a profit and an honor to know. This fellowship in such a royal brotherhood he has increasingly felt to be one of life's chief prizes. Alas! how many of these does this hasty backward look find starred as already shining in the heavenly constellations.

Foremost among these naturally at this time stands the stalwart form and beams the genial face of Henry Martyn Dexter, whose acquaintance and friendship, though he was two classes in advance, had been enjoyed years before in Yale College. There he was one of the editors of the Yale Literary, in whose pages, through his encouragement, some of the writer's earliest attempts at putting his thoughts on paper were made. That kindly cherishing may have had something to do with the invitation to these columns.

How many happy visits to the editorial sanctum up under the roof arise in memory. The cordial college hail, "Hello, Alec," and the old-time welcome to that little corner "den," with its one chair made for the time to do duty for two. May we not be farther apart in the hereafter!

Another, C. A. Richardson, never too busy with the endless work, nor too perturbed by the countless annoyances of a "managing editor's" office to give the most genial, smiling greeting of a friend to one who first met him in that office as a total stranger. Sharply critical, seeking from all contributors some near approach to his high ideal as to what the paper should be, he seemed to some cold and exacting, even imperious. By this writer he is remembered as invariably kind and lenient in his judgment. The most self-confident could not ask or receive fairer consideration, even from his present beloved and indulgent successor—and other members of the honored staff.

Personal familiarity with the re-creators of this journal enables the writer to say that no one idea was more constantly in their minds than that of adapting their work to usefulness in the family. It was deliberately agreed to leave to other publications their chosen special features—science, literature, controversy, entertainment —and to hold The Congregationalist true to the office of aiding pastors, teachers and working members of our churches in the Christian nurture of the households of their parishes.

Another urgent motive for the making anew of The Congregationalist was the felt need of a new style of defense of the gospel doctrines. The "Unitarian defection" was not so far away but that its advocates were very lively, and their teachings were heard in every home. To counteract their influence in "orthodox" families, it was seen that some more ready, nimble, mobile weapons were needed than the ponderous tomes of learned theologians, well suited to the training of candidates for the ministry; something more readable and winning for "the plain people" than were the bitter, rasping, hate-rousing pamphlets of the professional controversialist. For these uses small arms are more effective than columbiads. What so well adapted to the desired end as was the weekly visitor to the household, treating controverted themes at once faithfully and kindly; valiant for the truth, but not harshly contentious; not swayed by various winds of doctrine; hospitable towards honest, independent thought, study and utterance—as hospitable, and only as hospitable, as the Bible is.

Another, and a foremost, object with these men was the unfolding, expounding and defense of the principles of Congregationalism. Many New England pastors, professors, church officers and members held strongly and lovingly to the Pilgrim doctrine and polity; but so many others felt that it was enough to enjoy, without disseminating the blessings inherited from the Fathers, that the young were growing up with little intelligent interest in and love for their precious birthright. Westward emigrants were learning its value by its loss; their efforts at planting our churches in the new country aroused inquiry and made converts, for whose instruction the new journal was just the needed thing. Its valiant yeoman's service in that line was, perhaps, the strongest attraction drawing Dr. Dexter to its editorship.

These men settled it, also, that their paper should persistently advocate all genuine reforms—in this line keeping ever at the forefront. Its strong advocacy of anti-slavery, temperance, social purity will be told by others in this issue—as should be also its stand for home and foreign missions, for Sunday schools, for the Union in the time of war, for education and a thoroughly qualified ministry, for the true Scriptural sphere of woman, for genuine revivals and now for the newest forward movements for lifting up the poor and degraded in our cities.

Nor should the present generation be allowed to forget the revolution this paper effected in the matter of book reviewing, by intelligence, candor and honesty making its literary department a trusted help to thousands unable to buy and read for themselves.

More than twenty years of this cherished connection ended, and less than three years lacking to round out life to fourscore—what wonder that the brain moves slowly and heavily and that the hand loses its cunning. Clearly the time is very near when another name than Huntington's must stand at the foot of these columns. That the place which soon will know him no more will be better filled cannot be doubted. That in all its departments improvements may be marked year by year through the lives of the present editors and a long line of worthy successors, making The Congregationalist, with the divine favor, an increasingly rich blessing to many generations, is the sincere prayer of

A. Huntington Clapp.

FROM THE INTERIOR.

Rev. Edward Franklin Williams was born at Uxbridge, Mass., July 22, 1832, graduated at Yale College in 1856, pursued his theological studies at three different seminaries, New Haven, Chicago and Princeton, graduating from the latter. The outbreak of the war led him South as an agent of the Christian Commission, and when the struggle was over he spent a year or two in Tennessee, as principal of the educational institution on Lookout Mountain. He was ordained Oct. 17, 1866, supplied churches in Rochdale, Mass., and St. Charles, Ill., and in 1867 took up his abode in Chicago, serving as pastor of the Tabernacle Church from 1869 to 1873, and of the South Congregational Church from 1873 to 1891. After his resignation he spent several years in travel and study abroad. Illinois College conferred upon him, in 1881, the degree of Doctor of Divinity. Dr. Williams has given himself unsparingly to the service of good causes and may fairly be considered one of the makers of Congregationalism in the city of Chicago. Not only there, but throughout the West is he known and honored for his industry and for the strength and purity of his intellectual and moral qualities.

It is now more than sixteen years since Mr. C. A. Richardson asked the present Chicago correspondent to write a letter to The Congregationalist every week. At first little was reported except news from our own churches. Gradually the outlook widened, till now whatever concerns the kingdom of God anywhere in the West is not thought to be outside the department intrusted the Western editor. Sixteen years ago we had nine Congregational churches within the city limits. Now there are seventy. Dec. 11, 1882, the City Missionary Society was organized, under whose fostering care forty-nine churches have been called into life, twenty-one of them brought to self-support. These twenty self-sustaining churches last year gave $3,700 to benevolence, and $58,000 for their own expenses. Meanwhile the Bohemian Mission has been founded, and the work begun by Deacon C. F. Gates and Rev. Dr. E. A. Adams carried forward with ever increasing success.

The gratifying conditions of today are due to the wisdom of leading men in the First, New England, Plymouth and Union Park Churches, which from the very beginning of our era of expansion have been aggressive Christian institutions, ready to further any work of promise and with personal service and large gifts push it forward to success. The branch churches started by the First and Union Park Churches have grown to be powerful organizations, and although this duty of organizing new churches now rests with the City Missionary Society we do not forget that these great churches and their pastors blazed the path which later workers have followed. We have been extremely fortunate in having had but one superintendent for our City Missionary Society, Rev. J. C. Armstrong, and substantially but one board of directors, although the directorship has from time to time been enlarged in order to render it more representative. Mr. Armstrong has been able through his knowledge of the city and his relations to the churches to do for our city missionary work what few men ever accomplish in a long life.

But growth has not been confined to Chicago. Advance along similar lines has been quite as marked in St. Louis, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Detroit, Omaha, Denver and in towns and cities whose names had hardly begun to be heard at the beginning of the eighties. During this period Dr. D. H. Pearsons has inaugurated his campaign of education or college founding. By his gifts Beloit and the Chicago Theological Seminary have been made first-class institutions and a constituency created for them which will provide for them as their necessities increase in the future. Drury also, Yankton, Fargo, Colorado Springs, Knox and how many other colleges have been recipients of his generosity! More than all, how many youth of both sexes are indebted to him for the means by which they have obtained a liberal education. But what has been done by Dr. Pearsons is simply a beginning, the putting in place of foundations on which others will surely build. Whole States during these years have come into prominence like the Dakotas, while the growth in wealth in older States like Wisconsin, Minnesota, Nebraska and Colorado has been almost beyond estimate. With this material prosperity we have constantly rejoiced at seeing that our churches and our schools and colleges were keeping pace.

But along with this outlook over the broad field which this Western post takes in are connected personal memories which are at once precious and sacred. The editor-in-chief of 1880 is, alas, no more with us. Neither is the managing editor, Mr. Richardson. Both have entered into their rest, never to be forgotten and honored by those who were associated with them in their work. Of both others will speak more fully than can be done in this brief letter. This may here be said, that no testimony to their worth which will be given by those who knew them more intimately than their Western representative can be more hearty than that which comes from his pen. Few men have ever been better fitted for the place they filled. As a manager of a great religious journal Mr. Richardson seemed to discern by intuition just what was wanted. As a Christian scholar of far larger acquirements than the majority of his friends suspected, as a historian of rare insight, as a writer of strong, convincing editorials, as a man who freely gave himself to serve others, Dr. Dexter has not had many equals.

In kindliness of feeling and sympathizing friendship and delightful companionship it would be difficult to say which of the two editors is deserving of the first place. It is enough that both gave to their Chicago associate a consideration far beyond his merits, but for which and the privilege of their friendship he will never cease to be grateful. That existing relations between the Boston force and the correspondent in Chicago are as friendly and delightful as in former years is only what might be anticipated from the character of the men who decide in their offices at No. 1 Somerset Street what shall make up the message which week by week they send out to the churches of our land.

For about six months in 1882, Dr. Arthur Little, now of Boston, then of the New England Church, Chicago, filled the writer's place during his absence abroad. Then came the well-remembered service rendered for nearly four years by Dr. Simeon Gilbert, so prominently and so long connected with the Advance. From 1891 to the summer of 1893, during an extended absence abroad, Rev. Q. L. Dowd of Winetka was responsible for the news which went East week by week from this metropolis. Since that date, with hardly an exception, the letters have borne a signature with which perhaps many have become only too familiar. To those of us who criticise our own work as if it were the work of others, it seems as if The Congregationalist had more than held its own, and were now a journal which no one who cares to be thoroughly in touch with all that concerns the denomination or the great religious movements in Europe and in the missionary fields can afford to do without.

That the wisdom of fourscore will continue to unite itself to the enthusiasm of youth through a long and increasingly prosperous and useful future is the firm conviction and earnest prayer of multitudes of the friends of The Congregationalist in the West.

FROM LONDON.

The London correspondent of The Congregationalist, Mr. Albert Dawson, is, as his picture indicates, a young man, whose career in journalism, covering now several years, has been a faithful and successful one. He is upon the editorial staff of the Christian Commonwealth and contributes every week a good portion of the material that brightens the pages of that ably conducted journal. Our readers have had an opportunity to appreciate his skill in preparing interview and character sketches through those already furnished us of Hugh Price Hughes, Robertson Nicoll, Professor Bruce, Professor McKenzie and others. Mr. Dawson is a fine specimen of the young men now coming forward to positions of responsibility and influence in England. He possesses the substantial qualities which we associate with men reared on the soil of Britain, but his wide sympathies and broad outlook prevent him from taking a narrow or insular view of men and movements. The Congregationalist has endeavored in past years to maintain a high grade of service in its foreign correspondence. Mr. Dawson is an altogether satisfactory successor to those who have filled this position in former years.

An Assistant for Pastor Thomas Spurgeon.

Doubtless it was purely accidental that Dr. Pierson's immersion took place just eighteen days before the annual meeting of the Tabernacle Church, at which it was known an assistant minister would be chosen, and it is not to be supposed, as certain malicious persons suggest, that any over zealous friend of the American divine was responsible for the information kindly communicated to the London papers after his baptism and before the Tabernacle meeting, that "a feeling of intense disappointment" had arisen amongst "a large number of members of the church" at the proposal to appoint a certain gentleman—not Dr. Pierson—to the office. The anonymous "correspondent" felt it his duty to point out that "the present ministry needs strengthening," and that the church ought not to "run the risk of waning under purely evangelistic teaching," the one need being "a strong and experienced ministry." The proposal, it was prophesied, would meet with "strong disapproval," and even if it did succeed it would "probably lead to the withdrawal of many more members from the church, which has already lost the sympathy and support of over 300 active workers during the last two years." "Over 300" must have been a misprint, for a trustworthy authority asserts that not a dozen active workers have withdrawn through want of sympathy with the present pastor.

The pious wish of the paragraphist for "a large gathering of the influential members of the church at the meeting," that "by prayerful, peaceful, but yet firm, concerted action" "reunion and complete accord" might be brought about and "the decay of the church and its work" "rendered impossible," was abundantly realized, though not exactly in the way the author of the ingeniously worded communication expected or desired; for the gentleman whose name had caused such "intense disappointment" to "a large number of members" was at the Tabernacle meeting on Feb. 19 elected assistant minister for twelve months with enthusiasm! Only six hands were raised in opposition to the 2,000 or more who voted for the resolution, which, "with the unanimous approval of the deacons and the hearty approval of the elders," was brought forward by Mr. Thomas Spurgeon, moved by the church treasurer, Mr. T. H. Olney, and seconded by Professor McCaig, one of the elders. "Never did a plot more ignominiously fail" is the enigmatical comment of an old and highly respected Tabernacle member and intimate friend of Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon. N. B. Neither Dr. James Spurgeon nor Dr. Pierson, who take such profound interest in Tabernacle affairs, were present at the meeting, nor were their honored names once mentioned. Rev. C. B. Sawday, Mr. Spurgeon's new colleague, is an earnest preacher and zealous worker, who has had considerable success in the ministry and especially in evangelistic work. Since he left the Pastors' College he has, theologically, kept pretty closely to the Spurgeon line. He is some years older than Thomas Spurgeon.

The Position of the Tabernacle Church.

The comparatively slight decrease shown by the Tabernacle statistics might in any event have been expected, and it is surprising, in view of the trying circumstances through which the church has passed, that the diminution is not greater than it is. The additions during the year number 403, 130 being by baptism; the removals by death, transfer, etc., 460; net decrease, fifty-seven. With a present membership of 4,780 the Tabernacle Church can still claim to be the largest in the world. The financial return was satisfactory, the treasurer reporting a considerable balance in hand. It is not generally known that the whole of the free will offerings at the two Sunday services at the Metropolitan Tabernacle go to the Pastors' College, the seat rents and special collections for the purpose being applied to the support of the church. This arrangement worked satisfactorily during C. H. Spurgeon's life, but now that his powerful personality is removed it is not surprising that it is found to be a great drain upon the church. The college being in anything but a flourishing condition Dr. Spurgeon has generously relinquished £100 of the £300 yearly salary he agreed to receive on succeeding C. H. Spurgeon in the presidency, and, as he is not altogether a poor man and has a stipend from his church at Croydon, his good nature may prompt him to follow the unselfish example of his brother and decline to take a penny from the college funds.

Invitations to American Congregationalists.

A pleasing feature in connection with the arrangements for the reception in England of The Congregationalist Pilgrims is the cordial welcome offered by high dignitaries of the Church of England. Not only has the venerable Dean Bradley promised with great heartiness to meet and address the Pilgrims at Westminster Abbey and to show them over the Deanery, and Dean Farrar offered to conduct them over Canterbury Cathedral and give them tea at the Deanery, but the Bishop of Winchester has generously invited the party to lunch at Farnham Castle, which is in some respects the most famous of the ancient Episcopal homes and centers of England. Dr. Randall Davidson states that to him the pleasure of receiving them would be great, and he says he will most gladly do anything and everything in his power to facilitate the arrangements on the occasion of the visit to Winchester, which is about an hour's journey from his lordship's palace. The deans or other ecclesiastics in the cathedral cities on the route have promised their co-operation and altogether it seems that the party is to be exceptionally favored.

Among Congregationalists the greatest interest is being shown in the forthcoming visit. For instance, Mr. J. H. Lloyd of Highgate, the donor of the pictures of Puritan divines in Mansfield College, has invited them to this ancient London suburb, which is crowded with literary and historical associations. Mr. Lloyd, who is author of the History of Highgate, has drawn up an attractive program, which includes a visit to Coleridge's house (the room in which he died would be shown by special permission), the house of Leigh Hunt, William and Mary Howitt, T. C. Hall, Dr. Sacheverell, Cromwell House (the residence of Ireton), Lauderdale House (where Nell Gwynne lived), the graves of Coleridge, Farraday, George Eliot, Mrs. Henry Wood, etc., lunch in the schoolroom of Highgate Congregational church (a 1662 foundation) and short addresses by leading Congregationalists. Unfortunately time may not permit the acceptance of all the privileges that are being offered. "The Americans are sure of a hearty welcome everywhere," says the London Daily Telegraph and the Newcastle Daily Leader hopes that the pilgrimage "will aid in producing a kindlier feeling between the people of the two great English-speaking nations."

It is an interesting and by no means insignificant fact that of the more than forty men who have contributed more or less to the editorial columns of the Recorder, The Recorder and Telegraph, The Puritan, The Christian Times, The Boston Reporter and The Congregationalist—those whose names are mentioned in the historical sketch published elsewhere in this number—all except three have been men educated at college. Yale has given fifteen, Williams six, Amherst and Dartmouth four each, Bowdoin and Brown University three each, and Harvard, Princeton, Western Reserve, Middlebury, Oberlin, Iowa, Rutgers and the University of the City of New York one each. For a time The Puritan Recorder had as its editors two men who were classmates at Williams. Today two men who were classmates at Yale are editors of The Congregationalist. Beginning with Sidney E. Morse, Yale, 1811, and so on down through E. D. Moore, S. H. Riddel, Edward Beecher, Henry M. Dexter, to the present editor-in-chief, Yale College has made itself felt in this as in so many other ways.

The first staff correspondence of the Recorder was a letter from Washington, D. C., describing the inauguration of John Quincy Adams.

Fourscore Years of Political Progress.

By Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart.

Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart, Ph. D., is a native of Pennsylvania. He graduated at Harvard in 1880; received his degree of Doctor of Philosophy three years later from the University of Freiburg, Germany. His success in historical investigation while a Fellow at Harvard and at Freiburg gained for him upon his return the honor of instructor of history at Harvard, and in due time he became assistant professor of history, a position he now holds. Professor Hart is the author of at least five well-known books on various aspects of American history. He represents Harvard University on the board of editors of The American Historical Review. As a citizen of Cambridge he has given invaluable service as a member of its board of education. He is a loyal member of the Shepard Memorial Church and prominent in the Cambridge Congregational Club. Of the younger American writers on American history few are his peers, and as a commentator on public affairs he has the authority that comes from thorough intellectual training and settled moral and religious convictions.

When the founders of the Boston Recorder in 1816 laid plans for their modest enterprise, did they realize that "old things had passed away and all things were become new"? Did they see that the world had just emerged from the conditions of two centuries previous and was girding itself for the most strenuous and eventful century of its history? The year 1815 marks the final reassertion of Europe against the self-centered despotism of Napoleon, and it marks equally the emergence of the United States from that place between the upper and nether millstone of European politics which led to the confused War of 1812. Each continent was, for the first time in almost a quarter of a century, left to peace and at last free from the traditional inter-linking of the affairs of the eastern and western hemispheres. The 4,000 issues of this paper since 1816 have recorded as much in eighty years as had happened in two centuries before.

Europe and America made up the active historic world in 1815. During eighty years have been added Australia, Africa and a part of Asia. Siberia, Burmah, China and Japan were then almost unknown regions; now they are brought within the sway or the influence of Western civilization. The enlarged space in which Europeans may dwell has given them immensely greater opportunities for commerce, for spoliation, for the spread of their principles. The population of Europe has sprung from 200 millions to 360; of European dependencies from perhaps 200 millions to 400 millions; and in America itself are fifteen millions more of European birth. We play with vast numbers as though they were counters. Five different countries in Europe could each put into the field an army larger than Xerxes's million, and at least four cities are more populous than was Rome at its greatest.

If to Napoleon could have been shown in 1815 the map of Europe as it was to be in 1895, he would have adjured it as the impossible work of English and German devils. In his lifetime there was no such thing as Belgium or Roumania, Servia or Bulgaria or Greece, no countries of Italy or Germany or Austro-Hungary. Where is the "German Confederation," that cunningly devised scheme for making Austria regent for Germany? Why are Hanover and Hesse-Cassel, and the free city of Frankfort and most of European Turkey no longer on the map? On the other side of the world, what mean the dabs of Japanese lacquer on Korea and Formosa? And how come those Russian eaglets to hover over China? Why is the English "thin red line" again in Egypt and newly in Cyprus? What are all these enormous tracts upon the map of Africa and Australasia—Australia and New Zealand and New Guinea, South Africa, Transvaal, Congo Free State, Annam and Madagascar? It has been a nation building period, unexampled since the Crusades.

It has been also an era of great sovereigns—William I., Alexander II., Victor Emmanuel and Victoria; a time of mighty statesmen—Gladstone, the democratizer, Cavour, the first modern Italian, and Bismarck, the greatest of Germans since Charlemagne. Nor has this been a century of historical and material development alone. Never have dominant political ideas so enlarged and forced themselves upon mankind. Nationality, the conception of the common life and interest of a great people, has out of three splendid political ruins, Italy, Germany and Japan, created three of the world's greatest Powers. Republicanism has transformed France and invaded Italy. Democracy, the rule of the most, has permeated every western European country, and England most of all; and has all but cast slavery out of civilization. Federation has built up three strong unions, Switzerland, Germany and Canada, and may be the future form of Australia and South Africa. Above all, Europe has awakened to the necessity of drawing out the intellectual forces of its people for defense and offense, and for the arts of peace. Well may this seem to future generations the most stirring time in all modern history!

Every one of the changes which we have observed in Europe has been more vigorously at work in our own country. During eighty years the area of the Union has increased from 1,900,000 to 3,500,000 square miles; then there were but eighteen States, now there are forty-five. The vast Texan, Mexican and Alaskan annexations have successively widened our borders, and that insatiable Anglo-Saxon appetite for more territory, which we think so blameworthy in sister nations, has constantly demanded new areas of valuable wild lands for the settlers. It is this free land which has most attracted emigrants; it is this continental expanse which gives to the United States its unrivaled commercial situation and at the same time immunity from invasion.

While our territory has nearly doubled since 1815, from about 8,000,000 our population has gone up to 69,000,000. This is not a mere aggregation like that of India or China, it is the greatest human power in the world. Of all Christian nations, only Russia has more people—and Russia is a poor country. Germany counts only 50,000,000 and Great Britain only 30,000,000. Our unexampled growth has made possible great enterprises which depend upon a widespread constituency—railroads, newspapers and universities. This constant rocket flight of our population has been sped by the steady pouring in of immigrants—7,500,000 in the last fifteen years. They add to our total; they add in greater proportion to our problems. They multiply the strange races—already too numerous in 1815—and send peoples least like the Anglo-Americans. In our pardonable pride over our material greatness, we must not forget that it has thrown upon us a problem of city government with which so far we have not been able to deal, and that, now that the Government has no more good land to give away, there is certain to be an agitation for fresh annexations to be secured by diplomacy, by threats or by aggressive war.

In nothing have the last eight decades been more productive than in the growth of a strong national spirit in the United States. In 1815 nationality was at its lowest ebb since 1789. The War of 1812 had led to a dangerous sectional division; the North, South and West were separated by great distances and were conscious of diverging commercial interests. Above all, slavery had cast down an apple of discord and begun an "irrepressible conflict," capable neither of compromise nor of concession. New England was threatening virtual secession. South Carolina was entering on the course of protest which culminated in 1861.

Today the country is so far one that we almost forget in what States we live. Railroads and steamboats have not only brought Maine and Georgia nearer together than were Boston and Springfie'd in 1815, they have gridironed that immense interior which Jefferson predicted would not be peopled for a thousand years, and have bound it to the seaboard. In the process of union a great part has been taken by a kind of literature hardly known in 1815; the national newspapers and periodicals, secular and religious, carry the news and ideas of every section to every other. The despised "drummer" has been another unconscious nationalizing instrument; he has distributed the same wares, jokes and standards from Eastport to Los Angeles. When slavery was struck down the great obstacle to national unity was destroyed, and now the president of a Southern university, the son of a slaveholder, can say: "I don't believe in slavery, and I don't believe in secession, and I shall teach my students so."

Out of a great nation great men have sprung up. In 1815 Jefferson was still an oracle and Madison a sage; but Clay was the greatest man in the nation, and he continued a leader for thirty-five years. Webster and Calhoun were also just entering on their renowned careers. This "triumvirate" was made up of individual, trained and powerful statesmen. John Quincy Adams was to show himself a Puritan politician; Andrew Jackson was to give a warning of the danger of putting a great man in the wrong place; John Brown was to exemplify the Hebrew prophet in his protest against wickedness; and Abraham Lincoln was to make clear to the world what a man a republic can produce. When the country had need of them, great captains sprang up to defend her—Grant, Sherman, Thomas and Sheridan. The heroism of the people has been shown, where heroism was needful, in the unshrinking sacrifice of goods, happiness and life by men and women when a great principle of honor and national existence was at stake. Let it be remembered to the credit of this colossus of a republic that only once, in the shameful Mexican War, has it been deluded into fighting for plunder or prestige, or because somebody else was also powerful.

The achievements of the United States in this century have after all been moral rather than material. Plenty is speedily consumed; wealth goes up in smoke; great men pass away leaving their tasks incomplete; what survives is the ideal which is woven from generation to generation, the accumulated standards of what a nation should strive for. The foundation for our system of government was already laid in 1815, but the architects knew not as yet what the superstructure was to be. These ideals are in the main the same central conceptions of republicanism, democracy, federation and individuality which have characterized the century in Europe, but they are even more deeply graven in our history.

Republicanism was an easy principle in 1815. It has been our later task to apply it to rich commonwealths studded with rich cities, abounding in rich men; and to perfect the political machinery necessary for giving effect to republican government on the largest scale. The only significant failure is in those unhappy cities and States where the machinery is so complete that voters and legislators humbly follow the will of that untitled monarch, the political boss.

In democracy the United States has completed the work already laid out by Jefferson. In 1815 both Massachusetts and Virginia had still a property qualification for voters, and great inequalities of representation. To our experience chiefly the world owes the idea that every man has an equal influence in his government; that property has no claim to representation; and that the final force in the State is concentrated public opinion. If we have gone too far in admitting on easy terms the foreigner and the ignorant native, it is a generous fault and not irreparable. We might wish that the democratic idea did not hold all men equally capable of public office. We may still hope that democracy will not insist upon the referendum—that device for governing great communities by standing town meetings. Whatever the faults of democracy, it has been the crowning service of the United States to show that they are less than the faults of any other system, and that it can be applied with peace and honor to a great nation.

Perhaps democracy might have been less successful but for the principle of federation. In 1815 a hitherto unknown kind of Federal Government had been in successful operation for forty years in the small and weak United States. No one could then be sure that the same principle would work in a nation of enormous area and population, made up of States soaked in democracy. Eighty years have proved that such a Federal Government is practicable, and that the system can bear the necessary strain of unwieldy cities, overweighting the States in which they lie; and the unnecessary strain of frontier mining camps admitted to the full privileges of statehood before they can protect life and property. The United States has thus solved the problem of a government strong and yet decentralized. The lesson has been followed by Germany and Switzerland, and is destined to find further acceptance.

These are great achievements—all the greater because they have not been gained, as in France, by the stunting of the individual. Except Germany there is hardly a country in the world which makes such a systematic effort to put in action all the intellectual and physical forces of its people; and to Germans is now denied the of individual opinion. The Americans right have shown themselves an inventive people, not only in machinery to hasten communication, increase wealth and quicken intelligence, but in devices for bringing to pass their political ends. Eighty years ago we had not a university and there was no system of efficient free schools in any State of the Union. Now both our common city schools and our universities will compare favorably with those of any country.

American protection of the weak has been another great service to the century. Institutions for the delinquent and the defective multiply; the national organizations to fight slavery have suggested similar societies for other movements of philanthropy and reform. The nation has learned also to depend more upon experts. In 1815 there was little opportunity for professional education of any kind, practically none in science or æsthetics. Today highly trained clergymen, lawyers, doctors, engineers and artists abound, and even college professors are no longer wholly despised as unpractical. In government alone do we still refuse to avail ourselves of training; of all civilized nations we alone suffer diplomats who cannot speak foreign languages and city judges who in some places know more of crime than of law.

The greatest merit of the United States is perhaps its sturdy individualism—the recognition of the right of every man to choose the career in which he may hope to excel; the right of free movement and of free trade everywhere within our boundaries. Yet in at least three directions that priceless individualism is now endangered—by socialism, which would compel men to renounce their powers; by dependence on government for support or subsidy, which bribes men to shut off the steam of their own energy; by the force of a crushing public opinion, which will have no king but the Cæsar of its own caprice. To believe that any of them can prevail over the cause of America's greatness is to disbelieve in human character.

In 1798 President John Adams prophetically characterized his country as "a great, free, powerful and independent nation." It has been great in its size, its numbers and its statesmen. It has been made powerful by its strong national spirit. It has remained free through its own vivifying principles. It is independent because it has chosen to be like its people—individual, to keep out of complications with other Powers. They have their policies of colonization and self-defense; we have fortunately all our colonies within our borders—Arizona and Oklahoma and Alaska—and our worst foreign enemies are voters in our cities. To defend our lives, our country and our principles of self-government we would fight and could never be conquered; but our greatness depends on national character and not on our readiness to provoke or accept unnecessary conflicts.

Good citizenship means the maintenance of the principles of the Bible in individual lives and in social relations. These principles are best learned from the Bible itself. The most direct and effective way to promote good government is to extend the study of the Holy Scriptures. It may seem a small thing for a man or woman to teach a class in Sunday school as compared with discussing the principles of moral and social reform in citizens' clubs. But the more conspicuous work would avail little if the other were not faithfully done. The first necessity of a republic is to teach its citizens the rights, duties and responsibilities of citizenship. These they could never learn if the sense of personal responsibility to God were lost. The Bible in the hearts, homes and communities, its precepts inculcated and applied in all social relations, is the surest safeguard of our liberties. Those who live its teachings and impress them on others may not attract much notice, but they may well be grateful for the privilege of exerting great influence to the highest ends. The best service to our country is faithful teaching of the truths of the Bible.

Eighty Years of Christian History.

By Bishop John F. Hurst, LL. D.

Bishop John F. Hurst, D. D., LL. D., is the scholar, the man of encyclopedic information on the Board of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was selected by that body to stand as its representative at the national capital and foster the interests of the proposed American University. He graduated at Dickinson College, Pennsylvania, in 1854 and studied theology at Halle and Heidelberg. From 1871 to 1880 he served first as professor of historical theology and then as president of Drew Theological Seminary, Madison, N. J. There are few men in this country more conversant with the latest thought of Europe on religion or metaphysics, and few better informed on the history of the Christian Church. Hence he is competent to write with authority on the subject handled in the accompanying article.

The nineteenth century opened with a great spiritual awakening, the revival of 1797–1803. During this time of intense religious activity over 150 churches in New England alone were greatly quickened, while their membership was multiplied. The movement extended to the West, where it produced a profound impression on all classes and especially on the aggressive Scotch-Irish population of Kentucky and Tennessee. During the last quarter of the eighteenth century the skeptical spirit had prevailed in the highest schools of learning in the Atlantic States, a result largely due to the popular example of Thomas Jefferson, who, after his residence at the court of France, was with good ground understood to represent the deistical spirit prevalent in that country and throughout central Europe. The revival was, in fact, the one great dominating force which destroyed the skeptical spirit then threatening the spiritual life of the country. It first gave to the young American church a supreme confidence in the fulfillment of its grand mission without aid from the treasury of either the State or the general government. It imparted an impulse to extend both the intelligence and spiritual life of the East as far away to the West as our new population might make its venturesome path, and to carry the light of the gospel across seas to heathen lands.

The revival took a firm hold on all the leading colleges. While Yale could count among its students only about a dozen who professed to be Christians seventy-five were now added, about one half of whom entered the ministry. In Dartmouth, Williams, Princeton and other institutions were similar gratifying results. From that time until the present the American university and college have been prompt to respond to the call of the church in its most aggressive and exalted movements.

MISSIONS.

Rapid advance and thorough success in missionary activity have been the rich inheritance from that revival. Until the first decade of the present century the American church had its mind largely upon the Indians within its own territory, but now it regarded the whole world as its field and began to send missionaries into all heathen countries.

The first Home Missionary Society of the Congregationalists was organized in Connecticut in 1774, and those of the Presbyterians in New York and New Jersey in 1789 and 1796, and that of the Congregationalists of Massachusetts in 1799. In England the Baptist Missionary Society was organized in 1792, the Church Missionary Society in 1799, the London Missionary Society in 1795, the Moravian Missions in 1732 and the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in 1701. Except these five, all the British missionary societies have been organized since 1810. Both in England and America, therefore, it may be said, that the great missionary societies, as a whole, were in their first strength and glow, and all the other great societies had their origin during the present century. In 1806, when Samuel J. Mills and other students of Williams College took refuge beside a haystack, and pledged themselves to carry the gospel to the heathen, saying, "We can do it if we will," the fire on the missionary altar of the American church was kindled and has burned more brightly ever since.

Protestants of Europe had hitherto labored chiefly in India, Greenland, the West Indies and along the Atlantic Coast of the American Continent. But the time now came when the missionary horizon was suddenly extended beyond all precedent, and all lands became one inviting field. So great has been the progress that the picture of missionary life is today fascinating beyond description. New lands are being opened by providential intervention, and all heathen countries are being reached by laborers from the European and American churches. New languages are being brought within organized rules. Bishop Hannington alone, for example, reduced twenty of the South Pacific languages to grammatical form. The Bible has been, or is being, translated into 375 languages.

The present condition of missionary labor is about as follows: The whole number of missionaries sent out by American societies is 1,469 males, 2,043 females; the number of native laborers employed, 14,766; the number of churches, 3,019; communicants, 397,252. Of these, 36,600 were added in 1895. The number of pupils under instruction, 193,816; the amount of contributions by natives, $590,393; the total income of the societies, $5,006,809. From the missionary societies of Great Britain there are 2,991 males; 2,238 females; 38,874 native helpers; 312,297 communicants, of whom 25,678 were added last year. There are 502,520 pupils under instruction. The home income of those societies is $5,625,593; the foreign income is $1,065,655. The German missionary societies have 550 male and 399 female missionaries; 3,518 native helpers; 100,761 communicants, and their income is $568,411. The total number for all Protestant missions is 6,355 male and 5,219 female; making a total of 11,574 missionaries. They have 70,033 native helpers; 1,157,668 communicants, and their income is $14,441,807. The oldest of the American societies, the American Board, was organized in 1810, so that all this work is within the scope of eighty five years. When we think of these astonishing results of missionary effort there is good ground for believing that by the end of another century there will be no language of the earth into which the Bible will not have been translated, and no considerable portion of the population which will not have heard and accepted the gospel.

CHRISTIAN UNION.

All the great successful measures toward Christian union are of recent origin. The British and Foreign Bible Society and the American Bible Society, founded respectively in 1804 and 1816, are societies which represent nearly all the great Christian confessions in both Great Britain and the United States, and have been the means of drawing nearer together Christians of every name. The combined annual receipts of the British and Foreign Bible Society, the American Bible Society and the National Bible Society of Scotland are about $1,811,100 and the total annual circulation of the three societies last year was 6,122,882 copies, to which should be added the circulation of about sixty other Bible societies and the sales of the great trade Bible houses. For three centuries after the German Reformation the Protestants on the Continent were divided between the Lutheran and the Reformed confessions. The first significant measure toward harmony was the union of the Lutheran and Reformed confessions in Prussia under King Frederick William III., the result of which was that the Evangelical Union became the State Church of Prussia. With the new century there seems to have arisen a universal desire to look less on the differences than on the unities of the faith. As the century advanced the desire for union became more intense.

The Evangelical Alliance, founded in 1846, has become a powerful agency in bringing all Protestant churches into closer fellowship. Its sessions, generally in Europe but the notable one of 1873 in New York, have been occasions of spiritual power, and new light has been cast on the achievements and aspirations of the whole body of believers. The Young Men's Christian Association, founded in London by George Williams in 1844, is a non-sectarian organization and has nearly a half-million of members. The Sanitary and Christian Commissions, organizations which arose out of the necessities of the Civil War, proved a strong bond for the union of nearly all the great religious bodies in the years of the nation's greatest anguish and peril.

In 1886 the bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church presented to the General Convention a plan by which it was thought that the various denominations might take initial steps toward organic union. This plan was indorsed by the convention and has been submitted for adoption to the various churches. Its general basis is: The Apostles' and Nicene Creeds as an expression of doctrine; the Bible as the rule of faith; the sacraments of baptism and the Lord's Supper; and the historic episcopate. In some directions the overtures have been cordially received, and in others the welcome has been cold. The one chief difficulty has been the historic episcopate.

THE GREAT REFORMS.

Many strong protests against slavery were made in the eighteenth century in the colonies both north and south, but, as the century drew toward its close, slavery became strongly intrenched in the Southern States, where it was regarded as an industrial necessity. The agitation centered in New England. The Methodists in 1784, the Presbyterians in 1793 and 1794, and the Congregationalists and Quakers continually spoke with loud voice against the evil. Birney and Pillsbury declared that the churches were responsible for its existence. Though Boston became the chief center of the discussion, eloquent men and richly gifted women in various parts of the country gave themselves to the great cause. The martydom of Lovejoy in Illinois in 1837 first inspired the heart and opened the lips of Wendell Phillips, while the Fugitive Slave Law of 1850 brought Theodore Parker from his obscurity into his immortality. Bryant, Longfellow, Lowell, and Whittier most of all, were the sweet minstrels of the great crusade. Lydia Maria Childs, Lucretia Mott, Abby Kelly, Harriet Beecher Stowe and Julia Ward Howe quickened the national pulse by their burning words. But deeds took the place of speech. In the very midnight of the Civil War, Abraham Lincoln, on Sept. 22, 1862, signed the death warrant of both American and universal slavery by his Emancipation Proclamation.

In legislation, and as a direct result of Christian sentiment, two most important reform measures have been adopted—the prohibition of polygamy in Utah by the Edmunds Law and the pacific and humanizing method of treating the Indians. The control of the Indians is now conducted in a kindly spirit, and such schools as those at Hampton and Carlisle have existed long enough to prove that the Indian, give him sufficient time, can be educated in all the arts of peace and dutiful citizenship.

IN BEHALF OF THE YOUNG.

One of the strongest types of the advancing church on both sides of the Atlantic has been the increased interest in behalf of the young. The Sunday school was a novelty at the beginning of the present century, but it has taken a deep hold on all the the Christian communions. The growth of organized Sunday school instruction, the International Lessons adopted by committees of the large denominations and the development of normal instruction have converted the formerly irregular work of the Sunday schools into a systematic and far-reaching service. The Chautauqua method of using the summer months for study in all departments of human learning has had the effect of giving an inspiration to young people to take up the full curriculum in the college and university. The great excellence of the Chautauqua movement, which now belongs alike to Protestantism and Romanism, has been that it has inspired and strengthened successful study in both Europe and America.

The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, organized by Rev. F. E. Clark, D.D., in 1881, emphasizes loyalty to one's own church as one of its cardinal principles, but has interdenominational features which give it a unique and splendid advantage. It has had the effect of developing a deeper religious feeling and an intense activity in evangelistic work. It has no denominational limits and has advanced with wonderful progress, now numbering a membership of 2,600,000. Its anniversary occasions are of such character as to produce a profound impression upon the entire American church.

A number of denominations have their own societies, by which the young people are grouped into agencies for spiritual and intellectual activity. The Epworth League is operating in nearly all branches of American Methodism, and now numbers 1,500,000 members. The Protestant Episcopal Church has its own vigorous and successful Brotherhood of St. Andrew. It is difficult to tell just how far this movement of the Christian young people is likely to affect the ecclesiastical life of the country. If only proper measures are observed for their intellectual culture, and wise leadership is employed in their literary and religious activities and in their limitations of amusements, it is fair to assume that the church of the future is to receive an impulse from its young people such as has never before been possible.

PHILANTHROPY.

A fine sense of the stewardship of money has been a striking phenomenon of the ecclesiastical life of the present century. During the early period of our national history the American people were poor and their chief practical concern was to gain sufficient means for comfort and education. At the time of Washington's death, 1799, he was reputed to be the richest man in the United States, but, compared with the vast fortunes that have been amassed since, his wealth was a mere trifle. One of the chief forms in which our people have expressed their benevolence has been the founding of institutions of learning. These have come rapidly and in great numbers. In the Southern States, on account of the great need arising out of the Civil War, Peabody, Slater, Vanderbilt and others, as individuals, and the various denominations, especially the Congregationalists and the Methodist Episcopalians, have sent forth teachers and money sufficient to educate, in the professional and industrial schools, an incalculable number of young people, both white and colored. The Northern States, however, have been the chief scene of educational benefactions.

Forty years ago there was scarcely a well-endowed college or university in the United States, but now so much wealth has been bestowed in buildings and endowments that the close of the nineteenth century witnesses not less than twenty institutions of immense wealth and boundless facilities. It is safe to say that within the last thirty years 100 millions of dollars have been given for the buildings and endowments of institutions of learning in the United States. No less growth has been made in European education. Beyond the Atlantic the universities of London, Oxford and Cambridge have received new impulse, but their growth has come less from private benefactions than from the treasury of the state. The universities on the continent of Europe have advanced least of all. The educational lesson of the century is that money flows scantily from private benevolence when the state makes itself the sponsor for the highest forms of education.

THE LIBERALITY, SO CALLED, OF ROME.

In 1871, when Garibaldi and Victor Emmanuel marched into Rome, the temporal power of the papacy, which had been an excrescence on European civilization for a thousand years, went down once and forever. Rome is always masterful in devising remedies for recuperation. Jesuitism was her first thought to cure the territorial limitation produced by the Reformation. So when the temporal power of the papacy was destroyed, immediate measures were adopted to cultivate closer relationship with the general aggressive movement of the time. Overtures began to be made through frequent encyclicals and other patronizing offers to Protestants for a welcome home to the dear Roman fireside. In national crises the hand of Leo XIII. goes quickly out to offer solution for all the ills of our misbehaving planet. America, however, takes the palm. A Roman legate, Satolli, has been sent to Washington both to do and to report. He has succeeded in his strolls among the Roman campfires in awakening much hostility. He has, however, been rewarded for his official activity by the cardinal's beretta, which must be understood as a sweet prophecy of his return to Rome, to the relief of the factions in America. The prevailing text in the Roman Catholic preachments of the present time is intense American patriotism, and who knows but that the time will come when St. George of Mt. Vernon will appear on the Roman calendar?

It must be confessed, however, by all Protestant observers, that, apart from all humorous phases of the new developments, there has really been a much larger view among Roman Catholics than ever before. The Old Catholics, with Bonn as a center and Döllinger of Munich as their great representative, have brought to the Roman Catholic Church as a system a new breadth of vision. Their program was a protest against the extreme conclusions of the Vatican Council. Père Hyacinthe of Paris was for a time a most attractive preacher. He attempted the contradiction of opposing Rome, and yet claiming to remain within its fold. His little handful of adherents have enjoyed his eloquence and winked at the impossibility.

PREACHERS AND PREACHING.

In England great inspiration had been given to preaching by the labors of the Wesleys and Whitefield, and by the remarkable career of Simeon of Cambridge. For the first time since the Reformation preaching was brought out from the cold and Gothic retreats of the English cathedrals into the bright sunlight of the marketplace and the field. In some parts of Ireland and in portions of southwestern England, the preaching of the itinerants was such a novelty that the multitudes were attracted for their first hearing much more by curiosity than by any other one impulse. The new century has witnessed a great increase in the fervor of the clergy of both the Established and the Dissenting churches. The names of Robert Hall, Robertson, Spurgeon, Punshon and Liddon prove the cosmopolitan character of the English pulpit and mark the return of the Elizabethan era and golden age of English preaching. The power of the American pulpit, so pronounced during the colonial and early national periods, has been steadily maintained and has put upon the list of preachers held in world wide honor the names of Kirk, Payson, Cheever, Lyman and Henry Ward Beecher, Simpson, Bethune, Brooks, Bushnell, Chapin, Williams and many others.

TRACTARIANISM.

One of the greatest movements in any period of English ecclesiastical history was Tractarianism. Pusey, Newman and Keble were its chief promoters. Their purpose was to reproduce the earlier theology of the Christian Church as a force to bring back a purer and stronger life to the Anglican Church. The pen of John Henry Newman, as tireless as his own massive brain, gave a blow to the unity of the Anglican Church which shook it from center to circumference. These men wrought within a narrow circle, each contributing a strength that the others had not, and started trains of thought which are constantly reappearing. Newman, finding himself no longer at ease within the Protestant fold, entered the Roman communion. Pusey and Keble remained true to the Establishment. As one sums up the entire career of Newman, he is compelled to admit that his Protestant swan song, "Lead, Kindly Light," is one of the sweetest hymns in universal psalmody, while his incidental and controversial book, Apologia pro Vita Sua, written in reply to Kingsley's epochal question, "What, then, does Dr. Newman think?" is the finest piece of writing from his creative pen. The theology of the book is plausible, and with it may be said to culminate the sublimest casuistry ever achieved by the Roman Catholic Church.

GENERAL ADVANCE.

In the department of theological and religious literature the present century has witnessed a productiveness of which our ecclesiastical ancestors of three centuries ago could have had no conception. Ecclesiastical historiography, with the Germans as leaders, has gone far beyond such elementary books as Mosheim and Schroeckh. In exegesis the advance has not been less pronounced. The commentaries of Meyer, Lange and others are the outgrowth of great combinations of scholars in all Protestant countries. Within the last forty years, beginning with Tischendorf's discovery of the Sinaitic codex on Mt. Sinai, about fifty codices have been brought to light which give new interpretations to Scripture text and the history of the church.

Some of the most beautiful hymns of the whole Christian age have been added to the psalmody of the universal church. Here, in the lofty realm of Christian minstrelsy, all the denominational boundaries have been obliterated. Whittier, Bryant, Faber, Palmer, Phœbe Cary, Mrs. Prentiss, Mrs. Flower, Muhlenberg, and many others have written Christian lyrics which are sung and cherished by the devout of every communion.

With this record of the century now closing what may we not hope that the coming century will produce? The increase in the number of churches in the United States during the last five years is nearly 20,000 and the net increase in the number of communicants has been about 800,000 a year, or about 4,000,000 for the past five years. If the effort to reach all classes shall continue as now, if the great moral and social problems continue to attract the faith and labor of the church, if the purpose remain firm to make the ancient monuments tell the story of God's ancient dealing with his people and to confirm the Biblical records, if the young continue to be directed by wise and sympathetic leaders and the church remain true to the heroism of the past in achieving great reforms, wise indeed will he be and long will be his task, who, as the twentieth century draws toward its close, shall be able to narrate, however briefly, the triumphs of the Christian Church.

HOW THE DEBT WAS PAID.

In the general jubilation over paying the debt of the American Board how many persons ever think of the severe nervous strain and the hours of intense anxiety, on the part of a few, which a transaction of this sort involves? Enter the home of the vice-president of the Board, Hon. E. W. Blatchford of Chicago, and see him tenderly watching at the bedside of his wife, whose life for weeks hung on a thread. Yet from this point he sent forth letters like forest leaves all over the West, and it is right for the churches to know how much they owe to the indomitable energy of this one man, and also to Secretary Hitchcock, who wrought untiringly in addition to his regular duties. Heroic service was also rendered by Dr. Burnham of St. Louis, Mr. E. D. Smith of Wisconsin and Dr. Charles Beardsley of Iowa.

As for the noble, overworked secretaries at the headquarters in Boston surely they "scorned delights and lived laborious days." It was a gloomy hour, that February afternoon, when the New England committee came together and faced the discouraging problem of raising $43,000 in twenty-two days. Was it desperation or a sublime faith in God which led the executive officers and members of the Prudential Committee to become personally responsible for securing $2,000 each within two weeks? The New England field was divided among them. One gathered over $4,000, another $7,200 and a grand total of $28,000, at least, was the result of their heroic efforts.

During the last week of grace the scenes in the Congregational House became almost dramatic in interest, as special delivery letters, telegrams and telephone messages poured in from every quarter. One gentleman, who had already pledged $1,000, hearing almost the last moment that $5,000 must still be secured, sent an urgent note saying that he would be one of five, or even of two, if necessary, to clear the balance. Dr. Gordon of the Old South Church called together, in his study, a number of pastors and laymen to devise plans. Members of his own congregation gave $10,000, about a tenth of the entire sum to be raised, apart from Mr. James's gift. The Harvard Church of Brookline vied in generosity with a splendid gift of nearly $6,000, the Eliot Church of Newton with $2,500 and several churches of Worcester with about $5,000. It should be understood that these gifts represent individual solicitation and action rather than presentation of the cause to the churches as a whole.

Among offerings that represented great personal sacrifice was one of $50 from a person by no means wealthy, to whom this sum had been given as a Christmas present. A boy of eleven years, with the spirit of a Samuel J. Mills, accompanied his gift of fifty cents with these words: "I aprove of the movement to rase the debt and am willing to do anything for the Lord that he has me to do." An elderly woman writes with trembling hand: "I shall be most happy to do something toward lifting the great burden upon the A. B. C. F. M." Her "something" was $1,000. A company of Junior Endeavorers preferred to wait for their badges and let their money go for the debt. A veteran retired missionary sent his token of love in the shape of a dollar, and a consecrated home missionary pastor cheerfully sacrificed $5 from his meager salary. The gifts ranged from fifty cents to $25,000. Some Red Cross Knights in Vermont added generously to the fund. Dr. Storrs writes: "It is really a triumph, not so much of Christian enthusiasm as of Christian conviction and purpose."

A gratifying feature was the tone of thoughtful appreciation pervading the letters of the donors. They seemed to realize something of the strain incident to such an undertaking and their words of loyal affection enhanced the value of the money inclosed.

Eighty Years of the Temperance Reform.

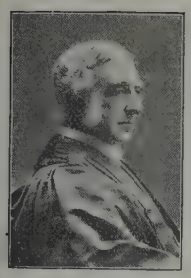
By Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler, D. D.



Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler, D. D., has wider fame as a contributor to religious journals than anyone now living. Nor is there anyone who has been more prolific. His service as an advocate of temperance began so early in his career and his acquaintance with the distinguished leaders of the reform has been so intimate that he speaks with authority in the accompanying article. Born Jan. 10, 1822, graduating at Princeton in 1841, his service as pastor of the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., beginning in 1860 and closing in 1890, was fruitful and honorable. He now lives in Brooklyn, occasionally preaches, and in the pulpit and with his pen shows his wonted fire and peculiar ability. Dr. Cuyler is quoted as saying, "To me the consecrated type has been a thousand-fold more than the consecrated tongue," and, eloquent and winning as he has been as a preacher, his forte unquestionably was and is as a writer for the religious press.

When the first number of this paper was issued—under the cognomen of Boston Recorder—the temperance enterprise was in rather a nebulous condition. Thirty years before that date Dr. Benjamin Rush had published his celebrated Inquiry into the Effects of Ardent Spirits upon the Human Constitution. In April, 1808, Dr. Billy J. Clark had organized in the town of Moreau—near Saratoga Springs—his Union Temperate Society, which inflicted a fine of twenty-five cents on any member who drank spirituous liquors and fifty cents on any member who became intoxicated! The drinking habits in those days—even in New England—were frightful. Dr. Leonard Woods could count among his acquaintances forty intemperate ministers, and at an ordination in 1814 he saw two ministers who were indecently drunk! In 1812 Dr. Lyman Beecher of Litchfield, Ct., brought in a report before the State Congregational Association, in which he took the radical ground that all ministers should preach against the drinking usages and all church members should abstain from buying, selling or using intoxicating beverages. "That," said he, "was the most important paper I ever wrote." Thirteen years elapsed, however, before Beecher delivered the immortal Six Sermons on Intemperance, which were the tremendous shots heard around the world. During the next year (1826) the American Society for the Promotion of Temperance was formed in Boston.

The temperance reform has advanced by a gradual process of evolution. It was not until 1835 that a national convention at Saratoga Springs took distinct ground in favor of total abstinence from every description of intoxicants. They were denounced as radical extremists. Three years afterwards Father Theobald Mathew, a philanthropic Roman Catholic priest (at the urgent request of a Quaker friend), set on foot his wonderful movement, which spread over Ireland like wildfire. It is computed that over four millions of people took the pledge of total abstinence from all intoxicating poisons under his influence, and to this day there are many hundreds of thousands, on both sides of the ocean, who are loyal members of the Father Mathew Societies. Archbishop Ireland, who resembles Father Mathew in personal appearance, is his successor in the leadership of Roman Catholic teetotalers. Theobald Mathew was the most remarkable champion of total abstinence who has yet appeared; he is today a more vital power than burly Daniel O'Connell.

The "Washingtonian" movement was started in Baltimore, in April, 1840, by John H. W. Hawkins and five other reformed inebriates, and it spread rapidly over the land. The greatest single result of Washingtonianism was the reformation of my beloved friend, John B. Gough, from a wretched young sot into the most brilliant and effective advocate of our cause on the platform that the world has yet seen. I honestly believe that a hundred Goughs, equipped with total abstinence pledges, would do more to save people from the curse of the bottle than many a prohibitory law, either fitfully enforced or allowed to lie in a comatose condition on the statute-books. Prohibition, without active moral effort against the drink usages, is a bird with a single wing.

Out of the Washingtonian movement grew the Sons of Temperance, who were organized in September, 1842, in the city of New York. Other beneficial "orders," like the Good Templars, the Temples of Honor and the Rechabites, soon followed; they have extended their good influences into many foreign lands. The remarkable crusade of praying women in Ohio produced a profound impression over the country, and out of it came that magnificent, world-wide organization, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, under the leadership of Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset. Differences of opinion in regard to political action led to the formation of a Non-Partisan W. C. T. U. in January, 1890; both these great heaven-blessed societies are doing a glorious work. Among non-partisan organizations one of the most useful is the National Temperance Society and Publication House, which has been in active existence for thirty years and has issued over two thousand publications. I take some pride in the fact of having aided in drafting its constitution under the roof which now shelters me.

Before me, as I write, there hangs on the wall the rugged and heroic face of my veteran friend, General Neal Dow, which he sent me last year on his ninetieth birthday. Before his original law for the suppression of the liquor traffic was enacted by the legislature of Maine, he and his fellow-workers had spent many years in forming a solid public sentiment on which to base wise legislation. The splendid success of prohibition in Maine led to the enactment of similar laws—between 1851 and 1855—in the other New England States and in New York and Michigan. The prohibitory law was repealed in New York in 1856, and the same action soon followed in several other States, so that today the only States which theoretically proscribe all dram-selling are Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Kansas and South Dakota. In Iowa there is conditional prohibition, and in several Southern States there are stringent local option laws, where the right to deal out death by the dram is submitted to popular vote. Wherever prohibitory laws have been vigorously sustained by public sentiment they accomplish grand results. Where they are not thus backed up, then, instead of being a "terror to evil-doers," they are a source of demoralization and disgrace. The same thing is true in regard to Mrs. Mary Hunt's admirable measures of legislation requiring that the evil effects of alcoholic drinks and narcotics be taught in all the public schools. Where this is conscientiously done, great good is effected; where the law is made a dead letter, it involves rank criminality on the part of those who put it to death.

It has been my privilege and delight to labor for the temperance reform during about two-thirds of the time that the good old Congregationalist has been in existence. The honest convictions I have reached are about the following. The ordinary license system is a poultice to the dram-seller's conscience and for restraining intemperance is a ghastly failure. Institutions and patent medicines to cure drunkards have but a partial success. The one only sure cure is to stop before you begin. Local option laws have wrought much benefit; and entire prohibition is the one logical method where a stiff, righteous public sentiment thoroughly enforces it. Otherwise it is a delusion and a farce. Of late years the friends of our cause have fallen into the deplorable mistake of directing their main assaults upon liquor selling, instead of keeping up their fire upon both the use and sale of intoxicants. Legal enactments are right; but to attempt to dam up a torrent and yet neglect the fountain-head is sheer insanity. The fountain-head of drunkenness is not the iniquitous saloon; it is in the drinking usages which demand and create and sustain the saloon. In theory I am a prohibitionist; but the most vital remedy is to break up the demand for intoxicants and to dissuade people from wishing to buy them and drink them. That goes to the root of the evil.

The temperance reform made grand progress when churches and Sunday schools laid hold of it, and when the total abstinence pledge was widely and wisely used. The social drink customs are coming back again, and a fresh education of the American people as to the deadly drink evil is the necessity of the hour; that must be done in the home, in the schools, and from the pulpit and press. Legislation is not the cure-all, and politicians are frail props on which to rest a mighty moral reform. God's method is not to save men from a monstrous sin by wholesale, through short cuts and sudden processes; and I have seen some air castles go to smash. The experience of eighty years has taught us the inestimable value of total abstinence, the benefits of righteous law well enforced, and also that the church of Jesus Christ has no more right to ignore the drink evil than to ignore theft, or Sabbath desecration or murder.

Advances in Education in Our Century.

By Hon. John Eaton.

Honored by multitudes to whom he is known only by reputation and tenderly esteemed by a large circle of friends and acquaintances Hon. John Eaton is today one of the foremost of the world's authorities on educational topics. Born on New Hampshire's rocky soil Dec. 5, 1829, educated at Hiram Orcutt's Thetford Academy and subsequently at Dartmouth College and Andover Seminary he has, by visiting nearly every State in the Union, as well as many foreign lands, acquired breadth of sympathies and an international outlook. His abilities as an organizer led General Grant in 1862 to make him superintendent of the refugees who swarmed into the Army of the Tennessee. In 1870 he was appointed United States Commissioner of Education, and in this position, which he held for sixteen years, he performed the largest and most fruitful work of his life, developing the department until thirty-eight clerks instead of two were required. Since his resignation, against which President Cleveland protested strongly, he served for a time as president of Marietta College. He now resides, a useful private citizen, in Washington.

Progress in geographical knowledge and in the use of steam and electricity in transportation have been important factors in advancing education the world over in our century. When it dawned there were in the United States few settlements and fewer schools beyond the Alleghenies. Grant was fond of alluding to the postal service as a promoter of education. Another great factor is the recognition of Luther's principle, that education should be included among the duties of the magistrate as well as the building of roads. The nations like Prussia that were foremost to recognize this principle have been the most conspicuous leaders of education.

Our New England fathers, especially influenced by the action of Holland, began early to legislate in regard to education—in 1636 for Harvard University and in 1642–47 in regard to schools to teach "reading and writing" and grammar schools to fit for the university. But this action was not completed and made most effective by including State supervision in Massachusetts until Horace Mann was elected secretary of the board of education in June, 1837. Ohio elected Samuel Lewis previously in March, but abolished the office in a couple of years, as did other States, but Massachusetts never faltered. Gideon Hawley served New York, from 1813, seven years.

Nobody fully understood the power of education. France, frightened by the revolution and influenced by the example of Germany, sought to use it. Napoleon made it subservient or destroyed it. Under the present republic, France has employed it in all its grades from the university to the infant school and for women as well as men as never before, emphasizing improvement in principles and methods along all lines, wherein the nation has found a stability in republican institutions that it has never before experienced. Austria, after the perils of 1848, established a ministry of education.

England has stumbled along in her educational policy. Only after Brougham's commission in the first quarter of this century did she make any appropriation for public education. Her great universities and her great endowed schools were her main reliance. It may be said that she was saved from revolution by grants through the Kensington Museum in aid of technical schools, and by the passage of the elementary educational act in 1870. Schools are only recently become free; they are administered by a council and not by a ministry. All European Powers include provision for instruction in the action of the state, but all are embarrassed by union of church and state. Their separation in this country has favorably affected education; but we have not yet learned that the great Bible precepts upon which all civil liberty depends are non-partisan, and in this particular we are in peril.

A glance reveals the powerful influence of religious belief upon the education of the people—of paganism where it prevails, especially in Africa; of Confucianism in China; of Islamism in various races and nations; of Brahmanism and fire worship, etc.; of the Greek Church in Russia, and the Roman Church in Italy, Austria, Spain and Portugal, and in South America and Mexico; and of the Protestant Christianity on education in Germany, the northeastern states of Europe, Great Britain, especially Scotland, and the British colonies and our own country. To see this we have only to refer to the figures of illiteracy in these several countries.

In the United States the national Government exercises no authority over education, hence there is no national system. Education is left to the States. Our national Bureau of Education was established in 1867 for the purpose of collecting and disseminating educational information and advising the people in regard to the best principles and methods. Dealing specially with our own affairs, it receives the experiences of all nations and is drawn upon by all; exercising no authority, by the organization of information it has come to be acknowledged to be the most influential office of education in the world. No other country has so varied and complete information of its educational conditions as we have of ours in the annual reports of Dr. Harris, commissioner of that bureau. Few nations had exact educational data in 1800. Figures cannot be included here outside of America. Our census of 1850 gave for the first time the items of illiteracy on the suggestion of Dr. Henry Barnard.

With only personal statements in 1800 we may say that, from a possible few hundred thousand dollars of school revenue and a possible five hundred thousand pupils under irregular instruction, our annual school revenue has gone up to $165,000,000 and the attendance to 15,083,630; 410,420 in high schools and academies and 159,989 in higher grades of instruction, and the length of schools from eight or ten weeks to as many months.

Advances in educational literature have been enormous, Germany leading in philosophical treatises and the United States in the publication of educational data. Our papers and magazines give education more attention, and, in addition to national publications, each State and city issues its report, universities publish more, conventions report their discussions, there are several magazines and a hundred or so monthly journals devoted to the subject. The library of the national Bureau of Education, gathered in the progress of its work, numbers about 60,000,000 volumes. Has not the teaching profession a basis in literature? This advance is at once a cause and result of development in all other departments of culture.

In 1800 our colonial period had been left behind only a few years and the colonial conditions substantially prevailed save as they had been crippled by the demoralizing and impoverishing results of the War of Independence, during which some of the best colleges had been closed and their buildings occupied by soldiers. The ordinance of 1787, which antedated our Constitution, so noted for prohibiting slavery north of the Ohio, pointed to public instruction including the lowest and highest grades and provided a measure of aid for their support by giving to each new State out of the public domain every sixteenth section for common schools and one or more townships for the support of a university. A careful student puts down the amounts received by our several States from these national grants at $250,000,000.

Shall we contrast the inferior houses of that day with the well-appointed houses which dot the land, including Alaska, or the horn-book, primer and speller with the improved text-books, or the untrained teachers of that day with those well qualified of this? The extent to which the Bible was studied was a special measure of safety, but Sabbath schools with their millions of pupils were just springing up. Indeed, in European countries Bible subjects were more taught than with us. In Germany, for instance, children are specially taught by the pastors of their respective churches in other than school hours. The sterling character of men and women so general among the first generations of our pioneers, due so largely to Bible influences which inspired the young to turn to advantage their rough and trying experiences, began to give place to frivolity as social centers increased and comforts multiplied. French infidelity seriously injured many of our leading thinkers. The use of alcohol was almost universal. Ignorance among the people offered an open way to all evil influences. The anxious began to speak one to another. Washington's warnings were recalled, and the great revival in education in our land began in spite of all the changes which were rung on all the theories that were offered in opposition. Tuition fees disappeared. Not only is instruction free in public schools, but in a number of our States books are furnished without charge. The doctrine that the property of the State should educate the children of the State, now generally accepted, was long and bitterly assailed.

Preparation for the trades and professions at the beginning of the century was mainly by apprenticeship. What the school could do in this behalf was little understood. Germany led the way in providing training for teachers and schools of technology and of industry, now so common in this and other countries. Massachusetts established our first normal school at Lexington in 1839, and only three students entered. Now there are 27,926 students in our public normal schools, and 7,286 in private, and 5,000 in attendance upon pedagogical instruction in colleges and universities. The school now substantially furnishes the preparation for the professions. In our schools of law there are reported 6,776, of medicine 19,732, of theology 7,839 —the last schools only are well endowed. Polytechnic schools are adding a vast service in preparing for a variety of vocations specially dependent upon the applications of science. Night schools are numerous.

In other countries where education is compulsory instances are pointed out where there is so little demand upon intelligence after leaving school that it is substantially unused and lost. Not so with us. Here the share every one must bear in public affairs, the presence of newspapers and magazines and the multiplication of books and libraries serve to stimulate a growth in knowledge among all classes. Libraries with ample equipments, supported by the public or by private benefactions, and the improved methods of their administration and use, are multiplying centers of knowledge for all classes, and debating societies, lecture courses, Chautauquas, university extension and assemblies are adding their beneficent opportunities. Germany led in physical culture, but Sweden, perhaps, has provided the best system, and from the absence of all attention to it we are beginning to learn the use of training in helping to make complete and healthy men and women by putting gymnasiums in the care of experts.

The education of the deaf, blind and feeble-minded, in which so much has been accomplished in all civilized countries, has its beginning in this century. In other countries it is substantially left to charity; in this country it is provided by law at public expense. Lip reading and articulation are extensively taught to the deaf. Congress supports for them at Washington Gallaudet, the only college for them in the world. The blind occasionally pursue a college course with the seeing, and Congress provides for them a national library of raised letters, headquarters at Louisville, Ky.

There is no room to rehearse the details of the phenomenal advances of the Negro in education in America. From its prohibition by law in the late slave States, it is now provided for by law, and the constitutions of the several reconstructed States require the pro rata division of moneys raised by taxation for the benefit of all children. The colored enrollment in public schools reaches 1,350,000, in normal schools 6,732 and institutions of higher instruction 8,726. A score of years ago Congress appropriated $20,000 for the education of our Indians, last year $2,056,000, and the enrollment has reached 18,188, or sixty per cent. of those of school age.

Of the 451 colleges and universities reported by the Bureau of Education for men, or for men and women, with 55,461 students, only a score antedate 1800. Of this score a third were organized after the war and a fourth are located in New England. Contrast their meager properties and incomes with the $203,578,858 reported as their present possessions, and their annual income $14,601,034 in our country alone. Our benefactions to higher education from 1871 to 1892 amounted to $168,214,441.

The improvements in courses of study and methods of instruction especially indicate the spirit which has pervaded all these advances. The rude infant school is no more; the kindergarten, with its delightful ways, fitting the child's nature and life, has taken its place.

Studies are selected to fit the age and development of the pupil. The abstract methods adapted to college maturity give place to the concrete in elementary schools. The three R's are better taught, and their value enhanced by the right ingrafting of other elements—common sense language, geography and history, physiology, drawing, music and studies of nature and of affairs. Compare the curricula of college studies, the multiplication of electives and their extension into post-graduate courses. Education responds to every forward movement in science. When Silliman undertook his work at Yale an "old candle box" held the minerals delivered to him. Now contrast the collections in museums and examine the laboratories, and we may gain some idea of the progress of instruction in the natural sciences. The laboratory method is coming to aid the study of psychology.

Woman's advances in education in the United States have been more marked than in any other country. In pagan countries she is trained as a slave; in China her lot may be a little better; in India the education of all classes is oppressed by the influence of caste and she is limited to the zenana; under Islam she must go veiled and live in the harem. In Protestant Christian mission schools, which appear in benighted lands as stars in the clouded sky when few are seen, women have equal consideration with men. These schools have wrought powerfully in Africa, Korea, India, China; indeed, they have performed a great part in Hawaii and Japan, where national action presents the most marked examples of educational progress during the century. In Russia her education is advanced even less than that of men, but schools for her benefit among the higher classes are increasing and she has already some special provisions for medical instruction. In Germany, as in several other countries, she shares with her brother in elementary instruction and in normal schools and may become a teacher, but rarely does a university open to her. In England a considerable number of schools have been opened to her for secondary instruction, and she has her colleges at Oxford and Cambridge, but is not granted degrees.

With us woman's education has been especially influenced by religious motives. Are not the conditions of salvation for her the same as for man? Does not this imply equal opportunities for preparation? So she was admitted to the elementary schools, where writing and reading were taught, from the first, but not to the grammar schools, for those were intended to fit for the university, and the university for positions which were closed to women. Arithmetic she did not need, because only men bought and sold. In spite of all, how often, then, she kept apace with her brother! The first high school in Boston which admitted her was abolished, but here and there an academy sprang up in which she shared instruction with boys, and some were established for girls, as the one at Ipswich, Mass., which opened in 1828 and was taught by Miss Grant and Miss Lyon.

Woman, always nearest the little child, as her education increased revealed her great aptness as his teacher in elementary schools, and her higher education began to advance apace. Many contributed to the great struggle, notably Mrs. Willard, who wrote and published much and sought to influence legislation, but none besides Mary Lyon left behind an institution like Mount Holyoke. Its graduates vindicated its wisdom. Woman's higher education justified, the way was open for Oberlin and other co-educational institutions. Now girls outnumber boys in high schools and normal schools, and there are enrolled in co-educational colleges and universities 11,582, and in colleges with equivalent courses 9,000.

With these varied and enormous forces in operation with us, illiteracy with its stubbornness begins to give away. From 20 per cent. in 1870 it went down to 17 per cent. in 1880 and 13.3 per cent. in 1890. Bible precepts have given us our free institutions and must preserve them.

ESTIMATES OF MEN AND WOMEN.

MATTHEW ARNOLD AND JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

Lowell's letters proved that he was truly a great man. Arnold's letters seem to show that he was a man of great culture, but somewhat lacking in warmth and sympathy.—A. E. Fletcher.

Lowell's impulses were inspirations which mastered him, rousing a sort of Berserker fury in his mind, a rage of feeling and a storm of words. He never lacked words, for his vocabulary was large, and he never lacked ideas, for his intellect was active. What he lacked was judgment to determine the value of both —whether what he thought was worth thinking, and what he said was worth saying. His personality dominated his poetry. If he wrote about Prometheus, it was as a pagan Puritan, and if he retold the legend of Rhoecus, which Landor had told so exquisitely, it was to tag a moral to it. Poet, he must needs be preacher, and, what was about the same thing in New England when he was a young man, politician.—Richard Henry Stoddard in the Mail and Express.

JAMES A. GARFIELD.

Garfield was an exceedingly brilliant man, with a handsome face and an imposing appearance. What he seemed to lack was moral steadfastness. He was very susceptible to the influence of stronger natures. He lacked depth of conviction. The last man who got his ear was apt to influence his judgment.—Senator John Sherman in his recently published memoirs.

GEORGE ELIOT.

I am in a position to declare that, from first to last, George Eliot was the living incarnation of English Dissent. She had "chapel" written in every line of the thoughtful, somewhat severe face; not the flourishing Dissent of Spurgeon or Parker, or the florid kindliness of Ward Beecher, or the culture of Stopford Brooke, but the Dissent of Jonathan Edwards, of Phillip Henry, of John Wesley as he was ultimately forced to be. Her horror of a lie, her unflinching industry and sedulous use of all her talents, her extraordinary courage. . . . everything about her to me suggested Bunyan in his Bedford prison, or Mary Bosanquet watched by Fletcher of Madeley, as she bore the pelting of the stones in the streets of Northampton.—Mme. Belloc.

Eighty Years of Congregationalism.

By Prof. Williston Walker, D. D.

Among the younger Congregationalists of the country there are none who wear more worthily honors fairly earned and who defend more enthusiastically and wisely the polity in which they were nurtured than does Professor Walker. The son of Dr. George Leon Walker might be expected to exhibit denominational esprit du corps. His advocacy, however, of the Pilgrim faith and form of church government is due not merely to inherited preferences, but is the outcome of careful historical research and of independent thinking. Professor Walker graduated from Amherst College in 1883, from Hartford Seminary in 1886, going thence to Germany for further study. He received his degree of Ph. D. from Leipsic University, and both Oberlin and Amherst have honored him with the doctorate of divinity. It was an exceptional thing for his alma mater to confer the degree upon so young a graduate. Professor Walker is now the successful and popular occupant of the chair of history in Hartford Seminary.

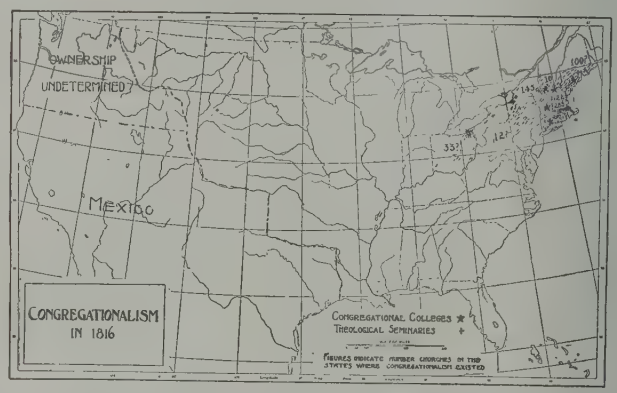
The Psalmist undoubtedly expressed the general feeling of mankind when he lamented the brevity of a life of even fourscore years; yet, judged by the events which are crowded into such a tract of time in our rapidly moving century, such a duration of earthly existence is long indeed. It is no slight evidence of the remoteness of the birth year of The Congregationalist that we find it well-nigh impossible to carry ourselves back in imagination so as to look at the world from the view-point of 1816. James Madison was then president. In that year Indiana was admitted to the Union—the most western of the northern States. Jackson's victory at New Orleans was only a year old. The battle of Waterloo had been known in America for less than six months. Fulton's steamer had revealed new possibilities in navigation only nine years before, and the first steam railroad in the United States was still fourteen years in the future.

Nor is it easier to look at the religious world with the eyes of New Englanders of 1816. Church and state were still united in Massachusetts and Connecticut. The great Unitarian controversy had been brought to its most acrimonious stage by Morse's and Channing's pamphlets of 1815. The American Board, now in its sixth year, was just establishing its second mission—that to Ceylon. Christian America had not yet reached out a hand to the Sandwich Islands or the Turkish Empire. Abundant home missionary labors were being carried on—in conjunction with the Presbyterians and under the Plan of Union to ultimate Presbyterian advantage—in the new west of New York, Ohio and Michigan by the State and local societies of New England, and that friend of missions at home and abroad, Samuel J. Mills, with two or three other pioneers, had begun to preach the gospel to the frontier settlers of Illinois and Missouri; but the American (now happily Congregational) Home Missionary Society was yet ten years in the future.

A new era in theological education had commenced with the opening of Andover Seminary eight years before, where Professors Woods, Stuart and Porter were now in their early prime, the oldest counting forty-four years; but no other Congregational seminary existed save that one which began its work at Hampden, Me., in this year 1816, to which Bangor was to give a place and a name. The Sunday school was winning its way into favor in New England. President Dwight was in his full tide of influence at New Haven, Nathanael Emmons at Franklin, Samuel Spring at Newburyport, Lyman Beecher at Litchfield.

These facts in themselves show how different was the Congregationalism of 1816 in thought and leadership from that of today, and to state them is in a certain sense to indicate the growth of the denomination since The Congregationalist came into being. Yet it may be well to glance at three or four features of that development more particularly.

One fact that strikes the observer is that our Congregational churches have multiplied in numbers and good works during the last eighty years. It is impossible to give exact figures for a period when our modern painstaking Year-Book was as yet unthought of, but a careful estimate would reckon the Congregational churches in New England in 1816 at 834; and, while the Plan of Union with its mixture of Presbyterianism and Congregationalism makes any estimate of the churches beyond the Hudson largely conjectural, it is probable that the additions to be made to the Congregational roll from outside of New England would swell the total in the birth-year of The Congregationalist to about 1,020. Statistics as to their membership are not to be obtained, but later enumerations would lead to the conclusion that their communicants were not far from 100,000. Our most recent Year-Book counts 5,342 churches (of which only 1,571 are in New England) and a membership of 583,539; while the latest estimates judge the number of churches at the opening of the present year to be about 5,500 and reckon their communicants at 600,000.



This more than five-fold increase has not been uniform. Dr. Dorus Clark estimated the number of the churches in 1845 to be 1,471, which would indicate that the growth for the twenty-nine years immediately preceding was about one and one-half per cent. annually. Statistics in 1865, which possibly included some churches overlooked by Dr. Clark, reckoned the churches as 2,723—an apparent annual increase of over four per cent. From 1865 to 1880 the growth was at the rate of two and one-half per cent., and from that time to the present the yearly percentage of gain has been rather more than three.

Even more suggestive of growth in material ability and in appreciation of the wider needs of the kingdom of God is the multiplication of our national benevolent societies from the two in their infancy when The Congregationalist was founded to the seven with which we are now familiar, and the increase in the gifts of the churches from the $12,501 which came into the treasury of the American Board in 1816, and the few thousands of dollars given to the various local and State home missionary societies, to the offerings of $2,190,111 reported by those churches for 1894.

The bare enumeration of these facts shows a second characteristic of the lifetime of The Congregationalist—that it has been a period of increasing confidence in the Congregational system as adapted to our country as a whole. In 1816 fully four-fifths of the Congregational churches were in New England; in 1896 more than two-thirds of them are westward of the Hudson. And these figures by no means reveal the extent to which the Congregational body has become national rather than provincial in its conception of its mission. In 1816 Congregationalism had about reached the bottom of its self-distrust. The Unitarian controversy, which many attributed, falsely enough, to the absence of "strong government," inspired in not a few sons of New England the belief that the Presbyterian was better than the Congregational system for frontier conditions. Connecticut consociationalism made the State uncertain whether it was Congregational or not, and "Presbyterian" continued as late as 1825 the popular designation of the Connecticut churches. The interchange of representatives between the New England State associations and the Presbyterian General Assembly made distinctions in polity seem of no moment; while fellowship in the work of missions abroad through the American Board and at home under the Plan of Union helped to blur any clear popular conception of what things Congregationalism stands for even in churches tenaciously Congregational in their own practice. It is significant of this lack of denominational consciousness that the most ancient of the constituent elements of the paper universally known as The Congregationalist was named The Boston Recorder rather than given a denominational title.

But eighty years have seen a great change. From 1834 onward Congregational State associations were found in Territories whose religious foundations were laid under the Plan of Union, and extensive efforts were made to introduce unmixed Congregationalism in the West. In 1852 the Plan itself was repudiated. Our national Home Missionary Society became fully Congregational in 1861, and the American Board in 1870. Experience has shown Congregationalism to be peculiarly adapted to forming communities, and, without withholding fellowship from other religious bodies, the Congregational churches have come to feel unhesitating confidence that there is no portion of this land, North or South, East or West, where they have not a mission and a right to be.

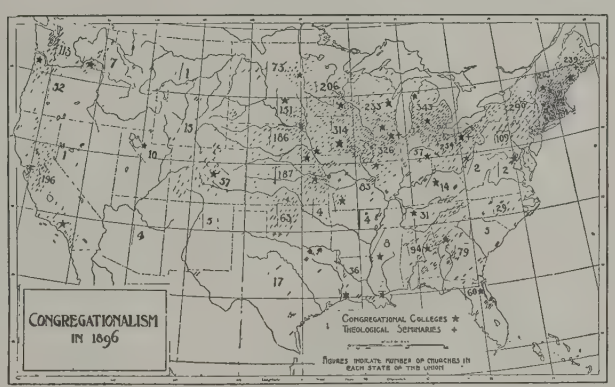
This growing denominational consciousness has shown itself in ever increasing expressions of organic unity during the last eighty years. Outside of the consociationalism of Connecticut and its offshoots in Vermont and Rhode Island, our churches of 1816 found their sole opportunity of visible fellowship in advisory councils. In 1825 Maine showed the way to the State conferences, or associations as Western Congregationalists prefer to call them, made up of the representatives of churches as well as of ministers. These have since become universal. 1852 saw the Albany Convention—the first assembly to which all our churches were invited since the Cambridge Synod. In 1865 the National Council first convened—in 1871 it became a permanent triennial gathering. These bodies have consulted regarding denominational interests; they have approved benevolent agencies; they have stimulated missionary enterprises and given struggling churches houses in which to worship; they have twice (in 1865 and in 1883) caused expressions of the belief of the Congregational fellowship to be put forth, and have prepared manuals for guidance in the formation of churches and the conduct of ecclesiastical affairs. All this has been done without judicial authority or interference with the liberty of local churches, but none the less effectively; and, above all, these recurrent gatherings have fostered the unity of the whole body and have aided that mutual helpfulness which is a fundamental characteristic of the Congregational system.



CONGREGATIONALISM IN 1896
Congregational Colleges ★
Theological Seminaries +
Figures indicate number of churches in each State or the Union

This long period has been no less fruitful also in new agencies for Christian education and labor. The two theological seminaries of 1816 have become seven. The roll of colleges, which may fairly be called Congregational in origin, has had added to it since that time the names of Amherst, of Oberlin, of Beloit, Iowa, Washburn, Carleton, Drury, Colorado and Whitman, of Howard, Atlanta and Talladega; of such pioneers in the education of women as Mount Holyoke, Smith and Wellesley, as well as of nearly twenty more—names honored in the religious as well as in the educational life of America. The churches have been quick to recognize what is valuable in new methods of Christian work, and they have contributed to modern religious life at least one new institution of wide-spread acceptance—the Society of Christian Endeavor.

Of the doctrinal history of these four-score years space will permit only the most cursory consideration. And there is the less need to speak at length because the changes that have taken place have been in minor aspects of Christian truth rather than in fundamentals. On the great basal facts of the sovereign fatherhood of God, of the divinity of Christ, of the sinfulness of man and of salvation through the Son of God, our churches stand today as they did in 1816. But at the time when The Congregationalist was founded a strict Calvinistic type of theology of the Edwardean pattern characterized their thinking. Little variety of doctrinal view was to be found in evangelical circles. But diversity soon manifested itself. Between 1830 and 1840 Taylor's modification of Edwardean theology—which gave place to the feeling of self-love in conversion and denied the preventability by God of sin in a system permitting human freedom—and Finney's further transformation of the same general type of religious thought, so as to present a life of perfect obedience as within the reach of Christian attainment while on earth, roused great discussion and won following. A few years later Bushnell offered to the churches his modifications of the currently received opinions regarding Christian nurture, the divine nature, and the atonement. At Andover Professor Park impressed his conception of the "New England theology" of Edwards on more than a generation of our ministry. Later years have brought their questions of eschatology and of inspiration so to the front as to abate in great degree the interest in these earlier problems, and at no time have our churches been without their topics of doctrinal discussion.

But it is pleasant to be able to record that, though these eighty years have seen warm debates in abundance, they have witnessed no rupture in the Congregational body since the Unitarian outgoing, and they have beheld a constant increase in the spirit of mutual charity. Our churches are disposed to view the really essential truths of the gospel as less numerous and complex than once they did. They welcome Calvinists and Arminians alike to the same Christian household. They feel more keenly the claims of human brotherhood and the breadth of the gospel message, and they stand ready to co-operate with all others who are trying to serve the common Lord in that unity of allegiance to him which is probably the only kind of church unity that is really desirable.

It is but fitting to remember, in any survey of the story of the Congregational churches for the last eighty years, the conspicuous share which The Congregationalist, and particularly its editor, the lamented Dr. Dexter, have had in furthering the more influential of the movements toward unity, fellowship, and national extension. That service demonstrates unmistakably that a religious newspaper may be a prime source of leadership and of power to the churches.

WORTH NOTING.

"What shall we say, then, shall we continue in sin that grace may abound?" "To do so was like a man cutting his head because he had sticking plaster to mend it with," was the shrewd comment of a quaint English Wesleyan, Peter Mackensie, recently deceased.

Who can measure or describe the beneficent results which arise from the fact that during the year ending Oct. 31, 1895, the actual savings of certain citizens of Massachusetts through their investments in co-operative banks or building loan associations amounted to $3,842,421 and the earnings of those savings to $750,100.

Applied science seldom has done more toward increasing the wealth of mankind than when it discovered and perfected the so-called cyanide process of extracting gold. The gold output of 1895 was $203,000,000, and experts prophesy a gold production in 1900 of $300,000,000. It hardly seems possible that the arts can create a demand equal to such an output, and if they do not will it result in a cry for free coinage of gold?

That was a pregnant phrase which the Prudential Committee of the American Board coined in 1815 in a letter to the constituents of the Board, and it will bear repetition now: "The formation of habits of liberality and the consecration of the social principles of our nature to the immediate service of religion." There is nothing individualistic about that, and yet some would have us believe that "society" and the "social principles of our natures" were only discovered recently by Christians.

The following extract from a private letter written by the wife of one of our missionaries in Turkey is commended to the Turkish minister in Washington, to F. Hopkinson Smith, and any other persons who maintain that there is no trouble in that country—except what is stirred up by the missionaries:

Eleven of my husband's letters were kept for days, examined, stuck together clumsily, and then passed to him. Mr. ——, the English consul, made a complaint on the part of the American missionaries and the offense has not been repeated.

The machinery of the Methodist Episcopal Church is exceedingly effective in developing the circulation and influence of its denominational journals. This fact was appreciated long ago by our predecessors. In the Recorder and Telegraph of Dec. 22, 1826, there was a distinct recognition of the "immense circulation" which the Methodist papers of that day had gained in a short time. We are reminded of this fact as we read in The Epworth Herald of Feb. 29 that it now has more than 100,000 subscribers, 10,000 of whom have been gained during the past three months.

Journals on the Pacific coast are calling attention to the success won by Professor Lloyd of Pacific Theological Seminary, who seventeen years ago was a miner in a Pennsylvania coal mine and today is a graduate of Marietta College and Chicago Theological Seminary and professor of Greek and New Testament exegesis in Pacific Seminary. When he entered the academy at Marietta he was twenty-three years old, married and a father. We have had few better examples of late of the possibilities of life to one blessed of God with a passion for learning, an inflexible will and brought in touch with our American institutions of learning, where pover y is no bar to success if worth be present.

What Religious Journalism Has Been, Is, and Should Be.

Suggestive Words and Friendly Salutations from Brother Editors.

OFFICE OF ZION'S HERALD, BOSTON.

Religious journalism began as the indispensable organ and expression of denominationalism. While conserving denominational life and interests, it has stood, also, according to the measure of Christian truth apprehended, as the authoritative utterance for the individual, for society and for government. The public has recognized in the religious press a voice pitched to higher and more obligatory standards, and its inspirational influence and moral restraint have wrought incalculable good. Hon. James Bryce, in his American Commonwealth, noting this significant fact, says: "The most important members [of American newspapers] are the religious weeklies, to whose number and influence few parallels can be discovered in Europe. . . . Great is their power, because they are deemed to be less 'thirled' to a party or leader, because they speak from a moral standpoint, because are read on Sunday, a time of leisure, when their seed is more likely to take root."

Religious journalism today is less denominational and dogmatic, and more ethical and Christian. It seeks not only the salvation of the soul for another world, but the immediate salvation of the whole man, society and the state in this world. This we conceive to be the supreme mission of the Christian journal. In the future we look to see the accent put even more forcefully upon these broader lines. The Congregationalist is a notable example of this better modern aspiration of religious journalism. Zion's Herald, the oldest Methodist newspaper in the world, extends most hearty and fraternal congratulations to its contemporary upon its eightieth anniversary and upon the enviable record which it has made during its fourscore years.

OFFICE OF THE CHRISTIAN REGISTER, BOSTON.

The Christian Register, seventy-five years old in April, cordially greets The Congregationalist on its eightieth birthday, whose step was never more elastic, whose face never more genial, whose vision never clearer than today. The maturity of its judgment is the only sign of its age. The inspired journalist shares the apostolic succession. I know not how often Peter, Paul and John issued their epistles. It depended somewhat, perhaps, on mailing day. They had no steam press or type-setting machines. But what religious journals have ever had an equal circulation? Our apostolic writers, their Hebrew predecessors, and the men who edited their productions should remind us that a religious newspaper cannot be made of type or printer's ink, steam presses or modern inventions. With all these conveniences we may fail to write anything equal to the eighth chapter of Romans or the thirteenth of First Corinthians. The daily press fails if it does not inform; the religious press fails if it does not inspire.

What shall a newspaper do to inherit eternal life? Keep the two great commandments and heed the injunction of the inspired traveling correspondent of the Corinthians that "the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life."

OFFICE OF THE CHRISTIAN LEADER, BOSTON.

The fourscore years, during which The Congregationalist and the journal of which it is the continuance have rendered service in the Christian field, have witnessed changes and improvements in religious journalism quite as notable as those developed in the world of secular endeavor. Probably the first number had but a single editor. The staff of The Congregationalist of 1896 includes eight, each in a special department. This one feature of progress is suggestive of very many features. Organization, with its division of labor and its orderly, systematic methods, is quite as marked in the history of religious journalism as in any of the phases of modern civilization. Certainly it is something to be proud of—this holding the place of pioneer in a form of Christian endeavor that, in the present multiplicity of its vehicles, makes it second only to the Christian pulpit.

Religious journalism assuredly has the justification of large success; its indispensable service will appear the instant the situation is imagined on the supposition of its being withdrawn. Every phase of reform, save, possibly and partially, in exceptional latitudes and considered apart from particular organizations—temperance, freedom, social order, the fidelity of the family and fidelity thereto, education—has been furthered, often very greatly, by the religious paper. Never breaking from the anchorage within the vale it has steadily gone towards—of course it can never reach—perfection. May The Congregationalist round out not only its century but centuries, and may its progress in part be prophetic of a yet nobler future.

GEORGE H. EMERSON.

OFFICE OF THE WATCHMAN, BOSTON.

The prime office of the religious journal is to interpret and apply the principles and to record the progress of the kingdom of God. During the last twenty-five years there has been a prodigious advance in the scope and enterprise of secular journalism, but it has not been more marked than the success with which the religious press has been working toward the realization of its own high ideals. The day has long since passed when intelligent persons, no matter how indifferent they may be to distinctively spiritual concerns, depreciate the character or influence of our best religious journals. It is generally conceded that the political, social and literary movements of the time are treated from a Christian point of view in the religious press with an accuracy, breadth and insight not equaled in any other class of journals. I believe that a consensus of those best informed as to the history of the religious press in the United States would affirm that our honored neighbor The Congregationalist has been among the leaders in this achievement.

OFFICE OF THE INDEPENDENT, NEW YORK.

Although the eighty years which The Congregationalist claims is a long period, it yet comes within the period of the life of Mr. Bowen, our own recently deceased editor and proprietor. It indicates the youth of religious journalism that a paper which claims only eighty years of life can yet claim to be the oldest religious paper in the United States. I am not sure that I could adjudicate on the justice of rival claims, but I do know that none of the claimants has a nobler history or has done a larger work than The Congregationalist, even though, as we trace it backward, it divaricates into channels some distance apart. I have often said privately and in our own columns that I believe every family connected with a denomination should take its own denominational paper. Denominational journalism, if not sectarian in spirit, offers a field for beneficent influence which cannot be surpassed, and the weekly reading of a religious paper by a household keeps the whole family at school and gives it both inspiration and culture. In this work The Congregationalist has borne a very worthy part.

I think it must have been in the early years of Dr. Dexter's connection with The Congregationalist, before it annexed the Recorder, that my father's name was published weekly as one of its associate editors (if that was the designation), and I remember his writing a series of articles in a discussion on the nature and authority of conscience. Our discussions now are somewhat more practical, perhaps, and our papers if they have not abler writing yet have more of it, and are quite as influential as they were then. Under Dr. Dexter's management The Congregationalist attained rank second to that of no other denominational paper, and no man had a larger influence in the councils of the Congregational churches than he. I have read the paper constantly for fifty years. I have never known it better than it now is, and I wish it long life and increased power.

OFFICE OF THE OUTLOOK, NEW YORK.

If you feel some delicacy in publishing special commendation of The Congregationalist, you must appreciate my hesitancy in speaking of the value of religious journalism in general. I may perhaps, however, properly speak of denominational journalism, saying this much—that sectarianism is a curse, but denominationalism a blessing; that, at least at present, we can best do our work for Christ in different organizations—that is denominationalism, but not in organizations which are exclusive, narrow, and hostile to each other—that is sectarianism.

So long as we do our Christian work in different organizations, so long each organization ought to have some journal which expresses its principles, is possessed by its spirit and accomplishes its work in fields outside the local church. Such a journal should be denominational, but should not be sectarian. It should lay its greatest stress on those truths which are the common heritage of all Christian churches. It should report so much of the universal movement of Christendom as is of interest and value to its own constituency. It should be catholic spirited enough to recognize the Christian service and the Christian value of denominations other than that which it especially represents, and it should be broad enough to include all parties within its own denomination.

Having said this, I hope you will also let me say in your columns that The Congregationalist seems to me admirably to fulfill this function. It is one of the few religious journals which I have sent to my own home, where it is always welcome.

OFFICE OF THE CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, NEW YORK.

The Christian Advocate, which has not quite attained threescore years and ten, with the deference that youth should manifest to age, heartily congratulates The Congregationalist on completing the period of fourscore years. The Congregationalist has long been among our most important exchanges, and the writer has read it regularly from the time Dr. Dexter became its editor until now.

Certainly there has been a great change since the days of the Puritan Recorder, with which, through its files, it was possible for us to become acquainted. A continual modification took place under its former management in the direction of that which is going forward now. Religious journalism has been obliged to choose between modification and loss of power, for "times change and men change." The problem is similar to that of the Christian preacher—to unite in due proportion "things new and old," and keep abreast of the spirit of the age without being swirled into dangerous eddies. Each number of The Congregationalist affords evidence of being edited in full view of the requirements of this problem. Mindful of the services which the collection of churches represented by it has performed for the American people, its contemporaries recognize in it an organ of progress, and wish for its continued growth and increasing circulation until its years shall be counted by centuries instead of scores.

Yours in personal, editorial and Christian fellowship, J. M. Buckley.

A religious editor has the opportunities of a preacher, an author and a superintendent of a public library. If he knows his work and does it he ought to be equal to the best of these leaders and promoters of good influence in the community.

For fully forty years The Congregationalist has been a factor in my intellectual and spiritual life. It is still one of the few religious papers that I must find time to examine week by week, and I am grateful for what it gives me. Thirty years ago its managing editor, Mr. Charles A. Richardson, invited me to write a series of special articles upon Sunday school work. I had not, up to that time, attempted anything of the sort and I declined the invitation, because of my feeling unfitted for it. With a true editor's determination of purpose he came to my home in Hartford, sat down by my side in my library and set himself to convince me that I could do the work and ought to attempt it. The result was that in response to his appeal I began the series of articles. This was the beginning of my work in lines which I am still pursuing. I am glad that the paper has sustained its high character in all these years, and that it bids fair to live up to its best standard or to go beyond it.

Office of Christian Work, New York.

The Christian Work takes off its editorial hat and stands with uncovered head in the presence of its ancient and respected contemporary—the venerable and genial Congregationalist—the oldest and admittedly one of the very best religious newspapers in the country. It is a great thing to be old and wise and respected—great for a man, but far greater for a religious paper, which can grow more vigorous as it reaches the limit at which human life begins to decline. We speak guardedly, for, just entering upon our sixtieth volume, we must now strive to make an appearance of carefulness and respectable conservatism in all of our statements.

It is a great and notable event to have successfully completed fourscore years of active and useful life. Men grow old and die; institutions and religious newspapers grow old and live, some of them, and those who thus prove themselves the fittest by their survival, unlike the human race, are apt to become more interesting and youthful with age.

It is now almost 2,000 years since the Founder of the Christian religion was upon the earth, and yet religious journalism may rightly be said to have commenced with this century. A single look back at the early files of your old Boston Recorder of three-quarters of a century ago, will, by contrast with your present noble paper, do more to illustrate the great progress of religious journalism than a letter of a thousand words of mine could do. That was a great paper in its time, and it fulfilled its mission, but what would it be at the present age? It was as unlike your able and well-filled, up-to-date Congregationalist as the first railroad train of cars was unlike and inferior to the Empire Express of the present day. The world moves, and it is the function of the secular press to chronicle its passing events and reflect public opinion. Religious journals, like The Congregationalist, lead public opinion, and herein lies their real usefulness. Your paper has done and is doing well its part in the great issues of life, and the Christian Work most cheerfully and gladly adds its benediction, and wishes you increasing usefulness. We hope to greet your bright face upon our exchange table for centuries.

Office of The Observer, New York.

The Observer, as you know, is the oldest religious paper in America now published under the same name and auspices as when it was begun. The Congregationalist and the Presbyterian Banner bought other journals which were established a few years earlier, consolidated them with their own papers, rejecting, however, the name and editorial control, and then claimed to be as old as the newspapers which they had absorbed. If The Congregationalist is eighty years old because the Boston Recorder and the Puritan Recorder would have been eighty had they lived to this day, we must introduce new methods into reckoning the age of our family relations and business firms. A business may continue under the name of former parties, but it would be unprecedented for a new firm with a different name to call itself the old house because it had bought out its stock of goods.

I would rather compliment The Congregationalist for what it is, and for what it has done for the denomination since it was established as a denominational paper. It has been a means of strength, and, with a few exceptions, a means of grace to the great and good branch of the Church of Christ which it aims to represent. I hope that it will live, not only to be eighty years old, but until "the kingdom" comes, for which all truly "religious" papers long and labor. Perhaps it will not be needful to circulate religious news after that, for we may all "see eye to eye" and "know as we are known"; but if there are to be religious papers then, I am sure The Congregationalist will rise to the occasion. Charles Augustus Stoddard.

Office of The Pilot, Boston.

The oldest Catholic paper in America congratulates its senior contemporary, The Congregationalist, on attaining its eightieth birthday. My experience of religious journalism has not been long enough, perhaps, to warrant my expressing an opinion of what it has been in the past. On what it is and what it should be I may venture a modest judgment, and I am glad to say that I believe the best contemporary journals are governed by a spirit which is essential to all religion, the spirit of truth telling, of courtesy, of charity and of kindliness. Men and papers may and do differ honestly on questions of creed, and, so differing, they may easily misunderstand and innocently misrepresent the opinions of one another, but if the spirit of religion be in them they cannot misstate nor misquote the words of their neighbors.

A religious journal is bound by the same law of honor which should govern every journal. Obeying that law, there would be very little of the harsh, unkind and uncharitable utterances which disgrace so many professedly Christian newspapers. It is permissible and fair in a religious journal to criticise the policy or conduct of another church than its own, but there is no excuse for impeaching the sincerity of anybody, Catholic, Protestant, Jew or pagan, solely because of his creed or lack of creed, or to devote undivided attention to removing the mote from a brother's eye, while the beam (which is not a sunbeam of holiness) occupies one's own. An old naval officer, some twenty years ago, when our navy was at its lowest estate, said to one who asked him what he thought of it: "Well, we haven't any ships and we haven't any guns and we haven't many sailors—but we have lots of officers and water." I think that religious journalism is always the better for having something besides editors and ink.

Office of The Morning Star, Boston.

The growth of religious journalism in America seems to me one of the most remarkable developments of the century, both statistically and influentially. I feel assured of two things—(1) that the religious press of the country is having greater influence than many people suppose, and (2) that its influence for good might be, and ought to be, greater than it is. Two human factors are concerned in making it so—(1) the immediate managers, and (2) the membership of the churches. Prohibitionists tell what might be done if all church members would vote the third party ticket. I often think of what the religious press might become if all church members would take and read their denominational papers. All Congregationalists are reading The Congregationalist, if, as well as I do, they know a good thing when they see it.

The space to which I am limited forbids saying what the editors and publishers of our religious papers should do in order to win greater influence. We have here some theories on that subject which we hope to put to trial a little later in handling The Morning Star. Meanwhile we are studying The Congregationalist and other great papers in order to get all the light possible. I cannot close this note without expressing the hope that the time is not far distant when our religious papers will all be advocating a confederation of Protestant denominations. For such a movement The Congregationalist could do much. C. A. Bickford.

Office of The Golden Rule, Boston.

A sense of the opportunity and responsibility of the religious journalist continually grows upon me. If we should hear of a preacher, who, with stentorian voice and iron lungs, talked to a hundred thousand parishioners every Sunday, that preacher and church would be among the marvels of the day. His sermons would be reported far and wide. They would be sent in advance to the ends of the world and then the cable would flash the message under the seas to "let go the copy." The question on every lip would be: "Have you heard Dr. Ironlungs?"

But there is many a humble driver of the quill in the editorial office of a religious newspaper who preaches every week to such a vast audience, yet perhaps his fame is very limited and even his name is known to but few of his audience. Nevertheless, if name and fame do not follow the ministrations of his silent pulpit, opportunity and responsibility are his; opportunity to reach hearts and mold lives and build characters, opportunity to comfort and strengthen and bless, opportunity to warn and counsel and provoke to good works, opportunity to lift heavy burdens and to wipe away scalding tears of grief.

With these opportunities come their responsibilities; the responsibility to print no word that shall lower the moral standards of this vast audience, to engage in no useless controversy about unessentials, to shrink from no brave word for fear of diminishing the audience, to indulge in no flippant jests for the sake of making the audience say: "How smart Mr. Quilldriver is!"—the responsibility, in short, of making this great pulpit of the modern world, the pulpit of the printing press, composing room and editorial sanctum, a power for righteousness, commensurate with its opportunities and responsibilities.

What paper was first in religious journalism has been the subject of earnest and at times sharp dispute. This is not the place to consider the question in detail. Suffice it to state the reasons why The Congregationalist lays claim to representing pioneer work in religious journalism.

It is contended, on the one hand, that religious periodicals were in circulation several years before the first number of the Boston Recorder appeared, and the one in particular for which the claim of priority is put forth is the Herald of Gospel Liberty, which first saw the light at Portsmouth, N. H., Sept. 1, 1808. Facsimiles of this publication are available, and they prove that the sheet was distinctively religious in character, its contents comprising some account of the state of religion in different sections of the country, a poem on redeeming love, a long hortatory address to the public and a single pious anecdote. This diminutive affair, its four pages being each ten by eight and one-half inches, was, it is true, unlike similar productions which had preceded it by many years. The latter, like Prince's Christian History, started in Boston in 1743, were devoted merely to accounts of revivals and did not have a long existence. The Herald of Gospel Liberty, on the other hand, aimed apparently to cover a wider field by furnishing some general reading for the family, and it has continued, we believe, with little interruption to this day, being now published in Dayton, O., by J. J. Summerbell & Co. and representing the Christian denomination.

Between the starting of this paper in 1808 and the birth of the Recorder eight years later two other periodicals similar to the former ventured upon the comparatively unknown sea of religious journalism. The Religious Remembrancer came out in Philadelphia, Sept. 4, 1813, and the Christian Observer is today its continuator; the Weekly Recorder was started at Chillicothe, O., July 5, 1814, and was subsequently absorbed by the Presbyterian Banner of Pittsburg.

The Recorder, of which The Congregationalist is the continuator, bases its claim to priority, then, on the ground that it inaugurated a distinctively new era, being far more closely related to what is called the secular sphere than these earlier papers. The germinal idea was the treatment of all topics from the point of view of religion and the gleaning of news from all departments of human life. This aim, in our judgment, constitutes an indisputable argument for the assertion of priority. Perhaps, however, the claim has never been put in more forcible and convincing terms than by the founder of the Recorder himself, Nathaniel Willis, a number of years subsequent to his starting of the Recorder. We therefore reproduce below a facsimile of a statement by him years afterward:

The Boston Recorder was the first religious newspaper ever published. It was a newspaper complete in every department of general news, giving literary, scientific and religious intelligence, the events of the day, deaths, marriages, &c. It was the first journal which presented to the public a common or complete newspaper founded upon a religious basis, and therefore was the first religious newspaper. Nothing like it had ever been seen before, in this or any other country.—The first Number of the Boston Recorder was published January 3, 1816, by Nathaniel Willis, at his Office, No. 76, State Street, Boston." No other name appears in the paper, as connected with it in any way. He alone was responsible. Other persons were then and afterwards employed about the paper in various capacities, but he had all payments to make, and no other person was willing to be responsible for expenses in the then doubtful experiment, which was continued by him 27 years. He had attempted in 1810 and till 1812, to establish such a paper in Portland, but it was a time of war, and though the plan was approved, he found little substantial encouragement.

The Recorder was sold in 1844, by Nathaniel Willis, to Rev. Martin Moore, and still lives being conducted upon the same Evangelical principles upon which it was first founded. Mr Willis, by the above facts is proved to have been the founder of the first Religious Newspaper in the world. We give this particular narrative because other claims have been asserted.

The only other objection to conceding to The Congregationalist the honor of being the oldest religious newspaper is put forward by our friends of the New York Observer, who maintain that their paper, though started several years later than the Recorder, is the oldest in America now published under the same name and auspices as when it was begun. We are averse to rekindling the hot fires of debate on this point, but the historic character of this issue makes it proper to put on record our own view of what justly constitutes the claim to precedence. The mere preservation of the name of a periodical is not the decisive factor. Its friends recognize, for instance, in the Century of today the natural continuation of the monthly started years ago by the Scribners, and its volumes are dated from that starting point. The Outlook is not a new paper, but the Christian Union under another name. No one thinks that Mary Lyon's school has severed its connection with its past by substituting for the word "seminary" in its title the word "college." A woman by becoming a wife and dropping her father's name is none the less the same individual. As a matter of fact, when the proprietors of The Congregationalist in 1867 purchased the Recorder, they united the two names as well as the two papers and retained the double title for twenty-one years, then dropping one portion of it for the sake of brevity. The purchase of a newspaper always carries with it the right to take possession of its name and of what goes with it. The consolidation effected in 1867 meant the incorporation into one paper of all that was vital and representative in both. The leading editor of the Recorder, Rev. E. P. Marvin, was continued on the editorial staff of the joint paper, and it went on to minister to the same classes of people that each had served.

The place which had been filled by the Recorder in its earlier days in the esteem of the Pilgrim churches of New England has ever since the consolidation been filled by the present paper. It has drawn its support from the decendants of the same persons who stood by the Recorder, and the reasons for the consolidation were well put at the time in an editorial, from which we take this sentence, presumably from Dr. Dexter's pen:

> If—as is believed to be the fact—since the last National Council all parties and schools among us have practically settled down into substantial unity upon the basis of the Burial Hill Declaration, it must surely honor God and please his Son and advantage his cause for that unity to find expression in the harmonious union of the weekly "organs" of the Old and New School wings of the denomination in a new journal, retaining the excellences and vitalities of both and aiming, in utmost Christian faithfulness and honor, to satisfy the reasonable tastes and meet the natural wants of the former subscribers and friends of both and of the entire denomination.

Papers that are long-lived must inevitably pass through many transitions in management, policy and characteristics. Even the Observer itself has not been altogether impervious to the modifying influence of the passage of time. Changes quite as great as the substitution of one title for another have taken place, and the good people who took Sidney E. Morse's sheet in the early years of its existence would hardly recognize it today in its modern dress and equipment.

We rejoice in the noble history and service of the Observer, but for all that we can hardly be expected to discard a historic record covering forty years or more which we believe has been bequeathed to us, and which the mere dropping of a name does not invalidate. The Recorder and The Congregationalist together constitute a single and continuous line of newspaper development.

THE WILLIS FAMILY—A NOTABLE FAMILY OF EDITORS.

A survey of the history of religious journalism in the United States inevitably leads the investigator back to Nathaniel Willis, born in Boston, June 6, 1780, where he also died May 26, 1870. The investigation will reveal facts interesting to all journalists and as well to those who are not, if they are interested in tracing the influence of heredity and environment upon successive generations of men and women.

Willis's father, whose name he bore, for ten years published a Whig paper in Boston, called the Independent Chronicle. He then removed to Virginia, was a printer in Winchester; from thence he went to Martinsburg and founded the Potomac Guardian, and in 1796 removed to Chillicothe and published the Sciota Gazette, the pioneer paper in Ohio. The son was with his father in Virginia from 1787 to 1796. In Virginia he saw slavery rampant and doubtless formed impressions concerning it which made him its strenuous opponent as soon as he began to control a journal of his own. From the father in Ohio there probably came to the son in Boston reports concerning the natural wealth of Ohio, the opportunity for advancement in life there and the spiritual needs of the new settlers, which gave him the sympathy for the work of the American Education Society and the evangelization of the newer States for which he was continually pleading in the Recorder after it was born.

Returning to Boston when his father removed to Chillicothe, the son commenced an apprenticeship as printer in the office of the Chronicle, in the same room on Court Street in which his father and Benjamin Franklin had worked.

In 1803, indorsed by Benjamin Austin, at that time a popular political writer on the Chronicle, Willis Junior went to Portland, Me., to become the proprietor of the Eastern Argus, an opponent of the Federal party. Libel suits and other vicissitudes made life somewhat of a burden, but for six years he continued to be responsible for the Argus. The turning point in his life was the acceptance of an invitation in 1807 to go and hear Rev. Edward Payson preach a Thanksgiving sermon. Hitherto his Sabbaths had been spent in roaming about the fields or reading the newspapers. He expected a political sermon, i. e., a Federal partisan address, but was agreeably disappointed, so much so that the next Sabbath he sat again at Payson's feet, was much interested and became a constant hearer. A revival soon followed, the Holy Spirit wrought in him and before long he became a Christian. With that change came a disgust for the methods and duties of editing a partisan newspaper, which culminated in his sale of the Argus and an attempt to earn a living as the keeper of a grocery. But this was not to be his life work. His heart was set upon establishing a religious newspaper in Portland, and Mr. Payson and the leading Christian laymen in that city and the vicinity were consulted. They all admitted that it would be a blessing, but the times were hard and financial support did not appear.

In 1812 Willis removed to Boston, bought a new press and types and opened an office at 76 State Street, now the corner of Franklin Alley and Court Street. He printed editions of a pamphlet entitled American Unitarians. He brought out the first edition of Dr. Griffin's Park Street Lectures and other works of a pious and always edifying character. A member of the present editorial staff of The Congregationalist has a Life of General Moreau printed by Willis, Moreau at that time being a popular character in the United States, where he rested for a time after his dispute with Napoleon and prior to his alliance with the czar.

Willis's heart and mind were bent, however, on establishing a religious newspaper. Times were hard, party feeling was running high, spiritual life in the churches was low and those with whom he consulted gave him but little encouragement. Deacon Jeremiah Evarts promised aid and then withdrew his support. Dr. Griffin, pastor of Park Street, Willis says, "said he never heard of such a thing as religion in a newspaper; it would do in a magazine." But in 1814 Rev. Dr. Jedediah Morse of Charlestown gave Willis more encouragement than he had found elsewhere. His son, Sidney E. Morse—a brother of S. F. B. Morse, the famous inventor—who was then studying law but had won some notice as a writer for the Centinel, was selected as one fitted to write for and assist in producing the projected paper. In 1815 Morse wrote the prospectus of the Recorder, which Willis printed and circulated. Nearly 500 subscribers were secured, and on Jan. 3, 1816, No. 1 of the Recorder was issued, a facsimile of a portion of the first page of which appears on our cover page, and other portions on this and the following pages.

Mr. Willis, in an autobiographical statement which he prepared in 1858, and from which we have quoted and shall quote freely, referred to himself as one "without the advantages of talent or education or money," who, nevertheless, had had a long and successful experience in establishing newspapers. He did not claim to be a brilliant editor, but he did assert until his dying day his right to the title of founder of the Recorder, hence the validity of his claim to have established the first religious newspaper in this country. The dispute as to who incurred the financial responsibility for the first numbers of the Recorder is one that has been pending for many years. There is no question, however, but that Mr. Willis first suggested the scheme of having such a newspaper in Boston, or that he stood sponsor as its publisher in No. 1, or that from April 1, 1817, when Mr. Morse withdrew, to 1844, he was the owner either in whole or in part, while from the first he was the controlling personality on the Recorder. He alone showed any willingness to incur financial risk, he alone had faith in the constituency which awaited him in New England and throughout the country. Others came to his assistance and strengthened the editorial page, men like Rev. Richard S. Storrs—father of Rev. Dr. R. S. Storrs of Brooklyn—Gerard Hallock and Rev. Asa Rand, but as Willis puts it in his most interesting autobiography, "There was a class of men in olden times who laid heavy burdens on men's shoulders grievous to be borne and would not touch them with one

THE RECORDER.

No. 1. WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 3, 1816. VOL. I.

PROSPECTUS
THE RECORDER.

THE projectors of every new publication ought to be well satisfied, before they solicit the patronage of the public, that their intended work will promote the best interests of mankind. The Press is too mighty an engine to be set in motion rashly. Every writer, and especially every Editor of a Periodical Work should feel a high responsibility, and should have important ends constantly in view. Neither a desire of private emolument, nor the wish to secure the triumph of a party, will justify any man in throwing upon the world his own writings, or the writings of others. That the Press has, [illegible] been under the control of weak and incompetent hands, both in our own country and abroad, is sincerely lamented by many of our best and wisest men. There has of late been an importunate demand for a Paper, which shall leave the beaten track, and shall direct the mind of the reader to subjects of more permanent importance, than those which occupy too many of the columns of our public journals.

During the last quarter of a century the quick succession of wonders, the splendor of military enterprise, and the rapidity of conquest, displayed in the effort to reduce the world under one gigantic despotism, have excited the deep interest and astonishment of mankind. The grandeur of these events, and their intimate connexion with the welfare of the whole human race, gave to politics an unusual and universal importance. To gratify the public curiosity, Newspapers have been multiplied without number, and their columns have been filled with the details of battles and revolutions. But the scheme of military ambition has failed. The world is safe. Wars have ceased. The enterprise of the age is seeking other objects. The resources of the age are beginning to flow in other channels. Plans of the most extended benevolence are already in operation, the object of which is to diffuse Christianity and civilization throughout the world. To that political subjects shall be introduced, a temperate and conciliatory style will be adopted. All measures, which promise a salutary influence upon our country, will be cordially approved, from whatever party or individual they may have originated. If it should at any time be necessary to disapprove of public measures, that respect for Government, which lies at the very foundation of civil society, will be cautiously preserved; and, in such cases, a tone of regret and sorrow will best comport with the feelings of the Christian patriot.

If the Conductors were to name any work, which, in their opinion, generally takes a wise, dignified, and truly Christian course, in regard to political questions, that work would be the Christian Observer. It will be their constant aim, however politics are introduced, to exhibit the most candid political pieces in that highly valued publication.

Miscellaneous.—Particular pains will be taken to preserve all the important American State Papers, especially those which relate to the General Government, in their proper order and in an authentic and correct form.

All foreign State Papers, which bear any important relation to this country, will also be inserted.

It is intended that the Paper shall contain Geographical and Statistical Notices of foreign countries and more particularly of our own country. Whenever foreign countries are brought into view, a constant regard will be had to counteract and destroy local and national prejudices of every kind; and to cherish a more liberal way of thinking and speaking concerning the inhabitants of foreign countries than has hitherto been common—and unless the Conductors of the Paper are deceived, the general tenor and spirit of the work will impress the minds of their readers with the great truth, that all men are brethren.

Such articles of Literary and Philosophical Intelligence, as promise to be generally interesting, will be selected for insertion.

Those New Publications, which have a particular bearing on the improvement and happiness of mankind, will be briefly described, and extensive lists of New Works will be occasionally published.

and resources of the countries, in which this object is just exciting to systematic exertion; and how eagerly it is every where made the rallying point for all sects, and all ranks; that it is supported by the mites of peasants, by the donations and active patronage of Emperors, by the wisdom of the prudent, by the talents of the great, and by the prayers of the good: when we consider the great and growing revenue which, to support this object, is every year collected; in connection with the fact, that there is not a spot upon earth where the organization of the system is yet complete; we are persuaded, that the coolest calculator will be the first to pronounce, that the exertions for this object are working a great Moral Revolution, which will embrace every nation; and all the results of which will be happy.

It is with the view of aiding in the accomplishment of this vast design, that the Recorder is established. Every part of its plan has a bearing upon this object.

Experience has proved that the most effectual method of promoting this design is, by circulating, as widely as possible, the reports of the various societies, with which it is connected. The Recorder will, therefore, publish these reports; and, generally, it will contain such notices of the important movements in the religious world, as will give to its readers, a history of the efforts of Christian benevolence. Such communications, and remarks, as will excite to exertion in this cause, will also be inserted.

The Recorder will be a Newspaper, complete in all the departments of a Newspaper. This part of the plan was adopted with a view to give the widest possible circulation to the Religious Intelligence. It was hoped, that by uniting itself with the interesting and popular information of the Newspaper, the Religious Intelligence might be extensively introduced into families and places where, otherwise, it would have remained unknown.

The Recorder admits Advertisements, because they are necessary to the support of the paper. But, the wide range embraced by the other departments of the paper, is a security that the Advertisements will not unreasonably encroach upon more interesting matter. They will also be of a character so select, that, to the great mass of our subscribers, they will be rather gratifying than otherwise.

With respect to the Spirit with which the Recorder will be conducted; the union of men of all parties, political and religious, in the great plan,

Religious Department.

SINCE ITS FIRST PROMULGATION.

BY THE REV. HUGH PEARSON, M. A.
Of St. John's College, Oxford.

Being part of a Work to which was adjudged, by that University, Dr. Buchanan's Prize of 500 pounds.

THE state of the world at the introduction of Christianity was such as at once evinced its necessity, and presented the most favorable opportunity for its extensive propagation.

The various nations, of which the Roman Empire was composed, were sunk in the grossest superstition, and debased by the prevalence of the most pernicious vices. The utmost of what mere human wisdom could do towards the moral improvement of the world had been fairly tried during the long course of four thousand years; and the result of that protracted trial had served to prove, that the world by its own wisdom knew not God, and was unable to discover and enforce the principles of true religion and virtue. The Jews, the only people to whom a Divine Communication had been made, were in a state of degeneracy and corruption: it was time therefore that the Supreme Governor of the universe, who for wise though mysterious reasons had so long permitted this ignorance, should at length introduce some clearer and more effectual manifestation of his will, to correct the errors of mankind, and to rescue them from the corruption and misery in which they were involved.

For the successful promulgation of such a Divine Revelation, the political situation of the greater part of the world afforded peculiar advantages. Nations differing widely from each other, both as to their language and their manners, were comprehended within the vast limits of the Roman Empire, and united together in social intercourse. An easy communication was thus opened to the remotest countries; and the most ignorant and barbarous people had gradually felt the civilizing influ-this great Apostle must accordingly be attributed much of the unparalleled success of the Gospel at its first publication.

About this time, the Churches throughout Judea, Galilee, and Samaria enjoyed an interval of repose from the persecutions of the Jews, and were in consequence considerably strengthened and enlarged. At this favorable conjuncture, St. Peter, leaving Jerusalem, where, with the rest of the Apostles, he had hitherto remained, travelled through all quarters of Palestine, confirming the Disciples, and particularly visited Lydda, Saron, and Joppa, the inhabitants of which places almost universally received the Gospel. (Acts ix. 35.)

Hitherto Christianity had been preached to the Jews alone; but the time was now arrived for the full discovery of the Divine Purpose to extend the knowledge of it to the Gentiles. This important event took place at Cæsarea, the residence of the Roman Governor, about seven years after the ascension of our Lord. During the transactions which have been just related, some further circumstances took place respecting the extension of Christianity: When the Disciples, who were driven from Jerusalem on the death of St. Stephen, had passed through Judea and Samaria, they travelled as far as Phœnice, Cyprus and Antioch, as yet confining their labors to the Jews. At length, however, some of them, on their arrival at Antioch, addressed themselves to the Greek* inhabitants of that city, and a great number of them were in consequence converted to the faith. Intelligence of this event being communicated to the Church at Jerusalem, the Apostles immediately sent Barnabas to confirm the work of their conversion; who, finding so promising a field for Apostolical labors, went to Tarsus, and brought back with him the converted Saul. At Antioch they continued a year, forming and establishing the first Christian Church among the Heathen; and in this city the Disciples were first denominated Christians.

The subsequent history in the Acts of the Apostles is almost exclusively confined to the travels of St. Paul and his fellow-laborers, which are so universally known, that it would be superfluous to enter into any minute detail of them. It may be sufficient to observe in the words of the of their fingers." He had a large and growing family to support and educate, he had to be his own compositor, pressman and clerk. Holding high ideals of comity and the duty of preserving peace in the profession, he nevertheless early in his career had to meet the competition of rival newspapers* and confute critics who either found fault with the journal as published or had no sympathy with such a publication.

The reference just made to Mr. Willis's large and growing family may serve, perhaps, as a point of departure for the expansion of the hint made earlier in this article respecting the interest which all who are concerned about heredity and environment should have in the Willis family. Of the nine children born to Nathaniel Willis and Hannah Parker, three—N. P. Willis, Sarah Payson Willis and Richard Storrs Willis—became well-known authors. Two—N. P. Willis and Richard Storrs Willis—followed their grandfather's and father's examples and ascended the editorial tripod, while in President Horace Bumstead of Atlanta University, to whose courtesy and interest we are under great obligations for much that contributes to the value of this issue, a grandson of Nathaniel Willis and son of his eldest child and daughter is found.

N. P. Willis, while a student at Yale, contributed religious poems to the Recorder over the signature "Roy." His subsequent career as editor of the American Monthly Magazine and then as co-editor with George P. Morris of the New York Mirror and Home Journal, his elegant prose and truly devotional poetry, and his brilliant success as a pioneer in the literature of travel, are all adequately recorded in the annals of the development of literature in this country.

Sarah Payson Willis, by her contributions to Boston periodicals, as early as 1851 attracted the attention of editors and publishers. After her marriage to James Parton, then an assistant of her brother on The Home Journal, her life was mainly spent in New York and vicinity, and from there, chiefly through the New York Ledger, she sent forth the many hundred articles and ten or more volumes which made the name of "Fanny Fern" a household word throughout the United States and England. As a novelist, satirist and writer of short stories she had more popularity than any American woman of her day.

Richard Storrs Willis, who still lives, like his father and his brother, N. P., has published three papers, the Musical Times, the Musical World and a journal of belles-lettres entitled Once a Month.

The portrait which we print on our cover page indicates accurately the type of man that Mr. Willis was. He served long as a deacon in Park Street Church and was familiarly known as "deacon." At the time of his death, at the ripe age of ninety, Dr. Dexter referred to him as one "who was a good specimen of the kind of Christians which they had in Boston in the days when Dr. Lyman Beecher and Dr. Griffin were in their glory" and as one "who had left behind him the savor of a good name and a good example," and Prof. Calvin E. Stowe (the husband of Harriet Beecher), who, when a boy, helped make in a South Natick mill the paper on which No. 1 of the Recorder was printed and later helped edit that paper in 1830, said, shortly after Mr. Willis's death, "A more industrious, hard-working, conscientious man I never knew. . . . Though always enterprising and energetic he was of a rather melancholy temperament and encountered many discouragements. Yet he never said die."

VOL. I. OF THE RECORDER.

With Mr. Morse selected to act as editor, and with nearly 500 subscribers pledged, No. 1 of the Recorder was issued Jan. 3, 1816. It reprinted the prospectus, which had already been scattered in pamphlet form, informing present and future subscribers of the aims of its backers. It gave several columns to the first of many installments of Rev. Hugh Pearson's Historical View of the Progress of the Gospel. The nature of the work of the Wiscasset Foreign Mission Society was set forth, but local or domestic religious news was lacking. True to the pledge in the prospectus "state papers" were printed but without comment, President Jefferson's message being printed verbatim and an abstract given of the Secretary of the Navy's plea for an increase of the navy. In No. 2 an elaborate report on the state of the laws of Massachusetts respecting violations of the Sabbath was printed and commented upon favorably. The national treasury report was given in abstract, also much of Madison's commercial treaty with England, while a schedule for a concert of prayer was published, and an ordination of a Congregational clergy-
